THE FRENCH ARE NOW BOMBARDING METZ

RUSSIANS ARE HOLDING GERMANS BACK NEAR WARSAW WHILE THEY ATTACK AUSTRIAN ARMY

Czar's Army is Constantly Resisting Day and Night Attacks Along the 75 Mile Front Before Warsaw

FIGHTING IN GALICIA

VIENNA, via Berlin and London, Dec. 26.—Extremely heavy attacks by the Russians throughout Christmas eve and during yesterday, are reported in an official statement issued here to-day. The Austrian front is declared to be unchanged in Galicia, however, and repeated attacks in Poland were repulsed. The statement asserts: "Fighting continued yesterday along the greater part of our front. Our forces beat back the attacks of the enemy near Magyag in the Latourcza region, with heavy losses. The enemy was driven back towards Lisco.

..Between Wielek and Biala the enemy attacked throughout the whole of Christmas eve and yesterday with great intensity. On the Donajac our front is unchanged.

DESPERATE ATTEMPTS TO PIERCE WARSAW DEFENCES FAIL

Germans Report Recapture of Mlawa, North of the Vistula and Say the Russian Attacks on the Pilica Were Repulsed

PETROGRAD, Dec. 26.— Resisting constant day and night attacks along the 75 mile front from the Vistula river southward to Opeczno, the Russian line between Warsaw continued to hold to-day. The banks of the Bzura and Rawka river, which the Germans have vainly tried to cross, are lined with bodies of the enemy. Massed attacks upon strong Russian positions have been repeatedly repulsed, but the efforts of the Germans continue, and a strong counter attack is being directed against their lines along the Pilica river. While the Germans are directing their main assaults between Sochaczew and Skierniewicze, the Russians are endeavouring to pierce the enemy's line along the Pilica. Only at one point along the Bzura river have the Germans been able to make a crossing. It is declared here and with reinforcements which have been hurried to that region, the enemy is expected to be hurled back.

British Tars Honour Bravery of German Men

BUENOS AYRES, Dec. 24.—British tars honoured the bravery of their German enemies by according full military honours to those of the mortally wounded of the Falklands naval engagement who died aboard the flagship Invincible. British officers at Montevideo told of how they had hoped to pay even greater respect to their enemy's courage, but were balked because of ungrounded fears of the German prisoners aboard the Invincible.

Every British sailor was ready to laud the victory or death spirit of the Germans in Admiral von Spee's squadron. As far as possible every effort was made to save those who went down with their ship singing and "manning the side." These survivors, many of them desperately wounded, were taken aboard the Invincible, Admiral Sturdee's flagship. Four Germans died the night after the battle.

According to the unanimous feeling of his officers and men, Admiral Sturdee sent an officer to the unwounded German prisoners, requesting that they attend on deck the funeral services of their comrades, and informing them that the British intended to pay full military honours to their brave enemies.

The Germans were distrustful and refused to come on deck. British officers, [illegible] Germany openly declared their belief the invitation was a trick to get them on deck, where they would be shot down.

"We were sorry," said a flag captain, "because we had the best intentions in the world."

Nevertheless, a firing squad shot a last volley over the watery graves of the Germans.

ATTACK ON METZ

French Artillery Reported to be Bombarding the Outer Defences of the German Fortress

AFTER HARD FIGHTING

PARIS, Dec. 26.—The outer defences of the fortress of Metz are reported today to be under fire from the French artillery. An offensive movement started early in December against Metz is declared to have resulted in the advance of the French lines beyond the village of Arnaville and through the forest of Le Prietre. Only by extremely bitter fighting have the French lines been advanced and the Germans cleared from the heights within a range of the outer forts. The French guns are now declared to have been brought up for bombardment.

DEATH FOLLOWS SCUFFLE IN A LOCAL HOTEL

Following an altercation in a corridor of the White House, on Christmas Eve, a young man named Wm. O'Brien, who resided on Park Street, and who, until a short time ago, was employed at the Quaker Oats Co., is dead, and [illegible] another boarder man, is under arrest, charged with being responsible for his death. Actual details of the unfortunate affair are hard to obtain. It appears that the two men who had had some trouble before, got into a scuffle and were separated. A few seconds afterwards O'Brien collapsed, and despite medical attention and the use of the pulmotor, died within a few minutes. The Examiner has so far been unable to ascertain how O'Brien was injured, or the exact manner he was struck, or if, indeed, any blows were delivered by Grossi. The latter disappeared after the affair and last night walked into the Police Station and gave himself up.

MAYOR OF MOSCOW PREDICTS VICTORY.

Thanks Tsar for Abolition of Vodka Monopoly and Expresses Loyalty.

MOSCOW, vit Petrograd (delayed in transmission).—Emperor Nicholas and the Empress of Russia, on arriving here, were given an enthusiastic reception at the railway station. The Emperor was welcomed by the civil and military authorities and the delegates of the Zemstvo.

M. Tcheluvkoff, the new Lord Mayor of Moscow, in his speech presenting bread and salt to the Emperor, pointed out the loyalty of the people to the Emperor and thanked him for the benefits arising from the abolition of the government monopoly on vodka, which was largely due, he declared, to the efforts of the Emperor.

The Lord Mayor spoke also of the brave fight the Russian army was making in the field, and predicted victory and resurrection of justice for all Slavs and for all peoples.

The Emperor responded briefly, thanking the Lord Mayor for the sentiments expressed.

Grocery Business Has Been Comparatively Good

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs will appear in Canadian Grocer this week:

Office of Publication, Toronto, Dec. 24, 1914.—Now that the greatest buying and selling season of the year is past, what have been the results? Has war created such a havoc that trade has been shot to pieces or have the people stood up under the strain and done their buying pretty much as usual? These questions cannot be easily answered. It is true that compared with other years the total Christmas business in groceries, if there were any means of determining same, would be found to be somewhat less, but on the other hand it is true that business has been much better than anticipated. This is evidenced by the large number of sorting up orders that reached the wholesalers after everybody were supposed to have their Christmas stocks in their stores. Wholesalers on the whole are well pleased with the trade. Retailers have bought carefully, being particular, not to overload on anything, so that after the rush have quieted down again and holidays are past, they are not going to have much dead stock on their hands. In short there was a good, healthy Christmas trade in foodstuffs.

At time of writing the most important feature of the market is a temporary scarcity in turkeys in Toronto. This has come at a very bad time with only two days to Christmas. In two or three of the wholesale provision establishments His Lordship, the Gobbler, was exceedingly scarce and in one case there wasn't a single bird to be had. The telephone wires were being kept hot hunting turkeys and it looked as if there would be a scarcity for the holiday. At the same time prices were up three and four cents wholesale above those existing a week or ten days past. One reason given for the scarcity was the condition of the roads after the big snow storm and the subsequent west wind. Another was that the farmers were not satisfied with the low prices being offered them for their turkeys and they were either holding them back or selling for export to the United States. It was expected, however, that on Thursday supplies would be improved. To bring about this condition of affairs the "turkey trot" would be very much in evidence.

Apart from the turkey situation, there are not many market features this week. Things have quited down. There has been no further change in sugar and although it is firmer on the New York market, the next move here would appear to be a decline. If the firm market in New York is maintained for any length of time, it is reasonable to predict that the drop here will be postponed.

Some shelled walnuts have arrived in Toronto during the week and at time of writing are being hurried out by express to country dealers anxious to obtain supplies for the final Christmas rush. However, supplies have not been nearly adequate to go round.

Princess Pats Leave For Front

This Regiment Will Soon Be Followed by the Canadian Scottish

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Princess Patricia's Regiment, a part of the Canadian contingent, has left for the front.

This regiment will shortly be followed by the Scottish regiments of Canada's army, which, after a course of training in Canada and on Salisbury Plain, are considered fit to take their places with the seasoned soldiers of Great Britain.

The rest of the 30,000 men who came across the Atlantic Ocean to fight the battles of the Empire are reaching the concluding stages of their training, and it is fully expected that the whole contingent will before many weeks be on the continent.

The place of honour of the first regiment to move across the English Channel fell to Princess Patricia's Regiment, as it is made up largely of men who have seen previous service, and who needed but a few weeks to renew their acquaintance with the game that they are expected to play in the fighting lines.

A FAMILY GATHERING.

NEGOTIATING WITH GERMANS?

Peace Overtures Reported Already Under Way—Slavonic Interests Safe

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26—The Washington Post gives great prominence to a news despatch stating that overtures for peace between Russia and Germany are already well under way.

The statement attracts great attention in Washington, simply because it is published in The Post, which is owned and edited by John R. McLean, known to have very close personal relations with eminent diplomats.

The Post says negotiations are being conducted through "one of the most powerful agencies in the world," a medium friendly to both Germany and Russia, and that they look for an adjustment of all differences between Russia and Germany, notwithstanding the joint agreement signed early in the war by Russia, France and Britain not to discuss terms of peace separately. The Post says in part:

"The reception given the preliminary negotiations indicates that there may suddenly emerge from Europe a new alignment shattering all predictions as to the outcome of the present war, and stamping on the maps of Europe, Asia and Africa new boundaries unthought of when the war began.

"With Servia's showing of ability to protect her own integrity, Russia's real interest in the war has practically ceased. To fight further means chiefly to aid the world diplomacy and policies of Great Britain, against which Russia has had an historic aversion."

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

Slowly the smothering blackness of the barriers began to lighten. Beyond the eastern crests showed the pale mistiness of silver which was precursor to the moon. Stars that gleamed between the peaks like diamond splinters grew less intensely clear. Then the flat and pitchy curtain of night took faint form. The edge of the moon peeped stealthily over the ridge and after that the moon itself began to soar and work magic changes. The black void cut in front became a silvery little valley through which the soft mirroring ribbon of Tribulation caught and turned top-down the lacelike fringe of the timber. Great shapeless masses modelled themselves into clear-cut monuments of cobalt. Giant plumes of pines and patterns of oak swam into sight and the hollows were dream-wrapped pools of softened moon-mist. Then as though in answer to the miracle that had transformed the hopeless death of the night into the tender nocturne of greys and silvers and dream-blues, there boomed from the edges of the creek the chorus of the full-throated frogs and from behind in wooded slopes floated that plaintive note which, once known, leaves the ache of an unfulfilled desire over all countries where it does not sound—the call of the whip-poor-will.

Under these influences Juanita Holland was feeling unspeakably soothed. The sick squalor and lawlessness of the hills seemed, for the moment, less important than their serene beauty. After all where Nature smiled like this, where from heavens and forests came such a caress and benediction as moon-mist and starlight were pouring over her, things could not be irretrievably bad.

There were blossom girls like little Dawn to be won away from weed-wildness and taught. There were young women like the eagle-eyed stranger who raised their voices to declare as she had heard him declare, "I am to have peace hyarabouts." Somehow she felt that what that voice announced, that man would do.

At last she was conscious of a presence besides her own, as of some one standing silently at her back.

Rather nervously she turned her head and there with one foot on the lower step of the stile stood the young stranger himself. Once more their eyes met and with a little start she dropped her own. She was not one who ordinarily failed to sustain any glance, however direct, and a sense of challenge usually brought to her chin that upward tilt and to her pupils that faint flash under which the other eyes fell away. Yet somehow now, though she felt a half-mocking challenge and a premonition of personal duel in his gaze, it was she who surrendered.

She saw his horse, hitched outside, raise its head and whinny as though in welcome to its master, and then she looked back, and the mountaineer's steady appraising gaze was still fixed on her face, seeming to penetrate her thoughts.

"I kinder hate to bother ye, ma'am," said the even voice, "but I can't hardly get acrost thet stile whilst ye're settin' on it."

There was no note of badinage or levity in his voice, and his clear-drawn features under the moonlight were entirely serious.

Juanita rose. "I beg your pardon," she said hastily as she went down the stile on the far side.

"Thet's all right, m'am," replied the man easily, still with a serious dignity as he, too, crossed to the road.

While he was untying the knot in his bridle rein the girl stood watching him. In the easy indolence of his movements was the rippling quality that suggested the leopard's strength. Inside, when she had seen him standing by the hearth she had been impressed, but his eyes had so fascinated her that the result of her scrutiny had been insufficient and unsatisfactory. Now by the moonlight and the breeze she felt cooler, steadier, more analytical.

Even the raw-looking messenger had in an inferior way struck her with a not of the individual, and she had satisfied herself with the reflection that both these men differed from all the men of her old world because her acquaintances had gone under the levelling and softening influences of the conventional. They were smoother and more alike, while these more primitive men were types, each standing forth with something of the sternness of their native crags.

The very quality that gave this young stranger picturesqueness and stamped him as vital and dynamic in his manhood, sprang from that wild roughness which he shared with his eagles and Dawn shared with her weedlike flowers. And yet it was somehow as though the man, whose voice was so calm, whose movements so quiet, whose gaze so un-arrogant, were crying out in a clarion challenge with every breath, "I am a man!"

It was as unnecessary for him to breathe a syllable or strike an attitude to drive that declaration home as it would be for a dreadnought to fire a broadside in announcement of the purpose for which it had been launched.

The stranger's square-blocked face was smooth-shaven and his clothes, in their careless roughness, seemed less garments than an emphasis for the power and swiftness of the muscles beneath them. She thought of themless as clothes than as plumage—an eagle's plumage.

Instead of brogans, tan boots were laced half way to the knee and above them the trousers bulged squarely like the feathers that break off close above an eagle's talons. His throat and hands were of the clear smoothness and clean hardness of bronze.

Yet brow and lips and nostrils seemed rather chiselled than moulded, with little edges and angles left, so that the contour suggested granite while the texture seemed metal.

Dominating all the rest, the eyes, cool, but sentient with latent passion and power, lighted from within rather than from without, were always the first and last things that one saw.

Suddenly she wondered if in him she might not find an ally. She felt very lonely. To have counsel with some one in these hills less stupidly phlegmatic than Good Anse Talbott would bring comfort and reassurance to her heart. She must cope with the powerful chicane and resourcefulness of Bad Anse Havey, him of the untamed ferocity and cold cruelty and subtle intelligence. If some native son could share even a little of her view-point she would find in him a tower of strength.

She would have liked to tell him how her loneliness called out for comprehension and friendship, yet she did not know how to start. Then while she stood there still hesitant, still very beautiful and slim and wraith-like under the moon, he spoke in his reassuring steadiness of voice.

Perhaps he had yielded to the unspoken appeal of the deep rangeful eyes that were always blu, yet never twice the same blue, and the sweetly sensitive lips so tantalizingly charm-because they were fashioned for smiles and were now drooping instead. Perhaps the wild masculine in him responded to the pliant curves that spoke of strength and stamina in a figure so lithely slender.

"I reckon," he said, "you find it right diff'rent from down below, don't you?"

She nodded. "But it's very beautiful," she added as she swept her hand about in a gesture of admiration.

It was he who nodded at that, very gravely, and almost reverently, though at the next moment his laugh was short and almost ironical.

"I reckon God never fashioned anything better—nor worse," he told her. "When you've breathed it an' seen it an' lived it, no other place is fit to dwell in, an' yet sometimes I 'low that God didn't mean it to be the habitation of men an' women. It's cut out for eagles an' hawks an' wild things. It belongs to the winds an' storms. It puts fire into veins meant for blood, an' the only crop it raises much is h—l."

"You—you've been out in the other world—down below?" she questioned.

"Yes, but I couldn't stay down there. I couldn't breathe hardly. I sultered an' sickened — an' I came back."

She turned to him impulsively.

"I don't know who you are," she began hurriedly, "but I know that you brought this man home when he was not in a condition to come alone. I know that you sent a man ahead of you to keep peace at the dance. I know you have a heart, and it means something—means a great deal—to feel that some one in these hills feels about it as I feel."

She broke off abruptly, realizing that she was allowing too much appeal to creep into her voice; that she had come to fight, not to sue for favour. He was standing, making no offer to interrupt or answer until he was quite sure she was through, but his attitude was that of dignified, almost deferential attention.

"I—I thought maybe you would help me," she finished a little falteringly. "Would you mind telling me your name?"

He had unhitched his horse and stood with the reins hanging from one hand.

"It's Havey," he said slowly, "but hereabouts I've got another name that's better known." He paused, then added with a hardened timbre of voice as though bent on making defiant what would otherwise sound like confession "It's Bad Anse."

The girl recoiled as though under a physical shock. It seemed to her that every way she turned she was to meet staggering disappointments. She had spoken almost pleadingly to the man with whom she could make no terms; the man whose arrogant power and lawless influence she must break and paralyse before her own regime could find standing room in these hills.

Yet she looked at him standing there, and stiffened resolutely, she could say nothing except "Oh!"

Into the monosyllable crept many things: Repulsion, defiance and chagrin for her mistake, and in recognition of them all the bronzed features of theman hardened a little and into the cool eyes snapped a sparkle of the sleeping fires she had divined.

"I made my suggestion to the wrong man," she said steadily. "I misunderstood you. I thought you said you wanted peace."

He swung himself to the saddle, then as he gathered up his reins he turned and in his utterance was immovable steadiness and glacial coldness, together with a ring of contempt and restrained anger.

"I did say that and by Almighty God, I meant just what I said. I do want peace in these mountains—but I ain't never found no way yet ter get peace without fightin' for it."

She saw him ride away into the moonlight, with his shoulders very straight and the battered felt hat very high, and he looked neither to right nor left as he went, until the mists had swallowed him.

AN IRISH PLAYWRIGHT AND THE WAR

The suppression of the Gaelic Society of Trinity College, Dublin, for insisting on hearing a "disloyal speaker," must not be taken to indicate that many Irishmen of the Dublin renaissance are anti-English in the present crisis. Mr. Conal O'Riordan who is well known as a novelist and as an Abbey Theatre playwright under the name Norreys Connell, has just declined to allowed his play "An Imaginary Conversation," to be revived at the Abbey Theatre. In a letter to the theare explaining his reasons, he says: "I think that it would be ungracious at a time when England is calling upon Ireland to help her to fight with France against the German tyranny to recall to the minds of Irishmen the time when England called upon Germany to help her fight against French and Irish liberty. We need not forget the past but I feel this is not the moment to harp upon it. I may add, to remove all doubt of my attitude in the matter that I would be only too proud and happy to fight in England's present quarrel if I were privileged to do so."

MEN OF SUBSTANCE SERVING THE KING

Sons of Wealthy Canadian Families Enlisted as Privates—Professional Men in Ranks

As with Great Britain, so with Canada, the call to arms met with a keen response from the ranks of the millionaires and the "well-to-do." In Britain the casualty lists prove the intrepidity of British officers as a class.

Illustrative of the spirit which impelled Canada's rich or "well off" citizens to place their personal services at the disposal of the Empire is an authenticated story from Eastern Ontario. A young lieutenant of 20 years of age, a millionaire in his own right, was among the first to enlist. His family opposed the idea vigorously, but to no avail. "If I, a trained man, refuse to go to war, what sort of example would I offer the rest of Canadians?" he demanded. On the day when the troops embarked for Valcartier his brother went to the railway station and offered to equip an entire regiment at his own expense if the young lieutenant would stay behind. "That sounds good," replied the officer, "but it has nothing to do with duty."

In such commercial centres as Toronto and Montreal the evidences of patriotism on the part of scions of well known families stand out plainly. No fewer than three sons of Mr. Clarence J. McCuaig, a Montreal financier of wide reputation, are in the same regiment on active service. Sons of the two partners of Hanson Brothers, bankers, are also serving. Major Norsworthy, Captain J. K. L. Ross, and a score of other influential names could be listed, showing the extent of participation by leaders of the financial community. Instances are not uncommon where Montreal officers are assigned to commands where a brother or a nephew is a private in the ranks.

Toronto shows and imposing list of a similar character. Sons of judges are acting as privates, and young men brought up with every luxury are swallowing the hardtack of the military camp and rolling in a blanket for their bed. A few names selected from a long list express the point better than description: Victor Vandersmissen, Lawton Ridout, T. J. Delamere, son of Col. Delamere; Bertram Nevitt, son of Dr. Nevitt; Roy Nordheimer, Dr. John Colquhoun, Prof. A. W. M. Ellis, Harold Shoppard, Roger and Eric Pepler, sons of S. E. P. Pepler of Barrie; Hugh Ince, two sons of Sir John Gibson, two sons of Lockhart Gordon, Douglas Mason, and these are only typical of many others.

Such men as Colonel Mercer, commanding the Queen's Own; Colonel Turner, of Quebec; Colonel Currie of the Highlanders; Colonel J. E. Cohoe, of Welland; Colonel A. C. Macdonald, of Winnipeg, are well known as successful professional and business men.

THE IMPORTANT PIG

Royal Artillery Crews Disregarded Shells to Argue Ownership

"Very little scares us nowadays," wrote an artilleryman from the Woevre. "The Germans are in the woods, and are as reluctant as carrion crows to leave. Last night we heard heavy footsteps, an odd noise like 'patapoum, patapoum.' Was it a batch of German deserters coming to us, or outposts returning with some warning? I peered into the darkness, and within a few feet of my head was—a fat pig. He was more frightened than I, and decamped. We followed, and in five minutes Mr. Cochon was tied to the wheel of an ammunition cart. He grunted all night long.

"Next morning men from the neighboring battery heard of our interesting capture, and claimed it as theirs. We squabbled, and everybody asserted his right to the prisoner. Suddenly shrapnel began to fall in the midst of the debate. Did Prussian shells stop the row over that pig? No, sir! For ten more minutes the two batteries argued, while bullets flew and the pig squealed. Then along came the Captain. 'In the name of heaven!' he exclaimed, 'get back to your 75's. Cut the pig in two!' A military Solomon had solved the difficulty, and both battalions had pork for supper that night."

AUSTRIA HAD CHANCE OF TORPEDO MONOPOLY

Failed to Grasp the Importance of New Weapon, However, and Now all Nations Have Them

Destructive as the torpedo has proved in this war, it might have been still more deadly as far as the allies are concerned if Austria had taken advantage of the opportunity offered her in 1870, and had become the sole owner of the modern torpedo. The inventor of the locomotive torpedo was Captain Luppis, an Austrian, and naturally it was to his Government that he first turned. While the Luppis embraced most of the features of the modern torpedo, it had one defect in the opinion of the Austrian critics. It did not steer itself, but was guided to its mark by means of a couple of lines which were held in the boat. This defect Luppis found himself unable to correct, but he took his invention to Richard Whitehead, who was then the manager of an engine factory in Fiume, and it was not long before Whitehead had produced the locomotive torpedo that steers itself independently of any base. Luppis then returned to his Government but still it did not seize the opportunity. Instead it invited representatives of several other European Governments to witness a demonstration of the new torpedo.

Great Britain sent an expert, and the result was that Britain acquired the rights to manufacture the Whitehead torpedo in England, paying $60,000 to the inventor. Other Governments secured national rights, and so it was that instead of the torpedo being a secret monopoly of one Government it is possessed by them all.

Like a Big Cigar

A torpedo is a cigar-shaped metal cylinder, from 14 to 19 feet long, and weighing half a ton. It is divided into six compartments. At the nose of the torpedo is the "war head" filled with gun-cotton or some other powerful explosive, and this is discharged when it strikes the side of a ship.

Behind the war head is the air chamber containing the motive power for the engines of the instrument. This chamber contains air at a pressure of 2,250 pounds to the square inch. Behind the air chamber comes what is still called the "secret," since at first its workings were kept secret, and were only divulged when it was found that every expert knew about them. The secret chamber is really the brains of the torpedo. The "secret" operates the balance of the torpedo, and keeps it at the depth under water at which it is adjusted to run. This is accomplished by a hydro-static valve, consisting primarily of a movable disc fitting into the orifice of the chamber and made watertight by a rubber joint.

Inside this disc is attached to a spiral spring, which is adjusted to equal the water pressure at various depths. At a set depth the valve remains at equilibrium. If below the depth the valve is forced in, and if above out. In addition to the valve, and acting in conjunction with it, is a pendulum weight, which, connected with a small air engine known as a "servo-motor," exerts with the inclination of the torpedo a lifting force of 100 pounds upon the rudders to every half-ounce of push or pull on the motor from the hydro-static valve, giving an up or down helm to the rudders whenever necessary.

Gyroscope is Used

Beneath the "secret" lies the engine-room, equipped with three cylinder 56-pound compressed air engines, which drive a single shaft to the after propeller. A bevel gear from the after shaft works a shaft to a forward propeller, geared in the opposite direction to the rear screw, thus keeping an accurate balance.

Still further behind is the buoyancy chamber, which contains a gyroscope, which exercises a directive force upon the torpedo. The mechanism of the gyroscope is set in the desired direction, and as soon as the torpedo is launched it will act on the rudder and swing it around in the desired direction. The buoyancy chamber also makes the torpedo float on the surface after it has reached its mark, or if for some reason it fails to explode. This, of course, is useful only when practising, for which purpose the war heads are removed, and a collapsible head filled with calcium phosphide used. Instead of exploding when it strikes its mark the action of the water causes the chemical to burst into flames after it rises to the surface, thus marking its position and making its recovery certain. This is a necessary provision, for some torpedoes cost $5,000 apiece. They have a speed of 30 miles an hour, and it is said that some of them are capable of doing execution from a base of two miles away from the object aimed at.

SIKH'S DISC OF DEATH

Sikhs fighting in the European war can certainly claim to possess a unique form of weapon. This is a hand-thrown missile, composed of metal similar in shape to the discus, familiar in Roman history. Its edge is sharpened like a razor, and the weapon, when thrown with a peculiar circular motion, has extraordinary penetrating power. It cuts like a knife through paper when it strikes any object in its path.

At a distance of a hundred yards the disc is capable of cutting its way through a piece of hard wood two inches thick. It is the peculiar twist given to the weapon when it is thrown which causes the cutting edge to bury itself so remorselessly in anything that it meets. It is doubtful whether any but the Sikhs could effectively use this unique weapon. They made deadly use of the discs of death on the battle of Dinapore.

WORLD'S GREATEST KIDNEY REMEDY

"Fruit-a-tives" Have Proved Their Value In Thousands of Cases

WONDERFUL RECORD OF A WONDERFUL CURE

Only Remedy That Acts On All Three Of The Organs Responsible For The Formation Of Uric Acid In The Blood.

Many people do not realize that the Skin is one of the three great eliminators of waste matter from the body. As a matter of fact, the Skin rids the system of more Urea (or waste matter) than the Kidneys. When there is Kidney Trouble, Pain In The Back and Acrid Urine, it may not be the fault of the kidneys at all, but be due to faulty Skin Action, or Constipation of the bowels.

"Fruit-a-tives" cures weak, sore, aching Kidneys, not only because it strengthens these organs but also because "Fruit-a-tives" opens the bowels, sweetens the stomach and stimulates the action of the skin.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

WILLIAMS' ARM BROKEN.

Colonel Was Hit By Shrapnel While In the Trenches.

SALISBURY PLAIN, Dec. 24.—Lt.-Col. Victor Williams of Ottawa is back from the front, where he spent three weeks with the British and French armies, making a complete tour of the battle line. He is now lecturing to the Canadian officers by request of Gen. French. He was in the trenches three days, shot three Germans, and himself sustained a broken arm from a shrapnel splinter.

The Canadians are going across to France late in January.

Col. R. E. W. Turner, V.C., D.S.O., the officer commanding the Highland Brigade, was seriously injured in an automobile accident near Salisbury yesterday His collarbone and some ribs were fractured. Colonels Jack Currie of Toronto and Burland of Montreal were riding with him. Currie was uninjured, but Burland was slightly hurt. The car turned turtle going forty miles an hour. The officers were returning to camp after taking a training course on the Isle of Wight.

Col. Mercer of Toronto, commanding the Ontario brigade, received the following from Admiral Jellicoe: "The officers and men of the grand British fleet wish our gallant comrades of the Canadian contingent every success. We know the magnificent spirit which brought them to England will lead them to victory."

Kitchener Wanted to Know.

With "carpet-knights" Lord Kitchener, naturally, has little patience. He likes a soldier to be one of the good old sort, sleeping on an iron bed and with a severe taste in "domestic accoutrements." The Kaiser once remarked, "The Hohenzollerns don't wear dressing-gowns!" And Lord Kitchener, viewing with displeasure a young lieutenant of his who had purchased for himself a very elaborate gold-fitted suit-case, asked of him, "What is your taste in hairpins?"

MEAT INJURIOUS TO THE KIDNEYS

Take a Tablespoonful of Salts if Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog, and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headache nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach, or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking it. Drink occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

THE BRITISH FLAG

Strictly Speaking the "Union Jack" Used Only at Sea

The name, "Union Jack," is more often than not wrongly applied, says London Tit-Bits. That name really belongs to a miniature union flag, displayed from a staff at the end of the bowsprit on His Majesty's ships, and known for many years past as a jack; whence the name of "Union Jack," which has come to be wrongly applied to the larger as well as the smaller Union Flag, the correct name when displayed otherwise than on His Majesty's ships. The jack, properly so called, is never flown on shore.

Until the fifteenth century, England, Scotland, and Ireland had separate flags. The English flag consisted of the Red Cross of St. George on a white ground, that of Scotland the white diagonal cross of St. Andrew on a blue ground, and that of Ireland the red diagonal cross of St. Patrick, also on a white ground, and it is from a combination of these three flags that we get the "Union Jack."

It was James I. who first began the formation of the Union Jack, by combining the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew. He laid the cross of St. George on the cross of St. Andrew, and thus formed the Union Jack, which was the national flag for 200 years.

It was after the Union of 1801 that the cross of St. Patrick was added, though in this case the diagonal red stripes were narrowed down in order that they should not obliterate the white stripes of St. Andrew's cross. It will be noticed that the latter shows on either side of the cross of St. Patrick, while the narrow white margin round the inside of the cross of St. George was added to separate the red of the cross from the blue field of the flag. It will be noticed, too, on looking at the Union Jack that the Scottish and Irish crosses are so arranged that in the first and third divisions, counting from left to right, the white of Scotland has precedence, while in the second and fourth the red of Ireland is uppermost.

The easiest rule to remember in displaying a Union Jack is that the broad diagonal white stripe, the St. Andrew's cross, should be uppermost in the first and third quarters, that is, nearest the staff, and the red diagonal St. Patrick's cross uppermost in the second and fourth quarters.

HUGE BRITISH HOWITZER

Fires Bigger Shell Than the German "Black Marias"

Tommy Atkins nicknamed "Mother" the huge new British howitzer designed to out-class the German "Black Marias."

The London Morning Post published an interesting letter from an officer in the Royal Garrison Artillery at the front giving a most interesting account of the manner in which the British succeeded in countering the formidable attacks of the German "Black Marias." "We are able now to reply to the German heavy howitzers with shell that is even weightier than their much-vaunted "Black Marias." The howitzer I refer to is 'Mother.' She has been so christened by the Tommies, and the name is not inappropriate. She is of matronly dimensions, but comely withal, and has done excellent work whilst she has been with us, and more than one of her family of field batteries scattered round the front owes its existence to the attention 'Mother' has devoted to the German eight-inch heavy howitzers. 'Mother's' shell weighs 300 pounds. She ranges most accurately, and, indeed, she has had four direct hits on German guns in the past fortnight. A direct hit is only recorded by the airman when the shell actually strikes the enemy's gun. 'Mother' is usually accompanied by 'Archibald,' which is one of the new anti-aeroplane guns. 'Archie' is mounted on a motor-lorry, and recently brought down a Taube aeroplane, much to our delight. He fires a 13-pound shrapnell shell and is daily becoming more expert in his attentions to hostile aircraft."

A Great Blessing to be Freed of Indigestion

For Years He Suffered After Almost Every Meal—Attributes Complete Cure to Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

The experience of many people who suffer from indigestion is like that of the writer of this letter. Stomach medicines may bring some relief, but chronic indigestion is almost invariably the result of derangements of the liver, kidneys and bowels, and cannot be actually cured until these organs are set right.

MR. BARRETT.

With the liver sluggish there is constipation, and the food ferments in the bowels instead of being digested. This is the source of pain and suffering, and the cause of such dreaded diseases as appendicitis, peritonitis and kidney disease. It is much better to be on the safe side and prevent such ailments by the timely use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. J. D. S. Barrett, Nelson, B.C., and formerly of Twillingate, Nfld., writes:—"For several years I was a great sufferer from indigestion. The least bit of food caused me considerable trouble, and often I could scarcely eat a meal a day. The many remedies I tried proved futile, until I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and after using about eight boxes I was completely cured.

"Since that time I have not been troubled with indigestion, which I consider a great blessing. I feel grateful for this cure, and shall gladly answer any inquiries from persons suffering as I did."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, 25c a box, 5 for $1.00, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Inductive and Deductive.

Deductive reasoning is from theory to facts, while inductive reasoning is from facts to theory. Deduction is sometimes mere dreaming, oftentimes very foolish dreaming, while induction is the sane reaching out from particular facts to general laws.—New York American.

Policy, Not Politeness.

Gibbs—I noticed you rise in the car this morning and give your seat to a stout lady. Dibbs—Yes; it was a question whether she or I was going to stand on my feet.

Train Momentum.

The momentum of a modern twelve car railroad train running a mile a minute is equal to that of a ton weight falling from a height of twenty-one miles.

Fixed Both Ways.

THE ARETHUSIE.

(By D. McQuaig.)

In the great French War, there was a famous frigate, the saucy Arethusie, which fought an action with a French vessel and was immortalized in the following one of Dibdin's most famous sea songs:

The Admiralty has ordered the following verses to be engraved upon a brass plate and placed in a conspicuous place on the Arethusie of to-day. All the ships that took part in the action off Heligoland, have their names written in letters of gold, on this tablet on board the Arethusie of to-day.

THE SAUCY ARETHUSIE.

Come all ye jolly sailors bold
Whose hearts are cast in honour's mould,
While Britain's glory I unfold,
Hosah! for the Arethusie!
Her men were staunch to their favourite launch;
And when they were called on for to fire,
Sooner than strike they would all expire
On board the Arethusie.
It was in the springtime—she went out
The English Channel to cruise about,
With three hundred sailors, bold and stout,
On board the Arethusie.

It was just before the dawn, that night
When the Frenchmen hove in sight,
We fired a shot across her prow,
The Frenchmen they called out "Hello!"
"Bear down, do you see, to our Admiral's lee."
"Oh, no," says the Frenchmen, "that can't be."
"Then, I will lug you along with me,"
Cried the saucy Arethusie.

The fight was off Heligoland,
We beat them back upon the strand,
And we fought while ever a stick would stand,
On board the Arethusie.
And now we have driven the foe ashore,
Never to fight with Britons more.
We will each fill a glass to our favourite lass,
And to our captain and officers true,
And likewise to that noble crew
On board the Arethusie.

(Edited by Dr. David H. Reeder, Chicago, Ill.)

Kidney Diseases: It is a very common thing for people who are suffering on account of lameness or soreness in the muscles of the back, to at once conclude that they have kidney disease. Many advertisements of various patent medicines have fostered and encouraged the idea because a lame back or pain in the muscles is very common and many people can be induced to part with their money when made to believe that there is a deep and mysterious cause for their pains.

Now, as a matter of fact the pains which as a rule are felt in the back and loins, seldom come from or have anything to do woth the kidneys or their diseases. A severe contraction of certain muscles of the back would interfere with the nerves controlling the action of the kidneys, but if the kidneys themselves were first diseased the suffering would not first be noticed in the back, especially in the dreaded "Bright's disease."

Pain in the back may be found as one of the symptoms in cases of congestion of the kidneys, inflammation or Nephritis, and in Addison's disease. When pain in the back comes from Bright's disease of the kidneys there will be so many other pronounced symptoms present that the average physicion will pay but little if any attention to them.

Having mentioned conditions of the kidneys in which pains in the back may be one of the symptoms, I will tell you of the other symptoms. In cases of congestion of the kidneys or as our learned profession would probably speak of it "Venous Hyperaemia of the kidneys," we find first a diminishing of the flow of urine. Upon standing a while the urine is found to contain a sediment which may be easily seen. There may be a sense of fullness, dull pain and tenderness in the region of the kidneys. Usually the symptoms of disturbances of the liver are marked, such as sallowness, constipation, loss of appetite and dizziness.

Now in cases of Nephritis there are prominent symptoms of pain and tenderness in the small of the back, sometimes extending to the groins and bladder, also headache and feverishness, high coloured and scanty urine which is often mingled with blood or pus. When such symptoms follow back injuries they are bad and require prompt treatment of the right sort. Such symptoms are also bad when they follow Scarlet Fever, Dropsy is quite likely to follow.

I will tell you more about the kidneys and how to care for them next time.

VEGETABLE HASH.

Each vegetable must be cut up separately, then all be mixed.

When the hash is mixed bake it in a large pan, in small molds or in the frying pan over slow heat.

Any combination of cooked vegetables desired may be used in making vegetable hash. The vegetables can be used alone or combined with meat.

The hash must be well seasoned with salt and pepper, and if liked there may be added a little minced onions, chives, parsley, chervil or green pepper, finely mixed. The hash must be moistened a little with meat broth, milk or water.

The conditions essential to a good hash are that the vegetables shall be cut fairly fine, but not so fine that the pieces shall lose their shape or stick together—that is, the particles should drop apart when shaken on a fork.

And they still smile politely.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

THE KNOCKER'S PRAYER.

A good old deacon at Newville, Pa., offered the following prayer, which is reproduced and we will listen to see who in our town will say amen:

"Lord, please don't let this town grow. I've been here for thirty years, and during that time I've fought every public improvement. I've knocked everyhing and everybody, no firm or individual has established a business here without my doing all I could to put them out of business. I've lied about them, and would have stolen from them if I had the courage. I have done all I could to keep the town from growing and never have spoken a good word for it. I've knocked hard and often. I've put ashes on the children's slides and I've made the Chief of Police stop the boys from playing ball on my vacant lot. Whenever I saw anyone prospering or enjoying themselves I've started a reform to kill the business or spoil the fun. I don't want the young folks to stay in this town and I will do all I can by law, rule and ordinance to drive them away. It pains me, O Lord, to see that in spite of my knocking it is beginning to grow. Some day I fear I will be called upon to put down sidewalks in front of my property and who knows but what I may have to help keep up the streets that run by my premises? This, Lord, would be more than I could bear. It would cost me money though all I have was made right here in this town. Then, to, more people might come if the town begins to grow, which would cause me to lose some of my pull. I ask, therefore, to keep this town at a standstill that I may continue to be the chief."

VARIETY IN FOOTWEAR.

Many Styles of Shoes Worn by Smart Women.

The reason for a greater variety in footwear is that the present styles will not conceal the foot. Consequently the shoe manufacturers are putting upon the market their best. Even when the skirts are not short they are so narrow that the foot must of necessity be very much in evidence in walking.

The new decree of short skirts for utility wear, and sometimes in the more elaborate dresses, will be an added incentive to the shoe manufacturers. Fireless Cookers That Are Not Fireproof

One would think one were safe from fire with a fireless cooker, but a friend of mine came near having a conflagration from hers, says a writer in Good Housekeeping. She smelled something burning in the kitchen and hurried in to find, to her astonishment, that volumes of smoke were rolling from the fireless cooker. The latter was not in use at the time and, moreover, the lids were all standing open. The cause of the trouble was spontaneous combustion of the "stuffing" between the compartments.

It seems that the cook had not been careful in wiping out the moisture after the food had been cooked, and the metal lining had rusted and so holes had come at the bottom. The heat from the radiators got through these to the "stuffing," and when enough had been stored up in this interior spontaneous combustion occurred, just as it sometimes does with a bale of cotton. The insurance company made good to my friend the destruction of the fireless cooker, and she has purchased the latest model, which is porcelain lined, and, therefore, may not be subject to the same danger. But still we have now got to watch our fireless cookers lest they catch afire.

Cookers which are not seamless lined must be kept dry and open to air when not in use or rusting will inevitably result. Given this care they will not rust out.

Perhaps in all Europe there is not such another lady of royalty as little Princess Juliana, who, if she lives, will some day be Queen of the Netherlands or Holland as it is more commonly known. Juliana was born April

PRINCESS JULIANA OF HOLLAND.

30, 1909, and is therefore a little past her fifth year. As most children know, her mother is queen of Holland and her father is now Prince of the Netherlands, although before he married Queen Wilhelmina he was a Duke of Mecklenburg, a German principality. If Juliana's mother should die the little girl would become the queen, her father not being an heir to the throne. Notwithstanding her lofty station Juliana is much like other little folks. She is well educated for her age, and it is said she can speak several languages; also she is a very democratic princess and is fond of playing with little boys and girls who have no royal blood in their veins.

The coat cape combines the characteristics of the cap and the coat. The model shown here was designed by a famous French couturiere for an Englishwoman of rank. The crossed over shoulder bands, which pass under the arms, are novel features of the wrap.

Beautiful Nursery Furniture.

Wedgwood wicker furniture is beautiful for the somewhat elaborately furnished nursery. The woman who thinks that simplicity, even to the point of plainness, should be the keynote of all children's rooms would doubtless think Wedgwood furniture too elaborate, too ornate.

Made of wicker, it is enameled a dull, lovely shade of blue and decorated with festoons of plaster flowers in white, held in loops here and there with little plaster figures. Sleeping baskets, clothes holders of various sorts, children's chairs, tables and chiffoniers are decked with little plaster figures.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

The raglan sleeve has run the gamut also and with great success. On its first appearance it was restricted to coats, and rather rough and ready coats at that, but later we accepted it with open arms for silks, chiffons, velvets—in fact, nothing was too good for it. Flying to extremes, we use it for an apron, and like it very well in that position, particularly if we are making the apron ourselves, for it is easier to manage than the regulation sleeve and armhole. Sewing it in is like sewing a shoulder seam, and besides the raglan sleeve gives freer play to the arms—something worth considering when an apron is concerned.

The apron illustrated above how with this type of sleeve can be utilized for such a purpose. The pattern, No. 6986, comes in three sizes, 36, 40 and 44 inches bust measure. Materials like percale, gingham and chiffon can be used, with or without the band at neck and sleeve edges. The belt at the back is useful to hold in the slight fulness and the pocket is a great convenience for holding the handkerchief or any of the little things one wants to carry about while working. Be useful if there is not too much of it stretch between the shades, and pockets the colors themselves are not too vivid.

Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

CHAPTER XVI.

A Thief is Rudely Foiled.

QUIETLY Lucille allowed herself to be conducted back to the room from which she had just made her escape. Her heart was so heavy over the death of the captain she did not care what happened.

She had tried her best, but still failure dogged her footsteps. Her sweetheart had resigned from the army under such a cloud as must have broken his spirit completely. His heart she knew was already broken by her seeming disbelief in him. Her father was entangled in the same net with his aid, and she held the key to the situation—a key with no lock to fit. She alone knew where the papers that would clear up the entire mystery were located, and she was a prisoner.

"Mr. Loubeque's compliments, Miss Lucille," murmured the butler as he noiselessly approached with a tiny glass of liquor, "and he thought a tiny sip might prove beneficial to the nerves."

"Thank you, Thompson," she murmured sweetly. "Tell your present employer I shall gladly do so. But," she added, her eyes flashing maliciously, "I forgot Mr. Loubeque has been your employer right along."

"Quite so, Miss Lucille. Thank you."

Before his perfect aplomb Lucille stood undecided. Her nerves were shattered, and the drink, she knew, would do her good. But there had been that look in the man's eyes. She could not be mistaken in it. She touched her tongue to the delicious, fiery stuff and waited. A sensation of comfort slowly approached her weary spirit—a feeling of lassitude. She fought the sensation away.

Pouring out the doctored liquor carefully, she lay against the pillows in a posture of dreamless sleep. It was half an hour before her patience was rewarded. Then Thompson slipped stealthily into the room. Lucille flexed herself—a steel spring wound to its last notch.

Thompson approached swiftly, silently. He was beside her, leaning over her, his hand groping at her throat; a little exclamation of triumph as his finger pads touched the necklace. It was in his hands, and then the steel spring uncoiled with tremendous suddenness.

Taken by surprise before the vicious fury of the girl's attack the butler staggered back. Before he could recover she was upon him, driving him toward the door. He lifted his hands to fend his face, then stopped abruptly as he staggered into his master, just entering the room.

Hugo Loubeque waited, watching the furious girl and the ruffled butler curiously. A smile curved his lips as he turned toward her.

"You object to the draft, I presume. I assure you it has no ill effects and will make the journey one of pleasure instead of weariness." Then he whirled upon the butler, his face hard as granite, his teeth clipping off each word like steel particles.

"What are you doing here?"

"I came to see if the draft had taken effect," sullenly murmured the butler.

"By what authority?"

"Asking your pardon, sir, but I suggested it and was afraid it might have a bad effect. I grew to take an interest in Miss Lucille in Manila, sir, and did not wish"—

Loubeque frowned heavily, but cut him short with an impatient wave of his hand. Lucille felt a sudden impulse to tell him the truth, but conquered it swiftly. She could fight Thompson much easier than this man. She must keep her own counsel. The spy turned to her again.

"You did not take the draft?"

"No!"

"I assure you on my word as a gentleman that it will cause you no inconvenience. Further, I hoped not to be obliged to tell you that if you do not take it willingly you will be compelled to get it down."

She bent her head docilely. Resistance was out of the question, and, after all, she must save her strength to fight the big things. After a moment's hesitation, a shudder at the enticing colors shed from the stuff, she drained the glass.

Languor, comfort, peace. She gave herself up to the drug with a prayer, a prayer she felt so certain would be heeded, that in her slumber a smile parted her lips, played about her countenance. And when she awoke she was at Loubeque's Mexican ranch.

* * * * * * *

Low, rambling houses of Spanish architecture dotted the great area which the curiously fantastic, wholly artistic fence inclosed. The grounds were laid out in orderly fashion, blooming like the garden of Eden with a riotous profusion of flowers and plants.

This was a new Loubeque she met there. Always had she associated him with the manner of her knowing him. Times he had been tender, other times he had been cruel, always was he crafty, cunning, courageous, a one ideal man. But now he seemed all poet, painter. She could hear the softened tones of his voice as, with some of his companions, he wandered about the grounds, tenderly explaining to them the history, the beauty of the flowers, the rare species he had imported for the place.

It was after one of these rambles that she noticed signs of some impending change about the menage. One morning he suddenly walked toward her, entering the house to shortly enter her room.

"I am leaving today," he began abruptly, all the nature lover gone from his cold, stern manner. "Again I ask you to tell me where you put the papers."

"Then they haven't been found"—She stopped abruptly, realizing that her delight had revealed quite as much as his demand.

"I am sorry, Lucille, that you cannot see the folly of this. It is your last chance to tell me. It is your last chance to count me a friend. I am waiting."

She did not answer. Their eyes met and held, both filled with an unaltered purpose. Then Loubeque, without a word, left the room.

Nor did she see him again. That he had gone she knew from the laxness about the household among his servants. It gave her food for hope. She must escape—she must. She must escape before the iron grip of dreamy languor about the place became unbreakable.

But always when she wandered about she would encounter one of Loubeque's aids, always masked, always casually surprised at coming upon her, always urbane and polite, yet insistent upon turning her in an opposite direction. It got upon her nerves to such an extent that she finally took to the house and remained there. Every room was grated, and, though she knew they were not here for the purpose, they served it admirably.

Thompson seemed upon his master's departure to have lost poise as thoughts of the ruby necklace his fingers had touched seared itself upon his brain.

She recalled how he had served in her father's house so long with never a suspicion from any one that he was other than the perfect butler with a thought outside of his work. And then she recalled the incident of the necklace, always would she shudder at the recollection, then deliberately drive it from her mind.

It was the fourth day since the departure of the master of the place that, standing beside her iron barred window, she saw the figure of a man topping a rise in the distance and drawing swiftly nearer. There was something strangely familiar about him, something she seemed to recall. In slashed bolero, tight trousers and gold braided sombrero of straw, his long black hair waving gracefully to his shoulders, the man made an impressive figure as he fastened steady, undeviating eyes upon her window until she was positive he was looking at her for a purpose. Low voices hummed in conversation, then the man appeared before her, offering his arm.

"Senor Loubeque sent me that I might escort you about the grounds, might place myself at your disposal," he murmured.

Lucille drew away from him at mention of his master, but something in the meaning eyes behind the mask reassured her and she moved out into the patio. Here they passed Thompson, whose eyes darted a message of suspicion at them.

"He thinks all is not right," said the man quietly when they were out of sight. "Well," he added, with a low sigh, "he is right in his suspicion. I could not hope to fool that man. Only a little less wise is he than Hugo himself."

"Not right! Then you have come to help me"—

"I have come," he answered quietly "because I could not help coming. I have come because since first I looked upon you—you will forgive me—there in the city home of Hugo, when I looked upon your face I have seen no other. I have come because I could not stay away. I have come against the will of the man to whom I owe everything, the man I love, because you called me, because"—

She touched his arm lightly with her fingers in mute appeal. Her woman's instinct told her that such a love as this might be turned to account.

Slowly they wandered through the beautiful gardens, speaking of what they saw, yet never touching upon the subject nearest both their hearts. Suddenly she man seemed unable to stand the strain longer, and she touched his arm sympathetically, but he drew away with a little cry of near pain.

"Come with me to the crystal ball," he cried, "and see the vision that has haunted my eyes so long a time. Come with me to the crystal and see the face that has made me forget my vows; forget the one I love and fear; forget everything save the desire for life that I may lay down to bring a smile to it. Come with me, lady of my heart."

Before the temperamentalness of the voice Lucille followed his lead. Gone from her was every thought of immediate escape. She saw that the man could not be handled easily; that she could not escape from him any more than she could from the other minions of the spy without the use of craft, and yet she felt a curious sympathy for him, pain that she must harm him.

Before the great crystal ball that was set upon the edge of the fountain basin beside the patio fountain, beside which stood the monstrous, heavy, gray palm tree, he halted, staring through the orbs of the mask into its clear depths. Then, trembling, she looked upon the flaming eyes so close to the reflection of her own face. Suddenly he tore the mask from him and tossed it to one side, closing his arm fiercely about her waist and drawing her soft cheek against his swarthy one. Together they stared into the ball, his eyes luminous with a wild love, hers moist with mingled sympathy and fear. Gently she disentangled his fingers, surprised at the numbness of them, the ease with which they responded to her will.

"You must go back," he murmured hoarsely. "I was mad to think of such a plan."

"I see a face," she murmured softly, her voice very low and far away. "I see a face and a scene that is different from the one you see. I see Manila—home—loved ones—loved ones grieving for a girl they think is lost to them forever. I see a man, the handsomest, bravest, truest man in the world—the man I love. He is disgraced. He is heartbroken. He is giving up the sword he loved, the sword he swore to never lift save in defense of his country's honor and the honor of a woman. He is giving up all that life holds dear to him, just as he has long since been bereft of all he cared to have from life—because I am imprisoned here.

"And I do not care for anything except his happiness. He is my whole world. I would sacrifice everything for him and for his honor." She turned swiftly, her hands reaching toward her neck and unfastening the ruby necklace. "Here, my friend, take this. It is all I have to give except my gratitude. Take it and help me to the man I love."

He took the necklace, turning it idly about in his hands, then hungrily lifted his eyes to her face, as though inanimate beauty was a thing of no account in comparison. He took her arm again and thoughtfully led her around devious paths to a deep, sunken well, before which he paused, a curious smile upon his lips.

"It is the 'wishing well,'" he murmured, "the wishing well before which all who have looked into the crystal ball and seen that their heart most desires must kneel and make request. It is the legend; but, ah!"—He turned away to hide the swift contortion of jealousy and pain that suffused his face.

She knelt beside the well, almost fearful of the magic powers he ascribed to it.

"Oh, wishing well, let me but hold in my hands the honor of my sweetheart that I may give it back to him! Let me but serve his happiness and I shall ask for nothing more. Do with me as you desire, but grant my only wish."

He touched her lightly upon the arm, and she rose obediently, her eyes glowing like jewels. Lightly he placed the ruby necklace about her neck.

"One look in your eyes," he said softly, his mellow voice breaking under the torment of what he knew to be a hopeless love, "is more beautiful, more rare, more precious to me than any jewel. Come!"

Slowly, silently, yet in perfect understanding, they moved back to the house.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY.

My boy Frank seemed weak-chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

Indian Woman Was Murdered.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 24.—A post-mortem shows that foul play figured in the death of Mrs. James Kiseke, an Indian woman, whose body was found on the Muncey Reserve, west of here, early Monday morning. According to the autopsy the woman had been beaten severely about the head and body.

Coroner Dr. Woods of Mt. Brydges has arranged an inquest for Tuesday next, and High Constable Watterworth and Crown Attorney McKillop are working on the case.

And Stuart's Calcium Wafers in a Very Short Time Will Clear Up Your Complexion Naturally.

Just in a few days one may clear the skin of all manner of blemishes such as pimples, blotches, liver spots etc., if one will use Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

Don't use pasty lotions and creams to fill up the pores when they are working constantly with the blood to throw off the impurities of your system.

"Before I rid my face of pimples I was not thought to be pretty. But all the change I made was to clean my blood and skin."

Many a face is made with beautiful contour and artistically lined, but when the skin is discoloured one cannot see the beauty of the face lines. One notices only the skin blemishes.

It's because pimples and eruptions come from the inside — from impure blood—and you can't cure them by rubbing stuff on the outside of the face. Purify the blood and the blemishes will disappear.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers will often clear the complexion in a few days' time. That's the wonderful part of it —they act right off—in a hurry. That's because they're made of just the ingredients needed to drive all poisons and impurities from the blood. That's why doctors prescribe them so constantly.

You will speedily enjoy a beautiful complexion if you use these wonderful little Wafers. Your face will become as clear and pure as a rose. Nobody likes to have pimply-faced people around. With Stuart's Calcium Wafers you don't have to wait for months, before getting results. Even boils have been cured in a few days' time with these remarkably effective blood cleansers. Letters From The Trenches

PUTTING ON FLESH IN SHELL-RAKED TRENCHES.

(Corporal W. E. Rouse, 1st Batt. King's Royal Rifles, writes to his chum).

Well, old man, we are out of the firing line for a day or two. I have had a really good time—washed, shaved, good bed (blanket, overcoat, and straw), and managed to get hold of fresh butter, milk, chocolate, soap, candles, and as many cakes as I could pay for. Never had such a time since I have been out at the war. But I am afraid I have over-eaten—the temptation was too great. Fancy cakes in war-time!

Escorting those prisoners was a few days' most enjoyable holiday, except for the first day, when we marched twenty-eight miles in the rain, then got straight into the train in wet togs. Next day, all along that train side, you could see all our washing hanging out. 'Twas a picnic though.

As regards treating the Germans with seriousness, well, old man, to tell the real, honest truth, we all reckon it a pretty fair fight if 2,000 German infantry are matched against 1,000 British. Our rifle fire is infinitely more accurate, our method of attack is much superior, and the temper of the troops is incomparable under difficulties and hardships.

For instance, I have seen our men "done to the world," hungry, cold, and wet, and hardly a foot without blisters in the battalion, wearily plodding along in the rain. The colonel comes along, concern for the troops plainly visible in his face. "Come along, men, only two more miles." No answer; we are all finished. It is dark, raining hard, and the roads thick with mud. For days we had been fighting and marching, marching from 2 or 3 a.m. to 8 or 9 p.m.

But suddenly a shot is fired a few hundred yards away on our left. A handful of men is stopped, myself included. One lot guards one road, a second another, and two parties are sent to search the country. Our fellows jumped to it as though they were simply on the first day of manoeuvres. We stayed on these roads all night in the rain. Next day we moved at 2 a.m. and had a two-hours' halt at seven. We promptly forgot the previous night. Would conscripts forget it as quickly?

One result of my experiences so far is that I am enabled to value luxuries and distinguish them from necessities. Any thinking man must change his outlook on life greatly after a few weeks out here. As regards physical change, well, my hair is rapidly vanishing and I am putting on flesh. I reckon I am near a stone heavier than when I left home. A result of long spells in trenches and good, plain food.

This seems to be a scrappy letter. I am just sitting down on the floor, my mood is one of lazy content, although occasionally I breathe a low curse on the vile French tobacco I am smoking, making my own fags.

We have been doing rather well lately in the way of news. A few Continental Daily Mails have been issued daily to our battalion. Contents practically the same as English edition, same day. So, old man, thou art excused sending papers.

We hear all sorts of rumours out here. Three of the latest are: A German destroyer sunk; a German army corps captured; a peace conference is now sitting. I am not sure whether these rumours are invented maliciously by someone of our battalion. However, we get all the news read out to us on parade, and so I personally pay no attention to these rumours.

We have had a lot of night marching. One night we were billeted in a village not very far from the firing line. Shells reached us occasionally, but only one caused any casualties. That one was from their big gun. It burst amid a group of men having breakfast, killing thirteen and wounding fifty-three. It took us unawares, for this village had not been shelled previously. After that we retired to bomb-proof cellars when the shelling commenced. Orders were to be ready to move out at a moment's notice.

Suddenly we were ordered to parade at one. It was just dark. "All talking and smoking to cease." Off we went, whispers all along the line, hoarse, loud-whispered commands, curses as someone stumbled over a stone, etc. This kept on for four or five miles. We halt for a time in another village and "Men may smoke!" We remain in this village for two hours, but everywhere too wet to sit down. We stand in the road.

Then we move off again in single file across country. Smoking and talking cease again. Through dark woods, there is no moon. We simply cannot see the dim shape of the man in front. We keep connection somehow.

Up, up, up! It seems as if we shall never reach the trenches. Curses increase, men fall headlong owing to greasy road or path, and great difficulty is experienced in keeping touch. At last we reach the crest of the hill and move along until we find our trenches. We are to relieve the troops. Before daybreak the relieved troops are off, and we set to work to improve the trenches.

About 8 a.m. the fun commences. Whis-s-s-s! We can hear them coming. Bang! Number One has arrived; they have got the trenches all right. The shells rarely fall more than ten yards away from a trench. A shell exploded two yards in front of me and my rifle and bayonet were smashed to pieces. Another rifle was buried in the earth, and a smashed rifle was found in the branches of a tree 5 feet from the ground. A shower of dirt covers me, and I feel a blast of hot air which did my "cold feet" good. We all had a good grin at the rifles. That is about the warmest corner I have been in.

A Rival to the Kaiser.

(London Daily Sketch.)

On officer, a colonel on the Headquarters Staff of a Division, writes from near Ypres:

"The Kaiser himself was just in front of us a couple of days ago when the fiercest attack took place, but I don't know where he is now. An amusing incident took place yesterday morning. As Lieutenant —— was attending a wood for wounded he came across a German soldier singing loudly in German: 'I am the Archangel Gabriel.' He was very drunk, with a bottle of wine in his hand, having wandered forward from his own lines;—so took him prisoner."

Six Weeks Without Undressing.

(Montreal Journal of Commerce.)

In a letter to a friend in Montreal a naval officer in the North Sea describes how his ship is in almost hourly danger from floating mines:

"I am commanding officer of this vessel. She is fitted with powerful wireless—far more so than the Mauretania. We frequently pick up messages over 2,000 miles away. We also have five guns."

After describing a number of thrilling experiences with mines, he says:

"I am now and have been for the last two weeks in charge of 22 vessels forming protective arrangements against submarines and mines for the warships. We are all connected up with nets—quite an elaborate scheme. I am responsible for those vessels maintaining their positions; also watering and provisioning them.

"It is anything but a sinecure, especially in the winter in the North Sea.

"But, oh, if the Germans would only come out and let's get it over. This kind of work is most trying to the nerves. I have not had my clothes off for about six weeks. Very frequently I get wet through and your clothes dry on you."

Netty's in the Game.

(New York Press.)

The English "war song," entitled, "Sister Susie's Sewing Shirts for Soldiers," has made such a hit in New York, that Al. Johnson invited words for an additional chorus, and this is the one to which he gave the prize:

"Netty's knitting knick-knacks for the soldiers;
Her nobby knack at knitting nets them neckties by the score.
Some natty soldier knockers would prefer some knickerbockers
To the knotty knitted neckties Netty knits for necks galore."

ITCHING PIMPLES ON FACE AND ARMS

Inflamed and Were Sore. Some Nights Could Not Sleep. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment Healed Within a Month.

Shaw Brook, Moncton, N. B.—"Some time ago there were sores broke out on my face and arms. They appeared like little pimples and itched intensely and were all red and inflamed-like and were sore. It caused itching and burning and some nights I could not sleep.

"I took a treatment to no avail. I tried —— Ointment. —— Salve and rubbed —— on them and they were getting worse. The trouble lasted for nearly a month. So I thought I would try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I would wash the sores with the Cuticura Soap and then rub the Cuticura Ointment on. Two applications gave me relief. The sores began to dry up and within a month I was cured without a sore left." (Signed) Miss Clara Annstrong, July 6, 1914.

TWO MORE HEROES.

V. C. Is Awarded to Officer and Sergeant of Manchester Regiment.

LONDON, Dec. 24. — Victoria Crosses have been awarded to Second Lieut. James Leach and Sergt. John Hogan of the Second Battalion of the Manchester Regiment for "conspicuous bravery near Festubert on October 19, when, after their trench had been taken by Germans, and after two attempts to recapture it had failed, they voluntarily decided on the afternoon of the same day to recover the trench themselves, and working from traverse to traverse at close quarters, with great bravery, gradually succeeded in regaining possession of the trench. They killed eight of the enemy, wounded two and made sixteen prisoners."

Turkish Reservists Called.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24. — A call for Turkish reservists now living here was issued yesterday by Theodore Prouiz, acting Turkish consul-general.

Embargo on Rubber Hits U. S.

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—The rubber industry of the United States faces a grave situation as the result of the embargo placed by the British Government upon the exportation of crude rubber from Great Britain and her colonies, according to a statement issued yesterday by the Rubber Club of America, which includes the leading manufacturers and importers of rubber in the country. An advance in prices is imminent, unless the embargo is soon removed, the statement says, and idleness faces many of the 125,000 persons employed in the rubber industry.

MORE POWER FOR WOMEN.

In Peterborough in these days the activities of women in all good works is in conspicuous evidence of their interest in the good of society and country, and their capacity to give it effect. One of the slogans of the age is, "More Power for Women." We hear it in Canada. Our women have banded themselves in a hundred ways to help this cause of society and humanity. In so doing they have escaped the feminine tendency, so apparent on many useful movements, that no more mass or body of men could have carried into effect in a hundred years. Like it or not as we please, feminism, the right of the woman to her own life, a voice in affairs, or her part in public and private matters that concern her chief business in life, is one of the outstanding features of the times.

And just at the present time women of Canada have it in their power to demonstrate their fitness for a part in our public and national life by working together with the men.

Women are more concerned in the "Made in Canada" movement than any other class. The purchasing of any community is almost entirely in their hands. It is woman's business—she spends nearly 90 p.c. of the family income—and if she grasps the importance,, the vital importance to her and her family, of applying the "Made in Canada" principle, its success is assured as well as happiness and prosperity throughout all Canada.

Women are by instinct more conservative than men and slower to adopt any radical change in method or practice until convinced that they should do so. Once convinced, however, they are more consistent, practical and enthusiastic than men could ever be.

Women will quickly grasp the "Made in Canada" idea, however. In the first place, no one is asked to buy a "Made in Canada" article unless it is equal or better value. With no duty to pay "Made in Canada" articles are almost universally better in value and cheaper in price. Secondly, by buying "Made in Canada," the woman is protecting her own family or fellow countrymen from unemployment and prompting the prosperity of her own family and community by keeping the money at home. Thirdly the movement is profoundly one of common sense, patriotism and enlightened selfishness.

It depends on the women.

Russia to Fortify Aland Islands.—Germany is complaining because the allies have allowed Russia to fortify the Aland Islands in the Baltic for naval purposes during the winter, when the mainland ports are frozen.

LIEGE FORTIFICATIONS.

Notwithstanding that the Germans have worked incessantly to re-establish the fortifications of Liege, it appears, according to the Echo de Belge, that one or two of the forts have been wrecked beyond repair. The Germans have linked each fort with rows of trenches, which are protected from assault by barbed wire entanglements. An engineer officer who has found the opportunity to inspect the work agrees, says the Echo, that the position is very strong now, but he considers that the circle of defence is so vast that at least 80,000 infantry would be required effectively to defend the intervals. Whether Germany will ever lock up so great an army in the town this engineer officer doubts.

COUNTER ATTACKS OF THE ENEMY FAIL

PRECAUTIONS AGAINST AN ATTACK ON LONDON

DEATH WAS TRAGIC ONE

Wm. O'Brien Dies In Local Hotel Following A Scuffle With Edgar Grose

THE LATTER ARRESTED

Following a scuffle with Edgar Grose in the White House Thursday night, William O'Brien, a local young man, collapsed, and life was extinct before medical aid reached him. The pulmotor was also called but failed to revive the deceased. Whether death was due to a blow struck in the scuffle, or natural causes arising from the excitement of the encounter is not yet clear from the details The Examiner has been able to learn. According to Coroner Greer and Dr. Gallivan, both of whom examined the body, there were no marks of violence upon it.

The fight which culminated in the death of O'Brien was of short duration and took place about half-past-ten o'clock Thursday night. It seems that the two men, Grose and O'Brien, who it is said, had met in a similar affair a few weeks previously, came together in the White House, in a hallway near the bar. There they proceeded to settle old accounts, although The Examiner was unable to learn from any of those who saw the scuffle that any blows were struck. The men no sooner commenced hostilities than they were separated by the proprietor who ordered Grose to leave the house at once. After getting rid of Grose and thus making sure of preventing a re-occurrence of the trouble, Mr. Graham returned to the hall, where the fight took place and found O'Brien leaning against the wall. Before he could reach him O'Brien fell to the floor, groaning and gasping for breath. Thinking that he had probably been temporarily knocked unconscious, Mr. Graham had O'Brien's clothing loosened, and with others set to work to bring him to. It was not thought that O'Brien's injuries were in the least serious until Dr. Gallivan's arrival. After an examination, Dr. Gallivan pronounced the man dead, he having expired while efforts were being made to resuscitate him. The coroner and police were then summoned.

Grose had left the hotel before it was discovered that his antagonist was seriously hurt, and the police at once exerted every effort to apprehend him. Outside places were notified and the local force was kept busy in the city. He was not arrested, however, but about seven o'clock last evening gave himself up. The police think he spent Thursday night and yesterday in Millbrook, and that he was driven there by a friend.

This morning he was charged in Police Court with murder, and was remanded for a week without bail. Mr. J. A. New, student with Mr. G. N. Gordon, appeared for the defendant, and Crown Attorney Hatton for the prosecution. Grose is a married man, about 36 years of age and lives with his mother on Stewart street.

O'Brien was 21 years of age, and resided with is parents on Park street. Up till lately he was employed with the Dunker Gas Company. He is survived by his father and mother, five sisters and two brothers. His body was taken to McFadden's Undertaking rooms about half-past-eleven Thursday night, and was removed to his home last evening. The funeral will be held to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock from the family residence, 496 Park street to St. Peter's Cathedral and cemetery.

Yesterday morning an inquest into the death was opened and the jury viewed the body. The inquest will be resumed on Monday night at 8 o'clock in the Police Court Room, City Buildings.

The jury was composed of the following: J. Metheral, W. Devins, Cunningham, Tom Cooley, Patrick Quinlin, F. Brownscombe, Bruce Robertson, J. G. Noble, Albert Weatherhead, Sid Middleton, Sam Baker, D. H. Kerrioghan.

Christmas Music At St. Paul's Church

The evening service at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church to-morrow will be a Praise one, and will consist of some beautiful Christmas anthems and carols. A sextette for ladies' voices, and duets and solos by Miss Dorothy Allen and Mr. Maurice Park.

Details of the choral portion of the service will be found amongst the usual church notices.

GERMAN ATTACKS ALL REPULSED

Between the Lys and the Oise Desperate Advances by the Enemy Were Driven Back While Allies Made Advances in Upper Alsace.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Dec. 26. — Violent German attacks on Christmas eve, which were resumed on Christmas Day, are reported in the official communique from the war office to-day. These attacks, delivered at Chivy, north o Supier, and in the region of Perthes, were repulsed, but the statement to-day indicates that there was little cessation in the fighting yesterday except in Belgium, where operations were hindered by a fog.

Between the sea and the Lys there was only a feeble cannonading because of the fog, the statement says, but between the Lys and the Oise German attacks were directed against several points, and the most desperate fighting resulted at Lihons. The French troops captured a German trench, were driven out by the Germans, but returned to the attack and re-took the position. German attacks were repulsed at Noulettes, Boisselle, east of Albert, and at Lihons; further progress is reported in Upper Alsace.

NEW YORK, December 26.—A London Daily Express despatch from Amsterdam to the New York Herald says: "My correspondent in Belgium states, on the authority of first hand information, that the Germans have now three plans for their coming retreat from Flanders. They are now concentrating 200,000 Landstrum troops in fortified positions in and around Antwerp, in order that they may be able to make a firm stand there when the allies hurl them back; a German lieutenant in Antwerp said: "If we are repulsed in Flanders we shall retreat at once on Antwerp, not even attempting to defend Ghent, but our defence at Antwerp will be desperate, and it will take years to drive us out, as I expect we will have five army corps there."

LONDON, December 26. — The Austrian court physicians fear that Emperor Franz Josef is on the verge of a complete physical break down, according to a despatch received here to-day from Berne. Private information received in Berne is that the aged Emperor is suffering from extreme depression brought on by the recapture of Belgrade by the Servians.

BERLIN CLAIMS VICTORY

BERLIN, December 26. — An official statement issued to-day declares that the British and British Indian troops made assaults at Nieuport on Christmas eve, and were repulsed, leaving three thousand dead on the field, and nine hundred officers and men, and several machine guns, in the hands of the Germans.

Lance Corporal Fred Stevens of Peterborough, with the 57th Contingent at Salisbury Plain.

A SUDDEN CHANGE

Thermometer Registered 29 Degrees Below Zero—Coldest Christmas In 72 Years

COLD WAVE GENERAL

Twenty-nine degrees below zero and then some. The "some" is made up of readings recorded by thermometers, located in sundry places such as the Indian settlement. Some of these thermometers favoured us with a temperature of anything from twenty-five to thirty eight degrees below zero. To many it was a disappointment to learn that the official temperature did not exceed twenty-nine degrees. The first real indication that the George Street merchants had of the sudden slump in the weather was the presence of a man who knelt in front of a large street thermometer near the Examiner Office. He was making a strenuous effort to locate the mercury which had depreciated to an alarming extent. At seven o'clock on Christmas morning the thermometer stood at 18 degrees below zero and the highest reached during the day was one above. During most of the day the temperature averaged ten degrees below zero.

Colder To-day.

To-day it was colder still. At 7 o'clock this morning the minimum figure of twenty-nine below was reached. At noon it was one below. Mr. Mark Spenceley is authority for the statement that this Christmas was the coldest that he has experienced in seventy-two years. Despite this it is evident that Santa Claus was successful in completing his rounds without mishap, all of which testifies to his remarkable powers of endurance. There were not a few broken water pipes, due to the sudden change in temperature. Hurry calls were received by the plumbing fraternity from all over the City. Reports from various parts of the Province would indicate that the cold wave is general and is likely to last over Sunday.

PROTECTING LONDON FROM AIR ATTACK

Every Possible Precaution is Being Taken as the Result of Daring Raids Over Dover and Southend Made by German Aviators---An Aeroplane Patrol.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, December 26. — Every possible precaution is being taken in London now to prevent a successful aeroplane attack upon the city. The daring raids over Dover and Southend, during which German aviators succeeded in encircling about both cities, and then making their escape, has convinced the war office that aided by fog hostile aviators might easily reach London and drop bombs. Although all the electric signs were taken down soon after the outbreak of the war, and other lights dimmed, London spent last night in even greater darkness. Orders were given that every light not absolutely needed should be turned out. A constant aeroplane patrol will be maintained along coast to guard against the approach of hostile aviators upon London. In the raid upon Dover as well as that over Southend yesterday, German aviators took advantage of the fog in which they reached the coast unobserved. The guns at Sheerness and other points were unable to get the range. It is now evident that only by counter aeroplane attacks can such raids be resisted.

PARIS, December 26. — The advance to the hills west of Cernay reported in the operations in Alsace to-day, represented a gain of about two and a half miles for the French troops. The French troops in this region were last reported at Thann, moving towards Cernay, which is ten miles from Mulhausen, the objective of the present advance. Fighting has been in progress about A-spache for the past two weeks and to-day's statement would indicate that the French have succeeded in establishing themselves in new and stronger positions about that town. The mention of numerous German attacks by the French statement again to-day further indicates the strong resistance that is being encountered by the allies in their offensive movements. With the arrival of the Kaiser at the front again it is evident the Germans have begun a movement in an attempt to check the allies by strong counter offensive. All the statements of the past few days have told of the repulse of strong German attacks.

PARIS, December 26. — The Russians have thrown back the Germans south of Sochaczew with heavy losses, the war office stated to-day in an announcement of the operations in the east.

PULMOTOR SAVES LIFE

Prompt Use Of Wonderful Instrument Revived Herbert Delaheye, Overcome By Fumes

A NARROW ESCAPE

The prompt use of the pulmotor was responsible for saving the life of Herbert Delaheye, 280 McDonnel Street, an employee of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, yesterday. It seems that Delaheye was engaged in thawing out a frozen service by means of a wood alcohol torch. It is thought that he enhaled some of the fumes, and realizing that he was becoming ill, managed to make his way to the company's store house on George Street, north of Brock Street. After entering the building and locking the door he became unconscious and fell to the floor. This must have been about 11 o'clock in the morning.

When he did not come home for dinner his father started out to look for him and finally at about 2 o'clock he located the unfortunate young fellow. Looking through the glass in the door he saw his son lying on the floor. He notified P. C. Lawrence and the door was broken in. Dr. Carmichael was summoned and the pulmotor sent for from the fire station. After three quarters of an hour's use of the machine and after more than a tank of oxygen had been employed, Delaheye was revived and taken to his home on McDonnel Street. He was pronounced out of danger last night.

Dr. Carmichael informed the Examiner that the young man would probably have been dead in another half hour. As it was he could feel no pulse in the wrist when he arrived on the scene.

FALLING OFF IN SUPPLIES

There was a decided slump to-day in the amount of produce that was offered on the farmers' produce market. This might also be said of the demand. Both supply and demand were minimized by the advent of Christmas and the consequent increase in buying prior to the holiday. The majority of householders have supplies on hand sufficient to last for at least a week. More than one family will be content to pick the bones of the turkey for the next day or two. It will be at least a few days before the market will resume a normal attitude. Prices showed very little change from last week.

THE WEATHER

Lowest temperature Christmas Day, 18 degrees below zero; highest, 1 degree above zero; average for the day, about 10 degrees below zero. Lowest to-day (Saturday), 29 degrees below zero at 7 a.m.; at noon, one degree below. These are especially low temperature figures for so early in the winter, and yesterday was about as bitterly a cold Christmas Day as we have ever had.—W.P.

WARRING NATIONS ORDER 20,000 MILES OF BARBED WIRE

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 24.—Demand from the belligerent nations of Europe for barbed and plain wire to-day reached the feverish stage in the wire mills of this district. Offers of orders aggregating 250,000 tons have been made within the past few days, the only point at issue being the time at which delivery can be made. This business is worth approximately $4,000,000 and will keep the mills going for several months. Mill officers said the length of the barbed wire alone would reach [illegible] while that of the remainder of the orders would bring the total to [illegible] miles.

Chicago Britons Have Subscribed Liberally To War Relief Fund

Chicago Britons, by birth of extraction, have come forward in generous form in behalf of the War Relief Fund, organized under the auspices of the Western British American newspaper. The fund, which will reach a total of $100,000 or more, now approximates $50,000 and a steady stream of currency is flowing into the office of that representative publication in the Pontiac Building, Chicago. All shades of British Americans have responded to the call for funds, the subscriptions ranging from $1,000 down to the modest donations of persons of small means, able only to contribute a few cents. Furthermore, contributions represent a wide range of territory, embracing almost every stage in the Union, from Texas to North Dakota and from Maine to Oregon—indeed in every community in which the Western British American and the Canadian American publications circulate. These journals by the way, are directly representative of British sentiment in the United States and, for upwards of thirty years, have mirrored Canadian and British news and views throughout the union, at the same time fostering American emigration to the Dominion, as well as encouraging exploitation of American capital in industrial fields over there.

Toward this splendid fund is credited the generosity of Canadians, English, Irish, Australasians and the men of Orkney, the Isle of Man, Shetland, the Hebrides and even Newfoundland, now residents of the United States.

When British American and Canadian American readers have contributed upward of $30,000, while the Sons of St. George Society has donated above $17,000; the Order of Scottish Clans $4,000 and the Welsh Societies of Chicago about $2,000. In addition to this the British and Canadian ladies of Chicago have sent forward about forty boxes of clothing for the war sufferers.

Travellers Have Complaint

Against the Railways and Express Companies

At a general meeting of the Peterborough Commercial Travellers' Association held recently several of the members made complaints of the alleged unfair treatment being received by Peterborough from the railways and express companies, both in regard to rates and train service.

A resolution was adopted, recommending the executive to co-operate with the Board of Trade and different manufacturers and shippers in an effort to get redress in these grievances.

This is a matter of great interest to the wholesale and manufacturing interests of the city, vitally affecting our position as a distributing centre.

In pursuance of the resolution it has been decided to ask representatives of the different interests to meet in the rooms of the Travellers' Association on Saturday, Jan. 2nd at 8 o'clock p.m. to discuss ways and means of improving the conditions in the best interests of the City of Peterborough.

MISLEADING REPORTS ARE CIRCULATED

Would-be Immigrants Informed They Would be Drafted Into the Army

From the nature of certain inquiries being received at the C.P.R. Department of Natural Resources Headquarters, Calgary, it is evident that some very misleading and absurd reports as to conditions in Canada are being circulated in the United States. For instance, one gentleman writes that he and three or four others were thinking of coming to Alberta but that he understands men are being drafted out of Canada to go to the war, and as he and his friends don't want to go to war, they are undecided what to do. Another man writes that he was told that a law had been passed in Canada, exempting people from the United States from the right to immigrate into Canada. There are six men in his party and they are at a loss to know what to do under the circumstances. It should be noted by all concerned in the settlement of Western Canada, and the fact should be given the fullest possible publicity that there is absolutely no truth in either of these reports or any other similar reports, which are obviously circulated for the purpose of discouraging immigration to Canada. There has not been a man drafted from Canada or from any other part of the Empire for service in the European war, and there is no prospect of any such action. A call was made for Canadian volunteers and more than three times as many men offered themselves as could be accepted. The Government's problem has not been the getting of men, but the accepting of the great numbers offering themselves. It is evident that with conditions such as these, the drafting of men for war service is not dreamed of, but, for the sake of argument, even if it were, American citizens coming to Canada could of course not be drafted until they became British subjects, and they are under no obligation to become British subjects at any time unless they so desire. The statement that laws have been passed in Canada to prevent Americans immigrating to this country is even more absurd, as must be appreciated by all who are familiar with conditions and know how greatly the practical farmer of the United States is wanted in Western Canada, where great fertile areas are awaiting farmers to cultivate them. It may be set down with the fullest assurance that Canada is more anxious to assist than prevent the immigration of desirable settlers from the United States. The instances quoted above indicate that there is no assertion too unreasonable or absurd to find circulation in certain quarters if its effect will only be to discourage American farmers from coming to Canada.

SQUARE DEALING DEMANDED.

It is stated that on a certain piece of street work in Montreal, there are employed forty men, ten of whom are foremen. This is an indication of the leakage which helps to make civic and government works so costly, and give the public such inadequate value for the money expended. We hear of cases where government contracts are carried out without adherence to specifications — the substitution of inferior, and inadequate material. We also hear a good deal of slop work by contractors supplying boots for our soldiers. All these things are a crime against the government and the country, and the blame for them falls upon the government which, by neglecting to supply proper supervision and inspection becomes a party to the fraud. We also hear of contracts for government military supplies being irregularly let—let to political favourites, to be farmed out to actual contractors with a good round "rake-off." It is inevitable that in contracts let under such circumstances there should be laxity of inspection and unsatisfactory results. The indifference to public interests implied in making the letting of contracts a favour to some party favourite, would naturally extend to the supervision of the actual work. So far no specific charges have been made, and it is to be hoped that rumours to the effect of there being irregularities are unfounded. But if there is any ground for suspicion, strict investigation is demanded. We make sacrifices as a country in sending the flower of our young manhood to fight. We are in duty bound to see that they are properly equipped with clothing and other things that will stand. And the country is making sacrifices, assuming an immense financial burden in providing the money for the expenditures necessary to the adequate discharge of our duty in the war. In the abstract we can ill afford such expenditure—it is only justified by the magnitude of the interests at stake, and the obviousness of our duty. We ought, then, to see that not a dollar of the money patriotically diverted from legitimate expenditure, is wasted in any way, but that full value should be received for every dollar spent. We are helping fight the battle of national and international uprightness and honesty of dealing. In the course of waging this fight we must not in any way disregard the principles for which we are fighting.

OUTRAGING THE TRADITION.

Premier Hearst is supposed to have inherited the Whitney tradition, in fact he has pledged himself to observe and be guided by its spirit. The essence of the Whitney tradition is regarded as comprised in the statement —"bold enough to be honest and honest enough to be bold." But in his cabinet reconstruction the premier seems to have rather topsy-turvied the motto—"bold enough to be dishonest; and dishonest enough to be bold." In elevating to cabinet positions — Messrs. T. W. McGarry and G. Howard Ferguson — or rather degrading cabinet positions to their level—Premier Hearst has recognized offensive partisanship — to put the matter most mildly—as a primary qualification for high office, office of exceptional responsibility. These estimable gentlemen were especially active in suppressing evidence and obstructing investigation into charges against a minister of the Crown, which had so much prima facie consistency, that Sir James Whitney himself condemned the action of the minister, into the attendant circumstances of which, the new cabinet ministers prevented free and full investigation. Their course left the accused minister under suspicion and placed a stigma upon him which even in the eyes of his party friends, and of the ruling influence in his party, barred him as a natural successor of Sir James Whitney in the leadership. It is generally recognized that Hon. Mr. Hanna is in ability and administrative capacity, head and shoulders above any of his cabinet colleagues, or any available member of his party; Mr. Hanna's friends say that placing the present premier over Mr. Hanna's head was in a figurative sense putting the tail to wag the dog. Mr. Hanna in virtue of his unexplained but suspicious relation in the Proudfoot charges, was held to be unfit for the premiership. Yet the two chief culprits, post facto participes criminis, who in disregard of British principles of justice, used the German expedient of force to prevent a full investigation which held, might have fully exculpated the minister, but which denied, left the suspicion that there was something exceedingly bad to be concealed—yet these gentlemen qualified for promotion by disqualification in the sight of honest men, are placed in office in a cabinet, supposed to be founded upon the Whitney tradition of honest and square dealing. It is not difficult to see to what influences Hon. Mr. Hearst owes his premiership. In reorganizing his cabinet he has not chosen the better way. It is generally felt that he acted with the pistol at his head, and was practically forced to give the two men in whom the confidence of the better element of their own party and the public had been seriously shaken, cabinet recognition as a reward for what they did to extricate the government from a series of critical, not to say, nasty positions. Hon. Mr. Hearst has not shown much diplomacy in leadership. Two events had seriously affected the Ontario Government—the death of Sir James Whitney removing the strong hand from the tiller, and the serious loss of votes sustained by the Government in the bye-elections of Dundas and West Hamilton. These showed the need of careful steering among the rocks, and should have counselled avoidance of far the most serious blow — the most disturbing to public confidence, in the promotion of two men who do not command even the confidence of the better element of their own party, This seems to be gratuitous lubrication of the facilis decensus.

GERMANY'S SIN.

The sin of Germany is that it is enslaved, not to another nation, but to its own desire for victory, and not through misfortune, but by its own choice. And a nation which is so enslaved cannot call itself free, however strong it may seem; and will cease to call itself free as soon as it discovers that its slavery is not even profitable.—London Times.

WHY PEACE IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Scarborough makes peace impossible until Germany is forced to plead for it as a suppliant. Anything in the nature of a patched-up truce, which would leave in the hands of the "baby-killers" the power to murder at will the peaceful people of sea coast cities, is not to be thought of. Britain is no longer battling against the violation of Belgian neutrality, or the disturbance of the European balance of power through the crushing of France, but for her own existence as a free nation. An arrogant Germany across the North Sea prepared at any opportune time to devastate undefended British cities and kill women and children in their homes without even giving notice of bombardment is a Germany that cannot be permitted to retain the power of indiscriminate murder.—Globe.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF RUBBER.

The prohibition of the export of rubber from this country will probably prove as effective a weapon as any in our armory. Over most of the supplies of plantation rubber we maintain almost absolute control, since it is grown in British Colonies. So far as wild rubber is concerned there may be more difficulty, especially as there is a great demand in the United States for rubber. It will probably happen, however, that America will absorb most of the wild rubber that comes upon the market. There are two products without which the operations of the German armies are found to be most seriously hampered. The one is rubber and the other oil. With Russia establishing itself in Galicia the oil supplies from the fields there will be cut off, and the measures which have been taken should prevent any large quantity getting into Germany from other sources. The present difficulty is Italy, but no doubt we shall be able to see that that country does not obtain more than its normal imports.—Westminster Gazette.

SPENDING THE PUBLIC MONEY.

It is difficult to insure the honest expenditure of public money. The grafter and the unscrupulous contractor are to be found in all party organizations. Many of them are adroit enough to be Liberals when the Liberals are in power and Conservatives when the loaves and fishes are distributed by a Tory Government. The most serious feature of this bipartisan rascality is that the unscrupulous contractor, remembering the tricks that he has played in the past to secure a dishonest profit, and hoping to practise like knavery in the future, is often in a position to put in a lower bid than the man who wants to do honest work at a fair price.

From a certain Ontario town there has come to the Globe a letter respecting a public building now in process of construction, which cannot be published in the form in which it was written, because if the allegations contained in it are not provable it would be most improper to give the name of the contractor. It is charged that the contractor in this case, through connivance with the inspectors, has been able, where reinforcing of concrete called for expanding metal, to use instead a rusty old iron fence; that in another case where 8-inch square timbers for purlins were required in the specifications three 2-inch planks, nailed together sufficed. Where weeping tile and tar were to be used to insure freedom from damp both were omitted, and three coats of paint were cut to two. None of the furnaces used, it is asserted, will come up to the requirements of the specification.

Copies of the letter containing these charges, with the names of the contractor and of the writer of the letter, have been sent to Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Only by the fullest investigation can the facts be established and non-partizan investigators will meet the need. If corrupt contractors were taught that it does not pay to be crooked the money of the Dominion could be spent to far better advantage. Is it too much to hope that some day, under both Liberal and Conservative administration, the people of Canada will get on honest dollar's worth for every dollar spent upon public works?—The Globe.

WAR AND PEACE.

What meant, I asked, the joyous song
Sung by the bright Angelic throng
Who hailed the Saviour birth,
Of Glory in the heights above,
To God who reigns in power and love,
And peace to men on earth.

While Nations meet in readly strife,
Tumults and terrors, rapine rife,
And cruel war's alarms,
In hatred 'neath the peaceful sky
Thousands, in mortal combat die
Amid the clash of arms.

When booming cannons fiercely roar,
And death its sweeping torrents pour,
Far over land and sea,
Revenge and discord jarring sway
Anger, distrust and crimes obey
With sin and misery.

Then fell a voice, upon my ears,
Soft, as once fell from stary spheres,
The dew on Gideon's fleece,
"Let not your steadfast courage fail,
The storms of rude distress assail,
In Me ye shall ave peace."

THE ENTENTE FORCES FIGHTING FOR REDEMPTION OF THE GERMAN PEOPLE

One of the strongest arraignments of the militarist leaders of Germany published in the United States appeared recently in the Philadelphia Ledger under the heading of "Mene, Mene, Tekel Upharsin." It was as follows:

The handwriting is on the wall for German militarism; the mighty war empire has been weighed in the balances and found wanting; the vast superstructure of militarism built at infinite cost is falling because it rested upon a flawed foundation. Of all the terrible pages that history has chronicled this is the most awful; that a people who possessed a superlative capacity for abstract thought, for scientific investigation, for music and poetry, for commercial dominion and for the domestic arts should have been wrecked on the false assumption of militaristic supremacy propagated by a despotic aristocracy. The people are not to blame; for the mass of German men and women, gentle, peaceable, thrifty, industrious and ingenious, the world at large has nothing but sympathy. They have been blinded and misled by a sinister caste of war-crazed aristocrats, whose prestige and place of power could be upheld only by infecting the nation with their own virus.

"And the pity of it is that a million blameless and useful lives must be sacrificed before these caste demoniacs can be brought to reason. The great nations of the world are not fighting against the Germans who love to hear Strauss and Wagner, who work in the laboratories in the name of science, who study philosophy in the famous universities, who toil in the factories to produce commodities that all men need, who sail the seas on errands of civilizing commerce, and who walk abroad with their families under the lindens in the cool of the evening. With that Germany there is no quarrel; toward that Germany there is no animosity. But in self-defence, in line with every conclusion of logical thought and by virtue of every instinct and intuition of human right, the nations were compelled to take up arms to crush Prussian militarism. And they must remain in arms, at whatever cost until that dragon is crushed.

"None dare say that the real, deep soul of Germany revealed itself when the wheels of the ruthless machine rolled over Belgium and left its ghastly trail of crushed and rent humanity; or when the chaste and rich beauty of Rheims Cathedral, that symphony in stone, was battered to dust; or when the bloody Moslems were incited to a holy war to butcher Christians; or when the rules of civilized warfare were abandoned and quiet British seaside resorts and holy shrines were shelled without the prescribed notice. These were the deeds of a blood-drunk caste, that by a pseudo-patriotism had harnessed a noble race to its chariot. The sane nations of the world cannot, must not, halt until that militaristic ogre is shorn of its power and the real soul of Germany is restored to its rights. Great Britain, France, Belgium and Russia are now fighting, not for themselves, alone, but for the redemption of the Germany that all men honour from the military caste that mankind abhors.

On the East, on the South and on the West the blood-lust leaders have flung their deluded millions upon unbending lines of steel, martyrs to the glorification of Mars. Slowly but irresistibly that inflexible line is closing in upon the decimated ranks of the deluded. And all because the blood-drunk militarists are too proud and too fearful of their feudal tenure to acknowledge that the fighting machine has failed. The Kaiser knows it, and the knowledge has sickened him. All the world knows it, but the holocaust must go on if only on the gambler's chance of saving the prestige of the caste in a desperate defensive struggle. If the real German people realized the truth as everyone else realizes it, a new and glorious democracy would rise out of the ashes of the old Prussian despotism."

MORALE COUNTS FOR MUCH

Long Range Fighting Harder to Endure Than a Charge

Thoughtthinking are apt to argue that victory must always rest with the bigger and better-armed force. That is by no means the case. An obvious superiority in numbers or in weapons may, indeed, mean the submission of the enemy, may shake his nerves, and so bring him to the knee; but it is rare for one side to be so vastly ahead of the other that it is bound to win. The matter becomes, then, one of individuality. Morale, to use a word, is everything.

A very famous English leader told once of the bravest man he ever knew. He was an officer, and he confessed openly that he never went into a fight without fear. But—when his men lay flat before a hail of bullets, he knelt; when they knelt, he stood; and he was ever in the charge. That is the true hero; the man with imagination to know what he faces, and with the courage to see things through to the end. "The assault and the hand-to-hand fight are not what frighten a soldier, whether he be inexperienced or no," Colonel de Grandmaison wrote: "What makes most impression on him is the long-range fight, because it is still the unknown—an enemy one does not see, projectiles that arrive from heaven knows where. One cannot struggle with this invisible enemy; the danger is immense, and is not to be measured; it drags itself out into long hours, and is accompanied by the most horrible din, which produces a violent reaction on the nervous system."

PUNISHING COWARDICE

Punishment for cowardice in the German army at the time of the Thirty Years' War was so severe as to be ferocious. In the year 1642 the Swedish General Torstensson stormed Leipsig. A force under the command of the Grand Duke Leopold gave him battle before the gates of the city, but during the engagement the Madlonische regiment became suddenly panic-stricken and fled.

Punishment immediately followed. When the regiment was again assembled, six other regiments surrounded it and tried it by court martial in the open field. The verdict was that the colonel and the captains should die by the sword, and that every tenth man among the non-commissioned officers and men should be hanged.

The stern verdict was carried out to the letter, except that at the request of Leopold the men were shot instead of hanged; Colonel George Madlonische was beheaded, after he had sought in vain for a pardon. The survivors were consigned to quarters with other commands, and the regiment never regained its name or former prestige. In those days there was no alternative but to be brave. Cowardice meant either death or everlasting disgrace.

Poor Shooting Spoiled the Drink

Here is a humorous touch from the letter of a Dublin Fusilier:

"At one point of the line German and French troops were not more than one hundred yards apart. They could hear each other talk; and sometimes talked to each other. One day a cow strayed between the lines. Both sides wanted milk. They agreed whoever hit a horn first would be let milk the cow. The first shot came from the German lines. And as usual, it killed the cow."

Pretty soon the woman burst out again:

"If you were my husband I'd give you poison."

MAKING PROGRESS

NAVAL GUNS AID TROOPS

PARIS, Dec. 26.—The Franco-Belgian advance along the sand dunes of the Belgian littoral is developing remarkable strength.

Though the official communique issued from the War Office last night confines itself to the bare statement that "some progress has been made before Nieuport," it is permissible to add that this movement is the most significant of the operations on the left wing of the allies.

Upon the ability of the allies to maintain the commanding position along this stretch of the coast depends the success of the turning movement against the right flank of the "Wurttembergers" under Grand Duke Albrecht when the allies' numerical strength shall warrant their assumption of the violent offensive designed to clear Belgium of the invaders.

While the British ships are maintaining a vigorous cannonading of the coastal positions of the Germans, upon the French and Belgian infantry devolves the task of burrowing among the dunes and keeping the Germans stirred up by close contact to such an extent that they will find it difficult to establish themselves firmly in adequate defensive positions. This they are doing with remarkable success.

The German resistance has been stubborn but ineffective, mainly because of the flanking fire of the British long-range naval guns, which tear into every line of works they erect and scatter their forces, while keeping the German guns on the move.

The following official communication was issued by the War Office last night:—

"Slight progress has been made in front of Nieuport. Towards Notre Dame De Lorette, north of Lens, an attack by the enemy has been repulsed.

"This morning we captured another trench near Puisaleine, and we have been able to hold it, notwithstanding several counter-attacks.

"Last night the enemy made a vigorous attack on La Tete De Faux, in the Vosges, but without success.

"In Belgium there have been intermittent artillery battles.

"From the Lys to the Oise on the evening of Dec. 23 we gained the fork of the roads from Loos to Rutoire and from Loos to Vermelles.

"To the northeast of Albert we took possession of a portion of the village of La Boisselle, situated to the southwest of the church, and of an advanced trench to the south of that village.

"To the north from Roye to Lihu, near Lihons, we also have made some progress. These various attacks, undertaken with great spirit, have everywhere conserved the ground already gained.

"To the south of the Oise our artillery has demolished the defence works of the enemy in the region of Bailly and on the plateau of Gouvrom.

"On the Aisne and in Champagne there have been artillery battles and several German attacks have been repulsed. To the north of Supignul (near Berry-Au-Bac) a slight advance of our troops has been followed, and there has been a strong counter-attack which has completely failed.

"In the region of Perthes and Mesnil-Le-Hurlus our progress of previous days has been followed up and strengthened. To the north of Mesnil we took possession of a forest strongly prepared by the enemy, and to the east of trenches captured by us on Dec. 23. To the northwest of Mesnil and to the east of Perthes we have driven the enemy from the fragments of trenches which he re-occupied, and we are now masters of all his first line of defence.

"In the Argonne, in the forest of La Grurie, at Bagatelle, Fountain Madame and Saint Hubert we repulsed five attacks and strengthened our front. Between the Argonne and the Meuse, in spite of the snow and the fog, we have made progress on the Bourenille-Vauquois front.

"In the region of Cuisy and the forest of Forges our heavy artillery, by subduing the batteries and machine guns of the enemy, has enabled our infantry to make a leap in advance.

"On the right bank of the Meuse the Germans have bombarded the south corner of the forest of Consenvoye, where we are established. In the forest of Ailly and Apremont our artillery has forced the enemy to evacuate several trenches.

"In the lower Vosges we have advanced to within 1,500 metres of Ciroy on the Vesouze river."

AEROPLANE IS ROUTED.

British Machine Drives Off German Craft Over Sheerness.

LONDON, Dec. 26—The War Office issued the following last night:—

"A hostile aeroplane was sighted yesterday at 12.55. It was flying very high, from east to west, over Sheerness. British air craft went up in pursuit and engaged the enemy, who, after being hit three or four times, was driven off seaward."

The machine sighted over Sheerness was traveling at high speed from the east directly toward London. At the rate it was traveling it must have reached London in less than half an hour more.

Naval lookouts at Sheerness sighted the hostile flyer at a great height, and a British machine was sent up to intercept it.

A battle in the air followed, in which the British aviator hit the enemy's machine three or four times. After a sharp engagement the raider was driven eastward over the sea, with the British flyer in pursuit.

The British machine was not prepared for a long flight, and after making sure that the German was retreating and that there was no further danger of his completing his plans for a raid on the capital, the English aviator returned to Sheerness.

At first it was thought the German was intent upon dropping bombs on the naval arsenal at Sheerness or on some of the British warships anchored there. But the height at which he was flying and the speed he was making to the westward soon made it clear that he was making for an inland objective.

The Central News received a despatch from Southend-on-Sea shortly after the official announcement was made, stating that two foreign aeroplanes were sighted off Southend flying at a height of 5,000 feet, and at great speed. They were fired upon, the despatch states, but made off.

This unofficial report is believed to concern the German raider and his British pursuer, as Southend-on-Sea is just across the Thames from Sheerness.

MANY BOMBS USED.

Germans Employ Them as Part of Trench Warfare.

LONDON, Dec. 26. — Col. E. D. Swinton, attached to Field Marshal Sir John French's staff as official "eye-witness" of the British expeditionary force in France and Belgium, sends the following narrative of events supplementing and continuing that furnished to include the activities of Dec. 13. The narrative, which is dated Dec. 21, is in part:

"The Germans are making determined efforts to regain the ground they have lost, and by sheer weight of numbers they have partially succeeded.

"After one of our attacks on the 18th, made in the centre of the line, there occurred an innovation in our relations with the enemy. A kind of armistice was concluded in order to permit the burying of the dead on both sides.

"The employment of bombs has undoubtedly been the chief feature of the recent action. The throwing of large bombs from trench mortars and similar smaller missiles from rifles or by hand has now become general all along the line.

"When the fighting reaches the stage of trench warfare at short range weapons, which cannot be used with safety owing to the propinquity to each other of the front lines of either side.

"The great use made by the Germans of these engines of destruction is only one sign of the reliance they place upon every possible means of helping their infantry and artillery in the bombardment of their enemy's positions.

Credit To His Family.

PARIS, Dec. 26.—Among officers mentioned in despatches from the front is Major Halda De Lys, a descendant of the family in which Joan of Arc belonged, who commanded a battalion of 168,000 infantry regiment with the greatest bravery and utter disdain of danger from Oct. 10 to Nov. 9. He is recorded in the official journal as an officer of the greatest value.

Liebknecht Forced Into Army.

PARIS, Dec. 26.—Dr. Karl Liebneickt, the German Socialist leader, who was the only member to vote against the war credit at the recent session of the Reichstag, has been enrolled in the German army, according to a despatch to Humanarian on the Swiss frontier. This movement was decided upon, says the despatch, after his protest against war in the Reichstag as the best means to stop his opposition, a trial on a charge of high treason being considered too dangerous an expedient.

COULD NOT SLEEP OR DO HOUSEWORK

The Grippe Left Mrs. Findley in Such a Weak, Nervous Condition That Her Case Was Serious.

Severy, Kans.—"The Grippe left me in a very weak, nervous, run-down condition. I was too weak to do my housework and could not sleep. I tried different medicines without benefit and finally one day read about Vinol, and decided to try it. In a very short time I could see an improvement and after taking five bottles I have a good appetite and my health and strength was restored.

"I think Vinol is a grand medicine and every weak, nervous, run-down woman should take it."—Mrs. Geo. Findley, Severy, Kans.

Vinol creates strength because it contains all the medicinal tissue-building elements of cod liver oil actually taken from fresh, healthy cods' livers. To this is added peptonate of iron, a most essential element for the blood, all dissolved in delicious tonic native wine.

Vinol creates an appetite, aids digestion, adds pure healthy blood. In this natural manner it builds up the run-down, weak and nervous system, relieves weakness with strength. If Vinol fails to create strength after sickness we will return your money.

Indian Prince Dead.

LONDON, Dec. 26. — A telegram from Calcutta announces the death of his highness Sidkang Tulku, Maharajah of Sikkim, in the eastern Himmiayas. He succeeded his father, the late Sir Thotub Mangyal, only a few months ago.

Sidkang was the first ruler of his remote state to come in direct contact with western civilization. He spent two years at Oxford University and afterwards traveled extensively with an English political officer. At the opening of the present war he expressed a desire to be of any service possible to the British Government.

Sir Robert Off For Winnipeg.

OTTAWA, Dec. 26. — Sir Robert and Lady Borden, after spending Christmas quietly at their home in Ottawa, left on the midnight train for Winnipeg, where the Premier will address the Canadian Club on Monday afternoon.

Sir Wilfrid and Lady Laurier also spent the day in Ottawa.

SHOULD FEEL GRATEFUL

Canadian farmers should feel grateful that they are escaping the direct devastation of the awful struggle now convulsing Europe. But they cannot escape the effects of the commercial depression which will inevitably follow the carnage and waste of to-day. Temporary inflation of prices for certain commodities will disguise or mitigate these effects and lighten the burden for us in comparison with those living nearer the seat of war. But this inflation should not blind us to the evil consequences which are sure to follow the destruction of life and property, and the wholesale abandonment of productive industry. Fruit dealers are even now feeling the pinch caused by the falling off in demand, and this is merely a sample of what will generally happen when the waste of the present has to be made good. The world is only a neighborhood to-day and what damages one part damages the whole and, incidentally, every other part. Nature has so ordained it and Nature's laws cannot be violated with impunity.

It has been estimated that at least twelve million able bodied men are now engaged in the titanic European struggle. At a very moderate estimate this involves the loss of $25,000,000 a day in productive power. Moreover, the actual cost of operations has been estimated at $50,000,000 a day, not to speak of the destruction of life and property. All told the total waste cannot be less than $100,000,000 a day. To make good this waste in the future industry of Europe, production must overtake and exceed consumption and lessen the effective demand of Europe for commodities from abroad. Commerce generally will have received a staggering blow, from which it will take a long time to recover.

Realising that strict economy is not now so much a matter of choice as of necessity the word has gone forth everywhere to economize. The consumption of luxuries must, or should, decrease very markedly, and labor must, or should, be diverted towards supplying the more normal wants of mankind. Admitting that the Canadian farmer will feel the burden as lightly as anyone, and much more lightly than his brother workers in Europe, it is still incumbent on him to exercise the strictest economy in his business. The future condition of industry and commerce is problematical. We hope for the best, for a speedy termination of the strife. It is wisdom, however, to be prepared for the worst, and it is for this reason that, at the present time, the United Farmers' Cooperative Company presents its claim for general support by the farmers of Ontario. Designed to serve and not to exploit; under absolutely democratic management of the farmers themselves, this company can be made the means of effecting great economies in all lines of business, providing that farmers generally will use it for their business transactions. Everyone knows that "Union is Strength." The greater the number of farmers who do business through their own cooperative organization, the greater and more varied this business is, so much the greater will be the advantage of the central office in negotiating terms of sale and purchase. The degree of service rendered by The United Farmers' Cooperative Company will depend upon the foresight and loyalty of the farmers themselves.

A MILITARY CHRISTMAS.

Holiday In England Marked by Khaki on All Sides.

LONDON, Dec. 26.—Christmas of 1914 will long be remembered in Great Britain as a military Christmas. Everywhere throughout the islands men in khaki and in blue were the object of attention and admiration. There was a great decrease in the customary railway crowds of civilians visiting their homes for family reunions, but almost the usual number of trains was running. The cars were filled with soldiers and sailors taking a brief leave to visit their families and all were traveling on free passes. Many thousands of volunteers from the training camps and a considerable contingent from the continent and the fleet had two or three days for a holiday at their homes, and the whole country seemed to swarm with uniforms.

London particularly was full of soldiers. Conspicuous among them were several thousand Canadians from Salisbury Plain. Christmas in London is Sabbath-like because all the theatres are closed and the hotels and public houses keep Sunday hours.

TO KEEP UP EFFORTS.

Pope Benedict Will Endeavor to Suppress Sacrifice of Life.

ROME, Dec. 26. — Pope Benedict received the members of the Sacred College in solemn audience for the exchange of Christmas greetings on Thursday, the ceremony taking on the pomp of Pope Leo.

Addressing the cardinals, the pontiff expressed his regret at the absence of some of the prelates owing to illness, referring especially to Cardinals Agliardi and Martinelli. He added that the last news regarding the health of Cardinal Agliardi made it apparent that his recovery would be speedy.

The Pope then enumerated the efforts he had made to render the war less terrible, and said that he would continue to devote all his energies to the suppression or limitation of the inhuman sacrifices of life.

TO CO-OPERATE

G. A. Brethen, Peterboro Co., Ont.

The time has come when our farmers are ready to cooperate. In the past the movement has been retarded by ignorance, but our farmers are ready to-day as never before, and are watching the trend of the times. They see the need of working together.

In our Belleville District Holstein Breeders' Club, the spirit of fraternity has grown, until it is a noticeable feature in all our club work. In working together we have found that our interests are mutual, and this has resulted in more and more harmonious work. We have received satisfactory prices and derived benefits that could not have been obtained had we not cooperated. Not only have the breeders been satisfied, but the buyers as well. Through our cooperative sales they have more animals to choose from than would otherwise be possible.

We have found that by dropping our prejudices we have been able to work together to our mutual advantage. Let us extend this movement and hasten the day when "none are for the party, but all for the State."

"Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done."—Luke xxii., 42.

One morning she was in the Spring-nook, where the shade was cool and restful, and the mosses deep and soft. But she was weary and discouraged, her heart aching with sorrow and disappointment, her life a long question: "Why did God allow some to suffer so much?"

She felt hopeless. Whatever efforts she might make, nothing seemed to be of any avail. Oh! if she could only give up and just lie down there in that restful spot and sleep her life away! She knew not where to turn for comfort and help.

Sitting there, she looked into the cool, deep spring at the foot of the moss-covered boulder on which she was sitting. How pure it was! Listlessly, she was so tired, she glanced around the edge till her eye rested on the spot from which the water was trickling out musically. How dark, dark, the earth was! How long had the water been making its way through that black soil before it came out into the clear depths into which she was now intently gazing Was this God's way of purifying that water? Was this God's way of purifying her character, that through the sorrow and the humiliation she might become stronger and better? Had she been like a little one who, shortly before, she had heard saying: "If you do not let me have it, I will cry hard, hard?"

Sobbing, she knelt down and prayed with a full heart, that God would forgive her for all the worrying and fretting, and help her to realize the vision of the noble life she now saw hers might become. He alone knew what discipline she most needed.—I.H.N.

AVLONA OCCUPIED.

Chief Albanian Port Is Entered By Italian Sailors.

ROME, Dec. 26.—A company of Italian sailors occupied Avlona, a seaport of Albania, on the Adriatic Sea.

Recent despatches from Athens by way of Paris said that anarchy reigned at Avlona and that the region around the Albania seaport was a prey to civil war. Partisans of Kemal Bey last month forced the Government to haul down the Turkish flag and hoist the Albanian colors. Essad Pasha, the commander-in-chief of the Turkish forces in Albania, then sent 500 soldiers to Avlona and they disarmed the inhabitants and restored the Turkish flag.

Italian naval forces occupied Avlona on Oct. 26, but the expedition was in the nature of a relief and sanitary organization which purposed to aid the large population which had taken refuge in the city to escape the persecutions of the insurgents. Everything was done by the Italian Government to remove from the expedition anything savoring of political or territorial occupation.

Landslide Buried Italian Town.

ROME, Dec. 26. — Heavy rains caused a landslide Sunday at Valbontone, a city of about four thousand inhabitants, 30 miles southeast of Rome. Part of the city was covered by the landslide and many buildings collapsed. Forty persons were buried beneath the ruins.

In the surrounding country the rivers have overflowed their banks, causing large losses to property.

A QESTION

Institute Lecturer, Brant Co., Ont.

I have before me a letter from a young farmer with whom I talked for a few minutes after one of my Institute addresses last winter. He asks me what I consider the best dairy breed, as he is thinking of starting into pure-breds. He also inquires as to some calves which I have for sale.

His is an easy question to answer. I did not advise him to adopt the breed with which I myself have made a success. I told him to take the one most common in his own community—an easy thing to determine in the community in which that young man lives.

Perhaps the greatest advantage of a community breed comes in the marketing. The value of community breeding for this purpose was brought home very strongly to me in Peterboro county a few years ago. An old gentleman who had been in Shorthorns in the early days of the breed in this country told me of his experience. He had established a good herd, but a market was not to be found. There were no other pure-bred herds within many miles of him, and buyers did not care to come to inspect his stock when other herds could not be inspected at the same time. "I had better stock than some of the fellows down in Ontario county," said this old gentleman, "but my venture failed because I did not have neighbors who had good stock. I see that quite plainly now."

I would also advise this young man to go into the breed most common in this community, because he will then have a better opportunity to improve his stock by the interchanging of sires and also by being in closer touch with what other breeders are doing, being in a better position to pick up stock reasonably. Where community breeding is practised neighbors have an opportunity to talk over their problems together and to help each other in the marketing problem.

Had this young man lived in a section where there were no pure-bred stock, this question would have been more difficult to answer. During the last few years, however, a new factor has entered the marketing field—advertising. In that case I would have advised this young man to select the breed that he liked best and then secure his market through judicious farm journal advertising. I believe so thoroughly in the economy of the pure-bred dairy cow that I would advise getting into a pure breed, even if it were only for the more efficient production of milk or cream.

Radway's Ready Relief

Mrs. J. Westervelt of Paterson, N. J., writes: "I have a large family of small children, and it has saved me many a doctor's bill. A few drops sore throat it is a king over that. My little girl has sprained her ankle and is running around fine without any other doctor than Radway's Ready Relief."

CURES SORE THROAT

Apply the Relief to the throat and chest until the surface smarts and reddens. Give Radway's Pills in such doses as will freely move the bowels. For a sudden cold, take a full of Relief with a teaspoonful of sugar, in a tumbler of hot water. Retire at once to bed. A profuse perspiration will break out, and in the morning the cold will be gone.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

The Nominations Will Be Held On Monday

About One Hundred Citizens Including a Few Students of Municipal Affairs Will Turn Out to Hear the Maiden Speeches of the Candidates.

Monday will be nomination day. At the hour of 10 o'clock there will assemble in the City Council Chamber, a gathering of municipal celebrities and students of civic government. The latter resemble ward politicians in that they lay claim to a prophetic vision which furnishes the motive power for the election forecasts they are destined to make. At the same hour Mr. S. R. Armstrong, City Clerk of this great and growing municipality, will call for nominations. Then the nominators will step forth, and if they have not already done so, will attach their signatures to the documentary evidence of their intention. Should they represent ex-aldermen who are seeking re-election, they will be accompanied by their nominees, whose radiating countenances and extended hand will be exposed to destiny. If the nominators are alone, it is safe to assume that they are acting in the interests of those who are seeking municipal honours for the first time. The latter invariably take the stand that it is better policy to remain in the background, or in other words, clothe their ambition in a cloak of affected indifference. This cannot be said of the mayoralty candidates. The slat benches in the gallery will contain a few citizens who will want to hear what the prospective Mayor has to say. Should there be only two candidates, which is likely to be the case this year, it is reasonable I suppose that the speech of the present office holder will be a resume of services rendered and of the other, a dissertation on good government, followed in each case by an appeal for the support of the electorate.

The Speeches.

The oratory is suppressed until the close of the hour for receiving nominations. Then a general invitation is extended to all comers. The nominations for Mayor, Board of Education and Public Utilities Commission take place in the Council Chamber between the hours of ten and eleven o'clock, and for aldermen, between eleven and twelve o'clock. The latter are held in each of the five wards. The formality, in its integral form, lacks ostentation. A very small representation of citizens turns out to witness the proceedings or hear the speeches of the candidates. In fact it is not until the election cards, soliciting the "vote and influence" of the electors that a great many citizens awaken to the knowledge that a municipal election is pending and that they are required to cast their vote for good government and responsible administration of civic affairs. The forthcoming elections doubtless will occasion less activity and concern than is usually the case.

FRENCH ATTACK METZ.

Bombardment of German City Is Begun at Last.

LONDON, Dec. 26. — The Times publishes the following from Paris:—

"I have it on good authority that the French have carried the Bois-les-Tetre, northwest of Pont-a-Mousson, and have begun to bombard the forts of Metz.

"'Bois-les-Tetre, which covers the heights just north of the road leading to Pont-a-Mousson at St. Mihiel, has been held in great part by the Germans for many weeks, but several recent communiques have mentioned that the French were making progress there.

"The capture of this wood brings the French up to the Norrey Ridge, which is within range of the nearest of the Metz forts, particularly that of St. Blaise, which is almost on the frontier and dominates the village of Pagny-sur-Moselle.

"Several weeks ago the French pushed forward and endeavored to cut the communications of the German army at St. Mihiel by blowing to pieces the station at Arnaville, where the branch line to Thiancourt begins."

TURKS ARE NERVOUS.

They Are Preparing To Move Capital From Constantinople.

LONDON, Dec. 26. — A despatch from Athens says: "Travelers reaching here from Constantinople report that Turkish recruits are removing the state archives to an inland place of safety."

This despatch is significant, following, as it does, reports of uneasiness in official circles in Constantinople regarding bombardment of the Dardanelles forts and the sinking of the battleship Messudieh by a British submarine. Twenty Turks and ten Germans were tried by court-martial in connection with the loss of the battleship, three being sentenced to death.

Italy Cautious About Passports.

OTTAWA, Dec. 26. — Hon. J. G. Foster, American consul-general for Canada, has been advised by the State Department at Washington that citizens of the United States who are leaving for points in Italy must have their passports vised by United States diplomatic or consular agents. The telegram from the Department received Thursday also states that the same procedure is advisable in regard to departures for any other European country.

WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A CHAPLAIN AT THE FRONT

Heroic Clergymen Bury the Dead in the Trenches While German Shells Burst Around Them--Local Rector Hears From Two Church of England Chaplains With the British Army.

Many people think that the work of chaplains in times of war is comparably easy, that they have only to minister to the sick and wounded at the hospitals, some miles away from the front. The following two letters written by two Church of England chaplains now serving at the front, will give our readers a fair idea of the hardships and the dangers they have to face, while in the execution of their sacred duties. The extracts from their letters were handed to the Examiner by a local Church of England clergyman.

Nuhmber 1 chaplain writes as follows:

"The weather is pretty bad just now — continuous rain and a gale blowing. On Sunday we had snow as well. I had a service of Holy Communion in a barn early, and the men crowded in and sat around me on straw and when the door space was used up they climbed up on piles of straw and got into all sorts of corners right up to the roof. You can imagine the difficulty of such a service under these conditions.

Later, I had another little service—Matins this time—in the same barn, and the place was packed, the men climbing up and filling every corner and using hurricane lamps, which were hung in all the dark spots round the corners of the piled up straw and hay. The only daylight coming in through the barn door was near where I stood. Many men unable to crowd in, stood in the rain and snow outside. It was a wonderful time and a most delightful service, the men singing the old hymns as if they really meant every word.

After this I mounted my horse, putting my robes into my saddle-bag, and the Holy Communion vessels into my saddle wallets, with my horse's nose bag full of hymn books strapped on to my saddle also, and started off five miles to hold a service for some gunners. But they had no proper place for a service, the field they were in being a perfect bog, and the cottages in which they were billeted not affording space for a service. However, we held Holy Communion in one of the cottages.

I next went on three miles to where some cavalry were supposed to be, but found they had moved early in the morning, so I then turned homewards to my own lines once more, and a horrible, wet ride it was, with snow and rain alternately and a heavy gale blowing.

Such is the kind of Sunday one gets a times, but often enough Sundays sees nothing but heavy fighting, and one just makes use of any time that may come for a service of some kind.

One's work is pretty gruesome at times, and especially if one tries to carry out a burial as decently as possible. I had to bury four poor fellows, all of whom I know, the other day when a big fight was in progress, and even had to compose the bodies which had been left in the trenches for some eight or nine hours before we could get them, and then, with the help of one orderly I sewed them into blankets with the aid of only a pocket knife and some string. Forgive these details, but it may help you to understand something of what it means to be a chaplain at the front. All this was done while the enemy's shells and "black Maries" were bursting about us, and at the actual service itself one never knew if the burial party would get through untouched."

Chaplain Number 2 writes:

"We had just got settled in a farm some two miles behind the firing line when an engagement began and at night we brought in the wounded. The kitchen was turned into an operating theatre. We had fifty-six brought in. . . . I cannot do much, but I sometimes help to cut away a wounded man's clothes; sometimes do things for those who cannot do anything for themselves. Sometimes see that the wounded get Bovril or blankets; sometimes get them cigarettes (the first thing a man asks for); sometimes have a prayer; sometimes am able to make them realize God's mercy in saving them from worse wounds and bringing them through such dangers. The men are not with us long for me to do much more.

This evening we had a terrible night attack. We were warned to expect it, and strong reinforcements had been sent here, and our men, who had been here three days, had well dug themselves in. . . . Yesterday morning, I had to bury five who had died of their wounds, and at night after dark, I had to go up to the front trench to bury five more. It was most solemn. A night attack was expected again, so I had to be brief, and owing to the danger no lights were allowed. The officer had an electric torch, and we screened it with our caps and knelt around the grave while I read very short services."

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. bear, Port Planford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her, and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

ABOUT KITCHENER

LAKENHEATH, Eng., Dec. 24.—A visit to Lakenheath, the aancestral home of the Kitcheners, impresses one with the facts that Lord Kitchener is not an Irishman, but a Suffolk man, and that war and rumours of war have very little significance or importance in the free, hard air if the English countryside.

One reaches Lakenheath from London in a couple of hours. The village is a sleepy old Suffolk town, in the midst of the fens—a city of one street, one church, one inn, one graveyard, but with a profusion of farm land and farm animals, and an almost Dutch abundance of whirring windmills.

This is Kitchener's country. For Kitchener, like the Duke of Wellington, is called an Irishman merely by the accident of birth. He was born in Ireland because his father happened to be stationed there at the time. He is really of old Suffolk yeoman stock, as may be easily proped by pointing to the eleven Kitcheners gravestones in the Lakenheath churchyard.

Lakenheath is hardly what one would call an up-to-the-minute town. It is frankly, proudly, "slow." It talks the Suffolk dialect. It shares with thousands of exactly similar agricultural villages in Britain a leisurely contempt for what goes on in the outside world.

In the inn, they discuss the war as they discuss all subjects, but in a far-off, detached way. There is no doubting their patriotism, firm and solid, unquestioning patriotism, and the town has furnished its share of recruits as it has for every war since the beginning of things.

The old Kitchener house is a half-mile or so up the moor road from the Half Moon Inn. It is a small, decrepit, old farmhouse, now labelled the "Rookery." It is of brick and cobble, with the regulation four white windows in front, and a smaller false window frowning down from over the door. Behind is the farmyard, crowded with geese and chickens and a cow and a dog. For over two hundred years that house and farmstead was the home of Lord Kitchener's forebears. On his mother's side, he is a Chevallier, a family of long standing in Suffolk, despite the French name.

In the churchyard, which has recently been repaired and restored at Lord Kitchener's expense, the Kitchener graves occupy a prominent place. There are no elaborate monuments—they have plain mossy markers at head and foot, the same as the other village dead.

The first Kitchener's inscription is as follows:

"Here lyeth the body of Thomas Kitchener, who came from Binsted in Hampshire, in the year 1693, an agent to ye Honble Sir Nicholas Stuart, Bart., and departed this life April ye 5th, 1731, aged 65 years."

He was Lord Kitchener's thrice-great grandfather.

By his side lies John Kitchener, his son, who is honoured with a poetic epitaph:

"Stay, mortal, and depart not from my stone,
But stand and ponder well where I am gone;
Death quickly took my sense and strength away
And laid me down in this dark bed of clay;
The grave that is made next may chance be thine,
Consider of it and take home this line."

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Y.M.C.A. building was open all day Christmas except from 12 to 2 and 5 to 7. The bowling alleys and the social rooms were well filled and the new skating rink was occuupied all day. Each member of the employed staff served three hours and had balance of the holiday to himself, and thus by following the system of three hour relays the building was kept under the right supervision.

Next week will be an unusually busy period for the Association, being the second holiday week for the school boys. Every member of the staff has his hands full to keep the young boys and young men occupied. Many special plans must be kept in operation all the time.

The Life Problem Club Sunday afternoon at 4.15 o'clock will be addressed by Mr. J. M. Lang, of Toronto, a former well known Peterborough boy. Every young man is invited to hear Mr. Lang.

The senior Bible class will be omitted Monday evening next, but will resume duties on the first Monday in January.

A Cleveland inventor's drill holder is so formed that when a drill has been sunk to a desired depth, the holder will make a countersunk hole.

GRAND HOLIDAY ATTRACTION AT THE "EMPIRE"

Highest Standard of Pictures To Be Produced—See Carlyle Blackwell In "The Spitfire"

The management of the Empire Theatre, Charlotte street, are providing a great bill of fare for next week. Amusement lovers will be delighted to learn that the highest standard of pictures will be reeled off Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday next, in which some of the greatest theatrical stars of the day will be presented. On Monday the four-real version of "The Spitfire" will be the absorbing dramatic production. "The Spitfire" tells this story:

"Bruce Morson, a young American, returning from travels in Egypt, is robbed of some valuable jewels in a London hotel, and chases the thieves to the yacht, "Spitfire," at Calais, which the crooks have boarded and taken command of under forged orders from its owner, Marcus Girard, who is in London. The yacht is just about to sail out of port, but by a ruse, Morson manages to get aboard, and promptly falls in love with Valda, Girard's pretty daughter, who is also a "spitfire." The crooks tell Valda her father is a smuggler, show her the jewels they have stolen, and convince her they are guarding them for her father, and that Morson is a customs officer, spying upon her in order to trap Girard. Valda indignantly turns upon the helpless Morson, orders him into seaman's costume, and compels him to work his passage to New York. On the homeward voyage, Morson undergoes many ordeals, both humourous and dramatic, and is even finally accused of the theft of his own property, before the final denouement, which shows the burning of the yacht and the heroic rescue of Valda by Morson, who is at last able to right himself, baffle the thieves, and win the woman he loves."

POUNDING THE DRESDEN.

British Cruiser Newcastle Heard Cannonading Off Chile.

VALPARAISO, Dec. 26.—A wireless message from the Chilean torpedo gunboat Tome reports the British cruiser Newcastle cannonading fifteen miles from Valparaiso. It is supposed that she has engaged the German cruiser Dresden and converted cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich.

A British squadron and Japanese warships are known to be cruising not far from this port.

The Dresden, the only survivor of the German squadron, of five warships defeated off the Falkland Islands, by Sir Frederick Sturdee's squadron, was reported several days ago to have left Punta Arenas with the British cruiser Bristol in pursuit. Other British warships that took part in the battle stopped at Valparaiso a few days ago.

Wheat Stock Seized.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., Dec. 26. — The Government has seized the entire stock of wheat of New South Wales, excepting the amount needed for seed supplies for the farmers. This action is aimed at speculators, who, taking advantage of war conditions, have been seeking to inflate prices. The Government has fixed a price for the wheat of $1.30 per bushel.

RUSSIANS REPORT VICTORIES AT TWO DIFFERENT POINTS

Process of Hurling Huge Numbers on German Lines Northeast of Cracow Fails to Show Result

LONDON, Dec. 26.—Russian successes are reported officially at Petrograd from the battle front before Warsaw, and from that around Cracow, but without materially changing the general situation in these regions. Especially vicious attacks have been made by the Germans between Pinczow, forty miles northeast of Cracow, and Nowemiasto Korczyn, at the junction of the Nida and Vistula Rivers.

In this place the Austrians imitated the tactics of the Germans and tried to force a passage by sheer weight of numbers. Time after time they advanced in solid formation against the Russian front in the face of heavy artillery fire. The net result after two days fighting—Dec. 22 and 23—was the capture by the Russians of nearly five thousand prisoners, including half a hundred officers, and the retention by the Russians of the left bank of the Nida, where they are strongly entrenched.

The combatants here are old enemies. Three months ago the same Austrian troops opposed the first Russian advance on Cracow.

To the north the Russians are holding their own and are inflicting severe punishment on the Germans. A series of energetic attacks at Bolimow, just south of Sochaczew (30 miles from Warsaw), are reported to have been repulsed on the night of the 23rd by vigorous Russian counter attacks, while forty miles further south, at Anovolons, a successful German crossing of the Pilica River was turned into a German reverse through savage attacks by Siberian troops, who forced the invaders back again.

The Russo-Turkish operations have been brought to a standstill by climatic conditions in Asia Minor. Here the Russian troops have spread out, covering all the roads and quartering in the villages in an immense triangle, whose sides converge for 70 miles, with the base on the Russo-Turkish frontier and the apex pointing towards Erzerum.

Clad in every variety of garment to keep warm, including Turkish robes and wide flowing Kurdish coats, the Russians are huddling in every shelter hut and farm house of the Armenians and packing cow sheds, stables and storehouses. Wherever possible the roofs have been cut out, so that bonfires may be safely built within. The sound of battle is rarely heard by the main body of troops, who are wintering on the way to Erzerum. Virtually the only activity is on the part of restless Cossacks, who are forever on the move, engaging in brushes with the opposing cavalry.

"PARIS CAN NO LONGER BE LOOKED UPON AS FRANCE"

Washington, Dec. 26. —France, the wealthy, enlightened, contented garden-land, where want was almost unknown and waste was rare; the strong, thrifty, art-loving France of just before the war, as described with intimate detail and contrasted with the United States, its great sister republic, by Major-General A. W. Grely, United States Army, forms the subject of a statement prepared by the National Geographic Society. It says:

"Paris can no longer be looked upon as France. The repository and guardian of art treasures which in extent, variety, and beauty are elsewhere unsurpassed; enriched with historic material of priceless value; adorned by artistic monuments and noble structures; beautified by broad streets and perfect parks; the centre of culture for the nation; the fashion dictator for the world; the seat of government and so of power; scarcely surpassed elsewhere as a financial centre—Paris at once the envy and admiration of France, as indeed of the world. Still, it is not France.

"The real France is a country of industry, of scientific application, of aforesight and comfort, and of rich resources. General prosperity is best shown by the classes d'epargne (petty banks), which, numbering 2,400, receive only limited sums from its clientele — wage-earners, petty tradesmen, etc The depositors annually increase, in 1911 being 2.17 of the population. Despite the rising standard of living, the accumulations in three small banks had reached $774,405,000, averaging $19.55 to each man, woman and child in France.

"A recent essay by Dr. H. S. Williams treats of the savings of the four leading commercial countries. He says: 'France has the lowest wage-scale and the highest percentage of savings bank depositors, 34.6. America has by far the highest wage-scale and by far the lowest savings bank depositors, 9.9.'

"Vastly beneficial are co-operative operations in agriculture, commerce, trade, insurance, and other lines of public utility. Rural credit, road systems, and workmen's houses are factors of prosperity and producers of comfort. We were wont to pity the down-trodden labourer of Europe in contrast with the free, individual workman at home! Yet the French workman enjoys advantages of no mean order over the American as regards unemployment, employee insurance, compensation for injuries, old-age pensions, and last, but not least, frugal living through low rents, co-operation, and vastly superior market facilities.

"The United States initiated this year its first concerted movement to solve the serious problem of unemployment, by bringing the jobless men to the manless job. France has for years had a Central Employment Bureau, which now numbers 126 well-distributed exchanges. Small individual workshops, fast disappearing with us, increase steadily, though slowly, in France, thus indicating the progress of personal prosperity—the best guarantee of the stability of democracy.

The elimination of religious instruction from the national schools has been pursued to a successful end, though bitterly contested. Of the 5,629,906 pupils in 1909, only 2 per cent. were taught in authorised religious establishments. Primary instruction is obligatory between the ages of 7 and 13. The announced aims of the public school system are to cultivate patriotism, to instill morality, to teach tolerance, to make French language uniform, to develop accurate observation, and to enlarge spheres of interest. Of the 86 technical schools, no less than 57, covering all branches of modern industry, devote their efforts to grounding their 12,000 pupils in the maintenance of artistic standards, in the perfection of methods, and especially to the training of managers."

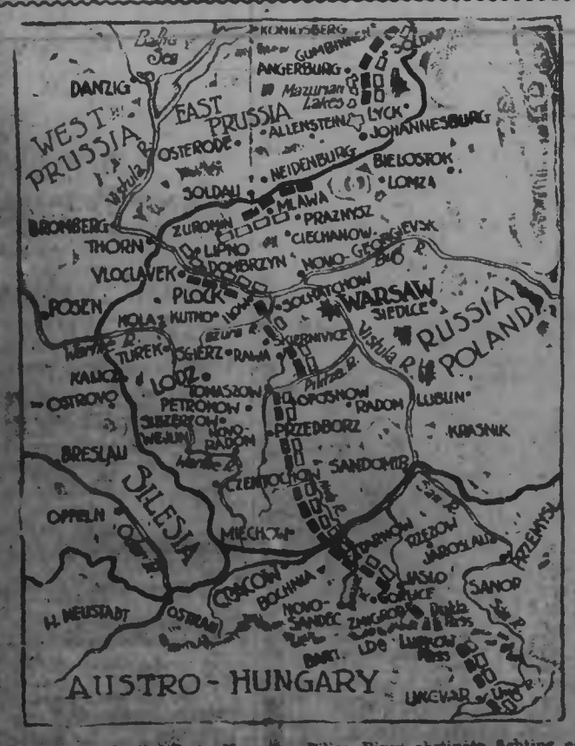
GERMANS MAKE CITY PAY FOR BRITISH BLOCKADE

General Von Hindrich Says Starving Population of City Will Have to Put Up With the Consequences of Closing Off of Germany's Supply of Foodstuffs

PARIS, Dec. 26. — To the many other horrors which the German invasion has brought to the inhabitants of Lille is now to be added that of famine. Citizens of the northern fortress town, which has been in the possession of the Germans for some months and is now destitute of food, have already paid an enormous war tax to the invader. Its textile industries have been ruined and 1,200 of its houses destroyed. M. Charles de la Salle, the heroic Mayor of Lille, who has remained at his post throughout, in an eloquent letter recently addressed to Gen. von Hindrich, German commander, pleaded for relief for his starving fellow-citizens.

In his reply, which was characteristically Prussian and worthy of the Imperial Chancellor himself, Von Hindrich set out to show that if Lille women and children lacked bread, Britain, and not Germany, was to blame. Germany herself, added the commander of Lille, possessed sufficient resources for her army and her civilian population. Britain, in attempting to prevent the arrival of overseas produce with the view of starving out Germany, was but inflicting suffering upon the inhabitants of the occupied towns of France and Belgium. The starving population would have to put up with the consequences, for the German Government would not undertake the feeding of French and Belgian civilians under its jurisdiction so long as Britain closed the seas to the importation of foodstuffs.

Having delivered himself thus, Gen. von Hindrich told the Mayor of Lille that he had better apply for assistance to the Swiss Government, promising that the German Government would support the request to the utmost of its power. If the Mayor refused to seek help from the Swiss Government, then, as far as the German commandant of Lille was concerned, the people of that city were free to starve.



The Situation in the East.—Near the Pilica River obstinate fighting continues, advance having been made by the Russians. South of the Vistula since the Russians won a complete success over the Germans.

Favourable News

LONDON, Dec. 26.—The latest news from the eastern field of operations is favourable to the Russians. The boasted victory of the Germans, which the Berlin school children celebrated by a special holiday, has vanished into thin air, an official despatch from Berlin to-night carefully preparing the German people for the disapointment which they must all feel when the real truth leaks out. The official report diplomatically intimates that "there is no indication in the German or Austrian official report that any marked advantage has been won." On the other hand the despatches from Petrograd show that the German attempts to break through the Russian lines before Warsaw have been everywhere repulsed with terrible slaughter, the enemy being driven beyond his original lines. Conflicting reports, when analyzed, disclose the fact that the Austro-Germanic seesaw manoeuvres between Galicia and Poland, while taxing all the military resources of the Grand Duke, have nowhere met with success.

Russian Official Report.

The official despatch from the Russian Headquarters Staff at Petrograd states:

"Along the Bzura at Zhourow on the night of Dec. 28 considerable forces which had crossed the river were completely defeated by the Russians. One German regiment was almost entirely annihilated, six Maxim guns were abandoned and five officers and 515 men were captured.

"During the whole day of December 25 the Germans delivered energetic attacks in the region of Bolimow (east of Lowicz), but everywhere they were repelled.

"On the banks of the Pilica and in the Lods region and southward there has been very hard fighting, which terminated on December 25 in the successful repulse of the Germans, who had previously crossed the river.

"On the Nida River (southwestern Poland, northeast of Cracow) on December 25 and 26 there were engagements along the whole front, which assumed a very stubborn character between Fislica and Korczyn. We captured north of Pinczow 57 officers and over 4,000 men. To the south of Pinczow we captured eight officers and 600 men.

"South of the Vistula the Russian successes continue. We have captured 1,500 men in that region."

DIET IS DISSOLVED.

Japanese House Refuses To Pass Army Expansion Measures.

TOKIO, Dec. 26.—The Imperial Diet was dissolved yesterday. The House of Representatives rejected the army expansion measures proposed by the Government. This led to the dissolution of the House. The closing session was dramatic in the extreme. The debate extended all through the day and on into the night. The House was unable to compose its differences and there was no sign that the debate was approaching its end, when shortly before 10 o'clock it was announced that Emperor Yoshihiti had exercised his royal prerogative dissolving the Diet.

Considerable opposition developed in the House of Representatives to the budget for 1315, which showed an estimated expenditure of 565,000,000 yen ($278,000,000); and a decrease of the revenues of $40,500,000.

Not Asked for Army.

TOKIO, Dec. 26. — During the course of an interpellation, the Japanese Minister of Foreign Affairs, Takaaka Kato, declared that no country had asked Japan to send an army to Europe.

The War Minister, Lt.-Gen. Oka, said that the Japanese had sent arms to Europe to the value of 10,000,000 yen ($5,000,000).

Cotton For Germany.

GALVESTON, Texas, Dec. 26.—The first cargo of cotton to Germany from the port of Galveston since the European war began, departed yesterday, valued by the shippers at $455,000, and the freight rate, the largest ever paid, being $3 per 100 pounds.

Work Accomplished By The Peterborough Branch of The Industrial Association

Eighty-six Citizens Have Been Provided With Employment ---Appeal Made for Four Hundred More

About three months ago in response to a call from Mayor Hocken of Toronto his Worship Mayor Buller, Alderman Stratton, Mr. V. Eastwood, and Mr. B. D. Hall attended a large and enthusiastic meeting in the City Hall at Toronto, to work out a scheme for lessening or alleviating the unemployment that it was felt was to be expected during this winter. At this meeting the Industrial Association of Ontario was formed, and municipalities were invited to affiliate with the parent body by forming branches in their districts. A meeting of citizens was held in Peterborough when Mr. B. D. Hall was elected Chairman of the local branch with power to choose his own committee of management. This committee, composed of Messrs. R. W. Travers, I. F. Brock, G. C. Gladman, R. J. Soden, Robert Fair, J. J. Hartley and Hugh Robertson met several times and prevailed on the City Council to make a grant of $50 to keep the Association going a month to see if any good would be accomplished.

Eighty-six Positions Secured.

This was about two months ago. At the end of the first month it was found that eighty-six citizens of the City had been secured positions through the Association, and the Council felt that such good work should be encouraged, and so made a further grant of $75 to carry the Association over to the New Year Now that two months have elapsed it is found that one hundred and forty-five persons have been piloted to positions by the energetic Secretary, Mr. Edward Langley and his wife. The Chairman and Committee are deeply pleased with the success of the work which, according to the Secretary of the Central Association, at Toronto, is greater in the Peterborough branch than in any other. To the Secretary, Mr. Langley, is due the credit for placing on an average two and a half men in positions they would probably not have found but for his efforts and with the realization of the great good he and his wife have accomplished this should be to them a very happy Christmas season indeed. To Messrs. Geo. Hardwicke, John Malone, E. N. McWilliams and Robert artshorne who gave a lot of time and attention to the registering of unemployed and so gave the Peterborough Branch a good start, as well as to the Committee who kept it going, a sense of having done something to lessen another's burden will tend to ease their own.

Four Hundred Unemployed.

All that remains to be done is to find work for the remaining four hundred unemployed still unprovided for. These men are anxious for work of any kind for any length of time and if the interior of a house needs repairing or painting or any odd jobs will require to be done within the next year or two and might as well be done now the person giving one of these men such a job to do can acquire the happy feeling that he is in with the crowd boosting a good thing, and doing good work for the old home town.

Preparations Being Made

To Market Quantity of Pulpwood in Havelock and Norwood

An interesting event took place at the Fire station yesterday morning, when Ald. G. Walter Green, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee was presented with a very handsome silver topped, black mahogany cane from the members of the Fire Department. Ald. Green has been most kind to the men of the brigade, showing his interest in many ways since he has been chairman of the committee and the men took advantage of the Christmastide to show their appreciation by making the presentation. Chief Howard read the address and the presentation was made by Asst.-Chief Jamieson.

Fire Ruins Western Fair Building.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 26.—Fire originating from an overheated roast yesterday morning completely gutted the main grand stand at the Western Fair grounds, where the 18th Battalion of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, is being train for active service. The blaze started in a military cookhouse, and the dining halls beneath the stand, which has a sitting capacity of 5,000 were rendered untenable. The loss is $7,000, fully covered by insurance. The stand will be rebuilt at once and temporary quarters will be provided in the meantime.

No Grain For Animals.

BERLIN, Dec. 26. — (Via London.)—The Norddeutsche Zeitung issued a warning against using grain to feed animals, especially rye, which is needed for breadstuffs. Crown Prince Provides a Present For Every Soldier.

BERLIN, Dec. 26.—(Via London.)—The Crown Prince has issed the following address to his troops in the field:

"The celebration of Christmas in France is in closest contact with the enemy. Such a celebration none of us is likely to forget. I wish for all members of my brave army the blessing of God until we have with the good luck of a dutiful soldier established a peace which we and our beloved fatherland may be proud.

"My grandfather, Crown Prince Frederick William, on Christmas, 1870, sent to every man of his brave army, your fathers and grandfathers, a pipe with his picture. I do the same. May this humble token to my loyal companions in arms be a souvenir of our common Christmas celebration in Germany's greatest days."

"Jacky" Fisher

(By Frederic William Wile, London Correspondent of the Tribune.)

LONDON, Dec. 10.—It was my privilege a few nights ago to call upon the man in whose keeping the destiny of these British Isles may be said to rest—Baron Fisher, First Sea Lord of the Admiralty. "Jacky" Fisher is the name he goes by in the Navy, in which he has served for a round half-century.

Though he is 73 years old, he has celebrated his jubilee of service by re-entering the office from which he retired four years ago.

There is hardly a Briton who does not look upon "Jacky" Fisher—Baron Fisher of Kilverstone is how he is indexed in the "Peerage"—as distinctly and decidedly the man of the hour.

He was recalled from well-deserved rest a month ago, when public opinion in regard to Prince Henry of Battenberg's German origin drove the Prince from the supreme command of British naval strategy.

The man in the street would have preferred a younger man than Baron Fisher as First Sea Lord at the helm in this super-crisis of the Empire's history, but it is recognized that his incomparable experience makes him the logical, indeed the indispensable custodian of as grave a responsibility as rests upon any man in Britain at this moment.

You cannot meet "Jacky" Fisher without instinctively feeling that he is the right sailor in the right place. He received me at his official home, a house which forms the right wing of the big new Admiralty arch as you go through it from Trafalgar Square into the Mall. The First Sea Lord is thus permanently domiciled almost immediately on top of his job, for the Admiralty Buildings are directly across the way, not more than 100 yards distant.

It was on the edge of dinner time when I called, and I expected to find one of the very first men of Britain in immaculate evening dress for the repast. I was doomed to disappointment. "Fighting Jacky" was in a workmanlike navy blue peajacket suit, double-breasted and black buttoned, looking much more like the weather-beaten captain of a Lake Michigan lumber schooner than the real ruler of the King's "na-vee."

He is a man of medium size, stocky, clean-shaven, silver-white haired, sallow complexioned, conveying the impression of long exposure to tropical sun, with eyes of mildest greyish-blue, and a twinkling expression betokening good humour, richly seasoned with reserve force.

The promptness with which I was put at my ease quickly made me realize that the demoralizing influence of the sea had left "Jacky" Fisher, as it leaves almost every sailor man in all navies, utterly without "side."

Not Permitted to Quote.

I am not permitted, for obvious reasons, to quote Baron Fisher. He calls himself a "mole," who prefers to work unseen and unheard, and let results do his talking for him.

I am violating nobody's confidence, however, when I say that you come away from a quarter of an hour with Fisher feeling certain that he views the naval aspect of the great war with complete serenity. A man like him, I imagine, doesn't know the meaning of the word panic, anyhow. I should think a squadron of the Audacious' sister ships might join it in Davy Jones' locker without visibly upsetting this typical old sea dog.

Fisher is not a believer in mystification. I am pretty sure that, if he had his way, the veil of secrecy in which the Audacious affair is still shrouded in Britain would be lifted. He is no more afraid of public opinion than he is of the German fleet.

He took a hand in the titanic chess game in the North Sea after the broad general outlines of the match were laid out, and, not being of a fussy or a quarrelsome nature, he is obviously not disposed to overturn decisions taken with regard to the loss of the Audacious, before he became First Sea Lord.

Assumption of Optimism.

It is an open secret that British naval strategy in the opening weeks of the war was not altogether that which now before Fisher's time, which dates from 1st November only.

Lord Charles Beresford, a frank critic, whose verbal arsenal contains only blunt language, told me the other day that the 8,000 officers and men so far lost by the British Fleet were "murdered" by the Admiralty. He means that adequate measures for their safety should have been taken, not weeks ago, but months and years ago, by provision of fast cruiser and destroyer fleets.

Beresford is not a worshipper at "Jacky" Fisher's shrine. He is, indeed, an outspoken foe of the new First Sea Lord—uses strong language about him on occasion—but "Fighting Charley," gallant veteran as he is, has come to be regarded as a bit of a common scold on naval affairs, and his tirades against men like Winston Churchill and Baron Fisher are taken with several grains of salt.

Glad Fisher is Back.

Whatever Beresford thinks, Britain as a whole is glad Fisher is at the head of the naval board. The country feels it nothing short of providential that men, like Fisher and Kitchener have been spared to serve the Empire in this hour.

There is the utmost confidence that not many more weeks will roll by before there will be some exhibitions of the "Fisher touch," which will make the Kaiser and Von Tirpitz and Prince Henry of Prussia and the other men who are running the German navy "sit up."

Churchill Actual Chief.

One of the most important—and difficult—tasks of anybody occupying the post of First Sea Lord at the present time is to get on with Winston Churchill. That remarkably young statesman—just 40 years old on 30th November—is the actual head of the British Navy department. The First Sea Lord is subordinate to the First Lord of the Admiralty—Churchill.

Fisher entered office last month with a reputation for the tact and sagacity necessary to deal amicably with the impetuous and brilliant son of Lady Randolph Churchill.

Churchill has played the game so splendidly well at his end of the Admiralty thus far that there is thought to be no danger that he will "butt in" at the vitally important tactical and strategic end. That is now "up to" Fisher.

If I were a Briton I should not think it worth while worrying for the fraction of a second about a German invasion with "Jacky" on the job.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

SEASON WILL OPEN HERE ON MONDAY

Bowmanville Team Will Try Conclusions With Local Intermediates--Reserved Seat Plan is Now on Sale

Lightning fast ice is a certainty for Monday night's intermediate O.H.A. game with Bowmanville which will open the 1914-15 hockey season. With the teams in good shape and favourable ice conditions the opening game should be productive of much better hockey than is usual so early in the season. With a number of new players for the Peterborough line-up there is keep interest in the team and a big crowd will be out to see the first clash. Bowmanville have a better team than last year and will be dangerous. It should be a rattling good exhibition. The Peterbrough line-up will be announced after to-night's practice The reserved seat plan is on sale at the Morgan Hardware Company's store. The game will start at 8.15 o'clock.

HOCKEY GOSSIP

The local intermediates' practice this evening at 5.30 o'clock in final preparation for their game with Bowmanville on Monday night.

The schedule for next week for the local hockey teams is as follows:
Monday—Intermediates play Bowmanville here.
Tuesday—Junior practice.
Wednesday— Juniors vs. intermediates.
Thursday—Junior practice.
Friday—Intermediates play Toronto Rowing Club in Toronto.

There should be a great crowd out Monday night to see the opening clash of the season. Reports from Bowmanville say the Rubber town team is much stronger than last season and they may surprise the local talent. Remember last season Whitby sneaked a win over the Petes in the season's opener and it was a hard fight to get that one back.

Monday's game is the earliest O. H. A. contest played in Peterborough for a long time. The teams have been very fortunate in getting good ice, however, and will be in better shape than usual for an opening game.

The first junior game will be played here on Monday, Jan 4th with Port Hope providing the opposition.

A METEORIC CAREER

French Artillery Driver Who Became British M.P. Foretold War

These are the days of unique careers of young men who achieve fame and fortune by originality and brilliancy. Such a man is Mr. Hilaire Belloc, whose amazing article, written two years ago, in which he prophesied the important part Liege would perform in a European war, and how the Belgian fortresses would retard the Germans in any sudden rush on France, was one of the most sensational forecasts ever made.

Mr. Belloc's versatility is amazing. Less than twenty years ago he was serving as driver in the 8th Regiment of French Artillery. Ten years later this man, who had gone straight from school to learn how to handle a gun team, was sitting in Britain's Parliament as representative of Salford. In the intervening years he had proved himself a literary genius.

As a speaker Mr. Belloc has few equals, while he is also one of the greatest travellers of the day. He has written books about every phase of his wanderings—geographical and intellectual—until one might have thought there was no region left to explore.

Mr. Belloc, however, alludes to the period he served as driver in the French Artillery as one of his most valuable and enjoyable experiences.

Mr. Belloc's chief hobby is walking. He has tramped over most of Europe at one time or another, collecting and storing that wonderful firsthand knowledge which he has imparted to the world in his many books.

It was on one of these Continental tramps that he had a narrow escape from an exciting situation. He was on a walking tour in a remote part of Italy, when some ignorant Italian peasants mistook him for a spy and contemplated him with drawn knives. Luckily he was able to pacify them by speaking to them in their own language.

HENDERSON'S FLIERS

Sir David Henderson, whose work has been mentioned in connection with the Royal Flying Corps, is an officer who learned to fly when he was occupying a somewhat important post at the War Office. As a rule you do not get the staid senior officers indulging in such pranks as taking flying lessons, and Sir David's departure from convention was regarded in the sober circles of "The Office" as calling for an address of sympathy with his relatives. Naturally enough, he does not pilot a machine in these strenuous times, his duty being rather to so organise his unique arm as to make it a perfect military machine.

"What will you want me to do, sir?" asked a newly recruited airman, preparatory to making a flight over the enemy's position.

"Go up and have a look—come down and have a chat," said Sir David; and in this terse sentence he summarised the duties of the Flying Corps. As he organised the corps for war purposes, less and less depends upon the pilot so far as the work of reconnaissance is concerned and more and more upon the observer. In fact, the pilot no longer has to attend to anything but the airworthiness and stability of his machine—and the business of keeping out of the range of the enemy's guns.

Lieut.-Col. Victor Williams—of Ottawa, who has returned from France to the Canadian Continent at Salisbury. He was in the trenches three days, shot three Germans, and himself sustained a broken arm from a shrapnel splinter.

FOOD FOR THE GUNS A PROBLEM OF WAR

Supplying of Ammunition One of the Most Vital Questions to be Considered

There is very little glitter about the business of getting the ammunition to the line of battle, and yet upon the certainty and celerity with which the operation is conducted depends the result of the conflict. No branch of the army is more thoroughly organized than that of ammunition supply. In none does there prevail a more rigid discipline.

It is said that Germany in preparation for the war was able to store in Belgium, and even in France, large quantities of war material, including ammunition, but as a rule the supplying of the armies with shot and shell has to be arranged for after the war has begun. The base of the supply, of course, is the ammunition factories at home. Thence the ammunition is sent by train to the nearest safe point to the army to be supplied, and this shipment is attended by no more difficulty than the shipment of a carload of potatoes from one town to another. It is when the ammunition leaves the rail and passes into the control of the supply column that the real work begins. It has then to go forward over the line of communications, a line that it is the strategy of the enemy to destroy or interrupt if possible. The service for forwarding the ammunition is divided into three branches, the base, the intermediate and the advance sections.

Ammunition Column and Train

From the base go forward the great ammunition columns, nowadays forwarded by huge motor trucks. At certain points along the line they are met by ammunition trains, also composed of motor trucks, and each ready to carry ammunition to a different brigade or division. The ammunition train is divided into two ammunition companies or battalions, which establish the various distributing stations. Each company or battalion is subdivided into infantry and artillery ammunition sections, which supply their respective branches. The trains advance to within probably two miles of the firing line, and the division commanders are at once notified of their arrival. At night their location is indicated by red lights, by day by means of little flags.

Here again the ammunition passes into other hands, namely the wing known as the combat trains. Probably in the present war it is practicable in some cases to use gasoline combat trains, but as a rule the combat trains are carts, light enough to be hauled at a gallop, and strong enough to cross the roughest country. In many cases where it is found impracticable to forward the ammunition to the firing line by means of wagons, pack animals are used, the sure-footed mule being the favorite.

All Dangerous Work

Often, indeed, the ammunition is carried forward on the backs of the soldiers. When reserves are going forward they invariably carry with them, in addition to their own supply of cartridges, enough for those whom they are going to support. The work of the combat trains, whether done by automobile, cart or pack horse, is as dangerous as falls to the lot of a soldier. The enemy is always alert to identify a combat train and fire upon it, for it is calculated that the destruction of one load of ammunition is more important than the wounding of a score of soldiers.

The officers in charge of the ammunition transport have a more difficult problem to perform than those in charge of the food supplies for instance. A soldier eats as much one day as another, and it is easy enough to calculate in advance just how much food will be consumed by an army on any given day. It is different with ammunition. On one day an army will need ten times as much ammunition as on another day. The principle the ammunition supply experts go upon is that a soldier going into action will have 100 cartridges in his belt, and probably another 60 in his pockets. In the combat wagon there is always another 120 for each man, in the ammunition train there are 120. In the ammunition column there is as much as has gone before, and at the base there is just twice as much as is in the column. Therefore 1,400 cartridges are provided for each man. Each field gun has 2,000 rounds, distributed in the same way.

Huge Germans Guns

A wounded German sodier gave some interesting information respecting the famous 17-inch howitzers used by the Germans. There are, he says, only two of these in each battery, and they move only on rails which are laid down by the soldiers. Each howitzer fires one shot every ten minutes; the artillerymen, all of whom are skilled engineers, station themselves at a distance and discharge the gun by electricity. Each shot costs $6,250.

Turkey's War Footing

Army—900,000 trained men partly under German officers. 400,000 reserves and irregulars; 2,000,000 men available for duty but unorganized.

Navy—1 first-class battle cruiser (the Goeben), 1 modern light cruiser (the Breslau), 5 battleships, 5 cruisers, 4 torpedo boats, 10 destroyers.

Sacrifices of Women

In an Ontario town is a woman who has four sons equally divided between the British Navy and the British Army. Peterboro' supplies an instance where a woman was obliged to say good-bye to her husband and two sons who went with the first contingent.

A LIFE OF ADVENTURE

Jack Munroe, Ex-mayor of Elk Lake, Loves Excitement

A well known New York sporting writer says: Jack Munroe, the Butte miner should be an ideal soldier. He's a trained frontiersman, a good shot, an athlete, and a cool, thoughtful, courageous fellow.

Munroe has had a varied experience. When a boy he began playing football on the great Butte team, then one of the best in the country and champion of all the West. He traveled through several seasons, playing in Western cities, and finally moved to San Francisco and played with the Olympic A. C. team there. While tackle on the Olympic team Jack entered the coast amateur boxing championships, and won the heavyweight title. Not long after that he became a professional, but went back to prospecting. After locating a copper claim in Idaho he went back to Butte to earn money to develop it. He was a level boss when Jeffries came to Butte, and he fought Jeff four rounds, winning the purse Jeff offered anyone who could stay with him over that route.

That made Munroe famous. He came East, and knocked out Peter Maher, Limerick, and a few others, beat Tom Sharkey in a six-round bout, and fought Jack Johnson six rounds in Philadelphia. Jeffries was out for revenge when he met Munroe in San Francisco in a return match, and he polished Jack off in a couple of rounds. Munroe told me every time Jeffries landed he thought a mule had kicked him. That about finished his fighting career. He had some money, and he went prospecting copper and silver in the Northern Canadian wilderness. Here he struck it rich, located a number of valuable claims, became "Mr. John Munroe," a person of prominence in Canadian mining affairs, and was for several years Mayor of Elk City. If Munroe is fighting now, he has gone to war as a wealthy citizen of Canada. All the more credit to him.

PARADING PRISONERS

Germans Send Them on Merry-go-Round to Impress the Populace

It is a relief to extract a little humor out of the war. French and English alike wonder and laugh at the tremendous number of prisoners which the Germans, according to their own reports, are capturing, both east and west. If they took as many prisoners as they say they would have no enemy to fight. But the explanation is simple enough. Take but one instance.

A Swiss who was at Aix-la-Chapelle during the early stages of the war, and who is now at Basle, explains it thus:

"The German Government is very ingenious in its efforts to keep up the spirits of the population. It reports the annihilation of regiment after regiment daily, and in order to foster the delusion it has to produce formidable convoys of French, British and Belgian prisoners. Aix-la-Chapelle is the spectacular spot chosen. It is the busiest railway station in the German Empire. The German General Staff sends long trainloads of prisoners through this junction going east every day. You can imagine how impressive it is. You can also imagine how industriously the newspaper corespondents record the incident in their despatches to Berlin, not forgetting the downcast demeanor of the captives and the cheers of the German populace.

"The crowds are unaware that these trains are switched onto a loop line at night, and return in triumph the next day. One morning a Dutchman was watching one of them go slowly by. He saw a Belgian soldier excitedly gesticulating at an open carriage window. He was shouting: 'This is the twelfth time we have come through this station.'"

A German with no knowledge of German, Frederick H. W. Lampe, who had been in England since the age of three, was sentenced at Portsmouth to two months' hard labor for not registering.

CHRISTMAS STORY FOR THE CHILDREN.

THE MAGIC CHRISTMAS STOCKING.

The fire in the grate burned so brightly that you could see right through the fabric of the four stockings as they hung suspended from the mantel above the grate. There was one of Sidney's long, heavy black stockings; then came one of Ellen's white ones; then a shorter one in tan, belonging to Walter; and last of the row was a chubby white one, owned by the baby of the family, little Paddy.

The four children were seated about the fire dressed in their night-clothes. After the excitement of hanging the stockings they had been permitted by their parents to sit a few minutes before the fireplace, through which old Santa Claus was to come that night.

"Hope I get my doll and dishes," said Ellen.

"Hope I get my Noah's Ark and dog that can run," said Walter.

"I hope I get my woolly lamb that squeaks," said little Paddy, as he was so excited that he all but slid off his mamma's lap.

As for Sidney, he didn't say anything. He seemed to be thinking.

"Don't you hope you'll get your skates, Sidney?" asked Ellen.

"Yes, Sidney," added his mother. "Aren't you hoping Santa won't forget you?"

"Of course," replied Sidney. "I was just thinking."

"What were you thinking about?" asked his mother.

"I'd like to get my skates all right, but I was just thinking that I would be awfully glad if Santa doesn't forget to bring me a whole lot of sweets!"

"Why, Sidney," asked his mother, "you wouldn't rather have sweets than skates, would you"

"Well, not exactly. Still, I'd rather Santa wouldn't fail to bring a lot of chocolates and toffee."

It was evident Sidney had a well-developed sweet tooth.

"I'd like to get chocolates, too," said Ellen, "but I would rather have my doll than all the chocolates in the world."

"I like sweets awfully well," added Walter, "but I want my Noah's Ark and my dog that can run, even if I don't get a single sweet."

Hearing nothing from Paddy, his mother asked:

"Which would you rather have, Paddy; sweets or your woolly lamb?"

Paddy thought a moment and replied unhesitatingly:

"My woolly lamb."

The others laughed at this, and Sidney felt a bit ashamed to think that he, the eldest of the children, should like sweets best. Wishing to justify his choice, he said, very dignified—

"I don't care much for toys, you know; they're for children."

"So are sweets," said Ellen, but Sidney refused to continue the argument.

In five minutes they were all in bed, dreaming. Sidney's dream was the queerest, so we shall tell it. He dreamed that he was sitting before the fire when Santa scooted down the chimney with his pack on his back.

"Oh, I didn't expect to find you sitting up, Sidney," said Santa as he threw back his pack on the floor and shook the snow from his shoulders.

"Yes, Santa," replied Sidney. "The other children are in bed, but I thought I would stay up a while."

"You're the oldest of the four children, I believe."

"Yes." And Sidney felt important.

Santa began to fill the stockings, beginning with Paddy's. In it he poured a few sweets, and fastened a woolly lamb on the nail by which it was hanging. Then he turned to Walter's, putting some sweets in it and placing a Noah's Ark and a toy dog on the mantel above the stocking. In Ellen's he left some sweets, and tried to stuff a doll in it, but found it wouldn't fit, so he laid it on the mantel.

Then Santa turned to Sidney's stocking.

"I believe you asked for skates?" he said.

"Yes, sir," replied Sidney, excitedly, as he watched the old Saint stick a bright pair of skates in his stocking.

Then Santa turned(picked up his pack, extended his hand to Sidney, and said:

"Well, good-bye, old man! I'll see you again next Christmas, I hope."

Then he prepared to ascend the chimney.

"W-wait a minute, Santa," stammered Sidney. "You forgot something."

"What? My gloves?"

"No; you forgot to leave me any sweets."

"Sweets!" exclaimed Santa. Claus. "Surely a young man like you doesn't care for sweets?"

"Y-yes—that is—well, Santa, I like a little sweets now and then."

"How many do you want?"

"Take the skates back if you want to, Santa, but I would just like to see the stocking bubbling over with chocolates all the time."

"You greedy boy!" exclaimed Santa. "I thought you were too manly to care for sweets." Sidney flushed. "Well, Sidney, if you must have it, I'll take out the skates and grant your desire. I have made your stocking magic. You shall now have all the sweets you want." And he was gone.

Sidney turned to the stocking, and was amazed to see it actually bubbling over with chocolates. The big black stocking was stretched to its fullest capacity and running over. Soon a huge pile lay on the mantel, and then it began dropping to the floor. Sidney made haste to try some of the chocolates, but he soon saw he couldn't eat them near fast enough.

Just then he saw a strange thing. Ellen's doll, Walter's toy dog, and the animals from Noah's Ark, and Paddy's woolly lamb walked over on the mantel to the pile of sweets and began to eat them, and as they ate they grew, and Sidney could actually see them get larger. He was so surprised he ceased eating.

Soon the doll and the animals were so big that they were in danger of breaking the mantel, so they climbed down to the floor. Then they began to eat from the heap of sweets under the stocking. They were soon almost life-size, and still getting bigger. Sidney didn't mind the dog and the lamb and the doll, but he began to fear the room wouldn't hold the animals from the Ark.

He and the doll were getting squeezed so by the growing animals that he could hardly breathe. Alarmed and fearing he would be smothered, Sidney cried:

"Mamma! Mamma!"

"What is it, dear?"

"Where are the animals?" he asked.

"What animals, sonnie?"

"I had an awful dream, mamma."

Sidney walked to the fireplace and looked at his stocking. He found a pair of skates and some sweets in the toe. Then he did an unexpected thing. He removed the skates, and divided his sweets into four equal shares. He kept one share for himself, and emptied the other shares into each of the three other stockings.

"Chocolates may be nice," he said, "but these skates are the thing for me."

GIVEN JUDGMENT FOR WEEK'S PAY

Stanley Jinks sued the proprietor of the White Lunch restaurant for thirteen dollars, wages he claimed was due him. He was given judgment for $12, and the defendant had also to pay the costs, amounting to $3.60. He paid the amount under protest. Jinks claimed he was brought here from Montreal and was a whole week in the city before the restaurant was opened, having to pay his own board. It was for that week he claimed the money.

ALL SAINTS' CHURCH

The festival of Christmas was observed in All Saints Anglican Church yesterday by the celebration of Holy Communion at 8.30 a.m., followed by morning prayers, and by a sermon at 11 o'clock, followed by Communion. Both services were well attended. All the services were conducted by the Rector, Rev. R. B. Grobb, and the sermon was of a particularly Christmas character. The choir, although the ranks were depleted somewhat owing to the holiday, numbered over thirty. The Te Deum, set to music by Jackson, was rendered; also an anthem, "We have Seen His Star in the East" (Simper).

The spirit of Christmas will be extended over to-morrow. A list of the services will be found in these columns.

THE FALKLAND FIGHT.

Gone are ways of the wellfought ship
And of pike and cutlass free,
Where the muskes meet in the fighting fleet
Broadside on the rolling sea!

Yard-arm and yard-arm no more interlock
In the grip of the ocean foe,
For the sea dogs bark at their distant mark
Two leagues and a half away!

No glory here in the long-range watch—
No Blake or Nelson's fame—
But screetching yells of lyddite shells
And death in their yellow flame!

And We And She Better!

In Regard To Assembly Hall

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Will you please correct a misstatement which appeared in the Examiner on Thursday, Dec. 24th? The Assembly Hall in the Bradburn Estate on George Street has not been leased to the Protestant Benevolent Federation, as stated in the Examiner; nor to any other federation. The present occupants of the above hall (Christians gathered in the name of the Lord), who have occupied the Assembly Hall during the past seven years, desire that our friends and others will not be confused by such misstatement. The meetings will (if the Lord permit) be carried on as usual—meetings on Lord's Day for Breaking of bread at 11 a.m.

Sunday School at 3 p.m.
Preaching of the Gospel at 7 p.m.
Prayer meeting every Wednesday at 8 p.m.
Bible Reading every Friday at 8 p.m.

These meetings are open to the public.

Trusting you will, in justice to the people of the Assembly Hall, make this explanation.—I am, yours on behalf of the same,

JAMES FAIRLEY.
480 Bolivar Street, Peterborough.

DANCING AND PATRIOTIC MUSIC

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—While passing the George Street quarters of a local social club last evening strains of music indicated that a dance was in progress. Now I do not propose to discuss the propriety of dancing on Christmas Day, though there is much to be said about that, or to enter into an argument at whether there should be dancing at all this season when this terrible conflict is going on, but I do want to express my surprise at finding misguided individuals two-stepping or "ragging" to such patriotic airs as "Tipperary" or "La Marseillaise," as was the case last night. It may be a misnomer to call "Tipperary" a patriotic song, but thousands of our fellow-citizens of the British Empire are marching into battle with that song on their lips, while our brave allies, the French, are dying, singing "La Marseillaise." And it seems almost a sacrilege to hear these airs pounded out on a piano with rag-time effects, merely for the edification of a crowd of young fellows who seem unaware of the fact that half the world is at war and that they would be better occupied in endeavouring to find some way to help their country than to make a mockery of patriotic music.—Yours, etc.,

CANUCK.

Presentation To Ald. G. W. Green

Mr. Jas. Thompson, M.P.P., has a contract with a big paper mill for hill the pulpwood he can secure this winter, and the consequent labour involved in getting out the wood will provide hundreds with good jobs over and help to make better times for those who otherwise would have nothing to do. Mr. Thompson is paying $4 per cord for spruce and $3.50 for balsam, or balsam and spruce mixed, at railway siding. His contract will mean 10,000 cords before April next. Mr. Thompson has engaged Mr. Jas. E. Johnston to act as his agent at Norwood. As much as 1,000 cords could be disposed here. The paper mills of Canada have this material under prohibitive export duty in the hope that it will encourage the industry at home and give employment to many men. Mr. Thompson's contract will be filled with vast quantities of cedar and other wood for poles and ties.

AIMING AT HUGHES.

The Hamilton Spectator, a sound Tory organ, states that the Princess Pat's Pets have discarded the Ross rifle; and adds that "this arm seems to be chiefly useful for pot and gold hunters—not for potting Germans." Now, if a Liberal paper had said this, it would have been held up as a frightful example of our antagonism to the Major-General of Canada, who is well known to have been an advocate of the Ross rifle for years; and who, if we are not misinformed, is arming Canadian troops with it now. But for this extra loyal Spectator, it is too bad. Well may Major-General Hughes ask to be saved from such a friend. At the same time, we should not wonder if he was a better judge of a good rifle than the editor who throws darts at him and his pet gun.—London Advertiser.

He came in, laid down some suspicious looking bills, with a genuine dollar bill on top, and said:

"I want to pay for that barrel of apples I got."

"Can't take this money," said the dealer.

"Why not?"

"Think of it isn't good."

"The top layer's good, is it not?"

"Well, that's the way it was with the apples."

She Can Hold Her Head Up.

(Theodore Roosevelt in The Outlook.)

"When once Belgium was invaded every circumstances of national honour and interest forced England to act precisely as she did act. She could not have held up her head among nations had she acted otherwise.

"In particular, she is entitled to the praise of all true lovers of peace; for it is only by action such as she took that neutrality treaties and treaties guaranteeing the rights of small powers will ever be given any value.

"The actions of Sir Edward Grey as he guarded Britain's foreign policy showed adherence to lofty standards of right, combined with firmness of courage under a great strain."

Weight of a Gallon of Milk.

"What is the standard weight for sweet milk?"

A quart of milk weighs 2.153 pounds and a gallon 8.612 pounds, or a quart 2.15 pounds and a gallon 8.6 pounds. It is understood that the temperature of the milk and the relative proportions of the butter fat and solids not butter fat cause the weight of milk to vary, but the weights stated above are those generally used.—Progressive Farmer.

Automobile experts have refused to believe that anyone could produce a full-grown five-passenger really beautifully equipped car—a car with real high-tension magneto—a car with sliding gear transmission—left-hand drive center control, a car with practically every high-priced car feature for less than $1,400.

Here it is! Here is a real automobile. Here is the easiest car to drive in the world—here is the greatest all-around hill climbing car in the world. Here is an automobile to be really proud of.

Daring British Raid on German Naval Base at Cuxhaven

British Forces of Air and Water In Attack on Cuxhaven

Submarines, Cruisers and Seaplanes Made Brilliant Attempt on Christmas Day to Reach the Kaiser's Navy--Results Are Unknown.

SPECIAL CABLE:

BRITISH AVIATORS OVER BRUSSELS.

LONDON, Dec. 27.—The Official Press Bureau gave out the following to-night:

"On Thursday last Squadron Commander Richard B. Davies of the naval air service visited Brussels in a Farman biplane for the purpose of dropping twelve bombs at an airship shed reported to contain a German Parseval. Eight of these bombs, of which are six are believed to have hit, were discharged at the first attack, the remaining four on the return flight. Owing to the clouds of smoke which arose from the shed the effect could not be distinguished."

LONDON, Dec. 27.—Assisted by light cruisers, destroyers and submarines, seven British naval airmen, piloting seaplanes, made a daring attack Christmas Day on the German naval base at Cuxhaven, at the mouth of the Elbe. Six of the airmen returned safely, but the seventh, Commander Hewlett, it is feared, has been lost, as his machine was found off Heligoland wrecked.

What damage was done by the bombs thrown by the attacking party could not be ascertained, but the German report of the affair says that the raid was fruitless.

A Daylight Attack.

The Official Press Bureau gave out the following statement to-night regarding the British raid on the German coast:

"On Friday, December 25, the German warships lying off Schilling Roads, off Cuxhaven, were attacked by seven naval seaplanes piloted by Flight Commanders Oliver, Hewlett, Boss and Kilner, Flight Lieutenants Miley and Edwards, and sub-Lieut. Blackburn.

"The attack was delivered in daylight, starting from a point in the vicinity of Heligoland. The seaplanes were escorted by a light cruiser and destroyer force, together with submarines. As these ships were seen by the Germans from Heligoland, two Zeppelins and three or four hostile seaplanes and several hostile submarines attacked them.

Zeppelins Put to Flight.

"It was necessary for the British ships to remain in the neighbourhaad to pick up the returning airmen, and a novel combat ensued between the most modern cruisers and the enemy's aircrift and submarines. By swift manoeuvring the enemy's submarines were avoided, and the two Zeppelins were easily put to flight by the guns of the Undaunted and Arethusa.

"The enemy's seaplanes succeeded in dropping their bombs near our ships, but without hitting any of them. The British ships remained for three hours off the enemy's coast without being molested by any surface vessel, and safely re-embarked three out of the seven airmen with their machines. Three other pilots returned later and were picked up by British submarines, whic were standing by. Their machines were then sunk.

Hewlett's Machine Wrecked.

"Six out of the seven pilots returned safely. Flight Commander Hewlett is missing. His machine was seen in a wrecked condition about eight miles from Heligoland, and the fate of the daring and skillful pilot is at present unknown.

"The extent of the damage by the British airmen's bombs cannot be estimated.

The German Account.

BERLIN, Dec. 27.—The German Admiralty made the following announcement Saturday:

"On December 25 eight British ships made a dash into a German bay. Hydro-aeroplanes, convoyed by them, made an advance against the mouths of German rivers and dropped bombs on ships lying at anchor and a gas tank near Cuxhaven, without hitting them or doing damage.

"The hydro-aeroplanes were fired at, and withdrew in a westerly direction. German airships and aeroplanes reconnoitered against the British forces, and succeeded in hitting with bombs two British destroyers and one other vessel of the convoy. On the latter fire broke out.

"Fog prevented a continuation of the fighting."

600 GUNS FIRED AT ONCE AT THE GERMAN TRENCHES

PARIS, Dec. 26.— General Joffre, the French commander in chief, said to Colonels Ignatieff and Garde-Bulle, the Russian and English military attaches at the field headquarters of the French army, three or four days ago: "Come with me and you will see something never before seen in war."

The military attaches accompanied the General to a place near the lines not far from Arras. There 600 pieces of heavy artillery were placed in a position to bear upon a comparatively short plexus of German intrenchments. The ranges already had been found.

Upon a word from General Joffre, repeated by his aids telephonically, the 600 pieces opened a sustained fire upon the German works and the spaces just behind them.

After a quarter of an hour the French infantry charged. Not a hostile shot met them. Not a bayonet gleamed over the edge of the works. The trenches were actually torn to pieces as if by gigantic ploughshares.

Dead and wounded men, half buried, littered the line where formerly had been trenches. The few alive were struggling to free themselves from heaps of earth. Those who had tried to run were caught by the horrible spray of bursting shells in the rear of the German trenchese Probably not a man defending that part of the line escaped.

AUSTRO-GERMAN LOSS PUT AT 3,500,000 MEN

Correspondent Estimates the German Total of 2,000,000 from Latest Lists.

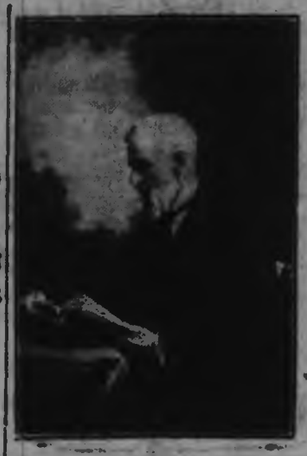
COPENHAGEN, Dec. 27.—Prussian casualty lists, numbered 101 to 108, have been received here. They contain the names of 35,988 killed, wounded, and missing officers and men, bringing the total Prussian losses up to 753,202.

To these are to be added 80 Saxon lists, 28 Wurtemberg, 125 Bavarian, and 13 navy lists. The Bavarian losses are so heavy that it may be calculated that nearly half their army is out of action.

The Prussian losses up to date, including those not yet published, may be set down as about 50,000 dead, 400,000 missing, and 850,000 wounded, bringing the total up to about one and a half million. With the Saxon, Wurtemberg, Bavarian, and navy losses, the German losses altogether must be about 2,000,000.

About 25,000 officers have been killed and 25,000 officers wounded, but only 4,000 officers are missing.

According to information from Vienna the Austro-Hungarian casualties are calculated at about one and a half million officers and men killed, wounded, and missing.



THE LATE JOHN A. FOWLER,
Who Passed away in North Monaghan, early this morning.

DEATH OF J. A. FOWLER

Well Known Resident of North Monaghan Passes Away After a Brief Illness

One of the oldest and best known residents of North Monaghan passed away early this morning in the person of John A. Fowler. Deceased was in excellent health up until Sunday morning, when he suffered a weak spell from which he never recovered. The late Mr. Fowler was the oldest son of the late Wm. Fowler, who was born in Scotland, 1775, and came to Canada as early as 1817, settling first in Port Hope.

In 1859 the late Mr. Fowler married Miss Huggan, daughter of the late Wm. Huggan, who passed away seven years ago, leaving eight children.

In religion, Mr. Fowler was a Presbyterian, attending Church at Springville. He was originally connected in an official capacity with St. Andrew's Church. In politics Mr. Fowler was a Liberal.

To-day's War Bulletins

AUSTRIANS REPULSED WITH HEAVY LOSSES

PETROGRAD, Dec. 27.—A Russian official statement says that on Thursday in a desperate fight with the Austrians they took 70 officers and 4,000 men prisoners. In Galicia and on the left bank of the Vistula, the position is unchanged, but generally favourable to the Russians. On Friday, violent night and day attacks by the enemy along the Vistula and Pilica were repulsed.

AUSTRIANS RETIRE BEFORE THE WEATHER.

VIENNA, Dec. 27.—Official Austrian statements admit that after steady advances they were obliged to retreat on account of bad weather.

SOLDIERS KILLED IN TRAIN COLLISION

WARSAW, Dec. 27.—When a German troop train collided with a hospital train in Poland, 400 soldiers and 500 wounded were killed.

Appointed to Succeed General Lessard—Lieut. Col. Wm. A. Logie of Hamilton, who has been appointed to command the second military division of Ontario with headquarters at Toronto, to succeed General Lessard, who was recently promoted to the rank of Inspector-General.

German Attacks Were Repulsed

All Along the Allies' Front the Enemy Gave Battle on Sunday--Many Artillery Duels---Lull in Flanders Owing to a Fog.

Special Cable:

PARIS, Dec. 27.—Violent bombardment by the Germans of positions of importance on both the right and left wings of the allied battlefront, with scattered attempts by infantry to break through the Franco-British lines, were outstanding features of the official reports issued by the War Office to-day.

In fact artillery duels were fought along the whole of the front from the sea to the banks of the Moselle.

The most sustained cannonading of the German guns was against St. Di[illegible] which was under a continuous rain of shells from 9.30 in the morning until noon to-day.

BIG BATTLE AROUND ALBERT.

In point of numbers of guns and men engaged the most important conflict was that waged by the Germans in an effort to dislodge the French and British troops, with Indian contingents, at La Boiselle and other neighbouring trenches in the vicinity of Albert.

Here the Germans opened an attack shortly before midnight on Saturday, and their guns kept up an almost incessant cannonade all night, the artillery being silenced only long enough to permit of the advance of their infantry in futile attacks which were broken before they reached the line of the Allies' first trenches. Two of these attacks were made, but in each of them the Allies presented such a solid front that the Germans were not able to carry their advance through.

In Flanders a lull has come in the fighting owing to the dense fog which has swept up from the Lys and has drawn a veil between the opposing line of trenches almost to the sea.

In the angle of the Oise and the Aisne the French are still holding General Von Kluk's forces to their trenches while strengthening the positions they assumed before Puimaleine during the fighting of last week.

ENEMY BEATEN NEAR PERTHES

Near Perthes, farther east in the valley of the Aisne, the Germans directed a fierce cannonade against the French who were occupying trenches captured from the enemy, but despite the bombardment, which was followed by a terrible counter-attack, the attempt met with defeat.

The first of the French guns, supplemented by musketry, tore into the German ranks with such disastrous effect that hundreds of dead were piled into the space between the lines of trenches.

VALOROUS FRENCH INFANTRY.

St. Hubert, west of Verdun and south of Varennes, was again the centre of fierce fighting. South of the town one company of the French infantry, by a most valorous charge, cut their way through the enemy's lines for an advance of between 100 and 200 yards. Several of the enemy's trenches bordering on a ravine in this region were so heavily bombarded by the accurate fire of the French gunners that they were levelled, and the Germans were forced to evacuate.

Two German attacks were directed against the French positions to the east of St. Michiel, on the Meuse, where a stretch of woods had been burned to clear the view of the field. Both attacks were repulsed, and to-day the French troops, aided by sappers, were able to strongly fortify their defensive works.

Allies' Aviators Are Active

Examiner Special:

PARIS, Dec. 27.—An official French report to-day says they made slight gains in Belgium and northern Franc. French aviators bombed railroad stations and barracks at Metz. Germans have reoccupied the city of Mlawa in Russia.

DROPPED BOMBS ON GERMAN SHIPS.

A statement issued by the German Admiralty at Berlin yesterday, says that on Friday eight British ships, guided by hydro-aeroplanes, made a dash into a German bay near Cuxhaven and dropped bombs on German ships at anchor, and a gas tank.

Berlin official statement to-day says nothing new in Flanders, but the French captured an important height east of them.

GERMANS STILL SHELLING CHURCHES

According To Correspondence Received In Peterboro' From The Firing Line

Miss Ethel Bossence of Belfast, Ireland, is in receipt of a letter from W. H. Jennings of the 16th Lancers, now fighting in France. This letter has been forwarded to Miss M. G. Bossence and Mr. A. M. Bossence of Peterborough.

"Ever so many thanks for your kind and welcome letter. You see God has spared me up till now, although I have had some very narrow escapes. Isn't this a terrible war? There is not the slightest sign of it finishing for at least twelve months. So long as we can get more men I think we shall win, but the loss of life is terrible. It is awful to see the poor people homeless, their homes a mass of ruins. We came through Ypres the other day and the Germans were still shelling it with their big guns, although there is hardly a building left standing. The Germans are very good at shelling churches. It seems to be a hobby of theirs, although they say it is a military necessity. It is very good of the people of Belfast to do what they can for us. You can rest assured that every one of us has had a share of everything that was forwarded. Do write me again, as we look so much for a letter.—W. H. Jennings.

AUSTRIAN RESERVISTS CALLED TO THE COLOURS

Two hundred and fifty artillerymen at Fort Monsebrioue, near Rivatreto, refused to leave for Galicia on Christmas Day, and mutinied, but were decimated and the survivors were sent to the front.

TWO CANADIANS ESCAPE FROM TOWER OF LONDON

Salisbury Plain, Dec. 27.— Captain Rev. George Leycester Ingles, of Toronto, chaplain in the Canadian expeditionary force, is in Bulford Hospital, seriously ill from cerebro-spinal meningitis.

There are 15 cases of this disease in the contingent, and the authorities are taking every precaution to prevent its spread. Colonel Carleton Jones says there is no cause for alarm.

[illegible] inary corps have escaped from the military guard room at the Tower of London. This is the first escape from the Tower in over a hundred years. The men had been arrested for disorderly conduct and made their get-a-way at midnight.

GERMANS RECEIVE MORE MEN IN FLANDERS

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 27.—Comparative quiet reigned everywhere in Flanders on Christmas Day, but yesterday gun-fire again could be heard, beginning in the early morning, according to the Sluis correspondent of The Telegraaf. He says that the Germans have received further reinforcements, especially at Knocke and Heyst.

ITALO—ROUMANIAN LEAGUE FAVOUR WAR

Roumania Will Ask Authorization For War Credit of $40,000,000.

BUCHAREST, Dec. 27.—The policy of Roumanian alliance with the powers of the Triple Entente has obtained such powerful support that even the Conservative leader, M. Marfihiloman, whose leaning is rather to the side of Germany and Austria, was forced to declare at a meeting of his party committee that he was in favour of action against Austria and Germany.

For some time past there have been successive Italo-Roumanian manifestations culminating in the foundation in Rome of an Italo-Roumanian league.

The Minister of Finance to-morrow will introduce a measure calling for the authorization of a war credit of $40,000,000.

"THE BATTLE CRY"

CHAPTER V.

For the rest of her life Juanita looked back upon the remainder of that night as upon some lurid delirium shot across with many hideous apparitions.

For a long while she sat there on the stile gazing across the steep banks between which the waters of Tribulation slipped along in a tide of tarnished quicksilver, and beyond which rose the near ridges of blue and the far dim ridges of grey. At her back she knew that the family and the missionary were sitting in talk. Their nasal high-pitched voices jarred vaguely to her and jarred upon her nerves. Jeb, the oldest boy, had left after supper to go back to the dance—for in these lonely back waters of the world any sort of entertainment is too rare to be wasted. Down by the water the frogs whose voices had a little while ago seemed mellow were croaking dismally now, and when some soft-winged and noiseless creature fluttered by near her face and from the sycamore overhead quavered the long wistful call of a "grave-yard owl" she shivered a little. Even the message of the whippoorwill was changed. Instead of "Whippoorwill" the birds seemed to voice in dirge-like monotony, "These poor hills! These poor hills!"

She sat there with her hands clasped about her updrawn knees as she used to sit when some childhood grief had weighed upon her. The moonlight caught and sparkled on wet lashes and something suspiciously like tears in her eyes, but there was no one to see except the downy owl that blinked back from the bone-white branch of the gnarled sycamore.

She could not shake out of her mind the humiliation of having shown her weakest side to Bad Anse Havey. It was some satisfaction to remember the offended stiffening of his shoulders and the dark fire in his eyes. She had heard much of the easily hurt pride of these mountain men; a pride which made them walk in strange surroundings with upright heads and eyes challenging criticism of their uncouthness, their wildness. She had first appealed to this man, but at least she had also stung him with her scorn. Now they would be open enemies.

And with thought of him, the whole situation grew strangely complex. She could no longer think of him as she had before thought of him, nor of his people as she had before thought of them.

She knew that this young man in a country where every man was poor and no man a pauper, owned great tracts of land that yielded only sparse crops, with the most arduous coaxing. She knew that under his rocky acres slept a great wealth of coal and that above them grew noble and virgin forests of hard wood. The coming of railroads and development would make him a rich man. Yet he stood there, seemingly prising above all those magnificent certainties the empty boast of feudal chieftainship. He stood like an eagle on a tree-top, jealously guarding the wild fastnesses of the crags around him. Why? She asked herself and found no answer. At all events he was a man. With that thought came an unwelcome comparison and a catch in her throat. The moon was full and when last it had been full it had shone on a leave-taking between trimmed hedges.

She drew herself up straight as she sat on the stile and impatiently dashed away the moisture from her eyes. If that other man had only had in him the iron wasted on this desperado, Anse Havey!

The gods blend badly the elements in life's crucible, she pondered. A mongrel dog strolled over to the stile and sniffed at her ankles. She had heard Mrs. McNash call the brute's name, and now she put out a friendly hand and laid it on the upstretched muzzle. "It's a pretty funny old world, Beardog, isn't it?" she sighed and the mongrel wagged its stump tail in ready affirmation. Then she rose and went unwillingly back to the cabin.

She did not know that in drawing off to herself and denying her isolated entertainers the novelty of her society she had been guilty of a grave discourtesy. And they did not intimate to her that their pride was wounded for in the Cumberlands a law which is above other laws guarantees to the guest under one's roof-tree all that the meagre possibilities afford, and returns even for slighting appreciation a homely dignity of welcome.

From the lean-to kitchen Mrs. McNash had brought a pan of live coals and the cavernous recesses of the smoke-blackened chimney roared with a great fire. The air had taken on the night chill of the high places although it was June, and now in the illumination from the hearth Juanita saw for the first time the ugly picture of the single room.

The floor was grimy and in each corner stood a huge four-post bed so that only about the hearth was a circumscribed space for the crowded chairs. Close to the door leaned an ancient spinning wheel and everywhere was the dust and soot of an unlighted place where a gust of downward wind drives the smoke inward. One note only was modern. Propped against the wall near the head of one bed, evidently that of Fletch and his wife, was a rifle, ready to hand, and as the fire burned high and the corners of the room came into sight, the light played and flickered on its barrel and stock and caught the blue metal of a heavy revolver which hung in belt and holster from the bed-post.

The host sat barefooted before the blaze and talked with the missionary. The girl heard their conversation through the dullness of fatigue, wondering how she was to sleep in this pigsty, yet restrained from asking permission to retire only by her embarrassment and unfamiliarity with the native code.

"I'm plumb pleased ter know ye, Brother Talbott," Fletch McNash, now apparently recovered from his day's carousal, was gravely assuring the missionary. "I've heerd tell about ye fer years. Hit seems qu'ar I hain't never met up with ye afore now. Folks says, that afore ye repented an' foun' grace they used ter call ye Hell-cat Talbott, an' thet in the old Talbott-Hawkins war ye war a mighty vi'lent man."

The missionary sighed. "Thet war afore the speret descended on me. Nowadays folks calls me 'Good Anse.' I hopes I be."

At last Juanita heard Brother Talbott suggest, "Hit's gittin' on ter be late an' we've got a tol'able long way ter journey ter-morrer. I reckon we'd better lay down."

Juanita began nervously counting heads. There were eight in the room and the boy Jeb yet to return from the dance, and while she was still trying to work out the problem the woman pointed to a corner bed and suggested, "I reckon you'd botter bundle in with Dawn."

She saw the girl crawl into the four-poster just as she was and the missionary kick off his brogans and shed his coat, so taking off her own boots and jacket she slipped between the faded "coverlets" of the sheetless bed and tried to banish hateful comparisons.

In five minutes the taper was out and the place was silent save for the crackle and sputter of the logs. The little girl at her side lay quiet and her regular breathing proclaimed her already asleep. In another five minutes Juanita with closed eyes and burning lids, and aching muscles, heard the nasal chorus of snoring sleepers. She alone was awake in the house.

She opened her eyes and gazed up at the discoloured rafters. She watched the light sparkle and flash on barrel of rifle and lock of pistol. The heat of the place became a swelter; the mingled odors of charred wood, tobacco smoke and the fumes of liquor nauseated her.

Her mind went back to the view across the lawns of the County Club at home. She saw the ivied walls of the college where she had been educated — for this. Then she saw in memory the delicately dancing string of polo ponies going over to the grounds for the afternoon game; saw herself sitting with other daintily gowned women on the white flagstoned terrace of the club-house. Outside the door "Beardog," the mongrel, whined vainly for admittance and she grew homesick for even a glimpse of her great Dane.

And as she thought of these things the soul in her grew small and weak and very sick, and the heart in her told her that it stood on the verge of breaking.

CHAPTER VI.

It is related in the history of the Hatfield-McCoy feud, which burst out between neighbours over a stray pig, and claimed its toll of lives through a half century, that one of the Hatfield girls wrote on a white pillar at the front of her often bereaved house, "There is no place like home." The sequel tells that a cynical traveller passing that way, reflected on the annals of that house and added in postscript, "Leastways not this side of hell."

The story of the Hatfield-McCoy feud is in many ways that of other "wars" which have made of the roof-tree of the eastern divide a land beleaguered and unique.

To the crags and coves where he was born the mountain man adheres, and if by chance he is led to wander, even if he leaves his country for his country's good, the call of the highlands will inevitably draw him back to face the shot from the laurel and the vengeance of the enemy who has "bided his time."

Two hundred years ago a handful of Anglo-Saxons were stranded there where nature's defiance proved strong enough to halt their westward march.

It was not granted them, as it was their more favoured brethren to colonize the rich land of promise beyond and upon them settled the bitter heritage of the derelict. Their great-grandchildren remain to-day pioneers in bondage to the hills. They sing the songs once sung along the wild Scottish border and jealously hold to outgrown ideals. They fight to the death and turn away no shelterless stranger and forgive no enemy.

From such blood came Lincoln and from it will come other Lincolns.

To these men the ordered civilization of "Down below" means a foreign power which autocratically crushes. It means Courts whose processes become a power in the hands of feudal enemies, used to smite and persecute.

In the war between the Haveys and the McBriars there was more than the forgotten episode of a stray razorback, which was nor surrendered to its lawful owners. They had for decades hated and killed each other with a fidelity of bitterness that made all their truces and intermarriages fail of permanent peace.

Between the territories where they had originally settled, stretched a barrier of hills broken by only one passable gap. The McBriars had made their first habitations east of that ridge and gap where the waters run toward the sea. The Haveys had set up their power to the west where the springs feed the rivers that go down to the Bluegrass and to Tennessee. Had the two clans been content to remain respectively on the sunrise and sunset slopes of the backbone, they might never have clashed, but there were bright-eyed women to the west and east. Feminine Havey eyes lured McBriar suitors and McBriar girls seemed to the Havey men worth any dare that Fate might set for their venturing. So it has been since young Montagus and Capulets ignored dead lines—and long before. Smoke went up from cabins on both sides that housed men and women of both clans. Hatred scattered and set up new points of infection all along Tribulation and beyond its headwaters.

The war of the States had rent them farther apart when McBriars fought for and Haveys against the Union. Since then each clan had wielded strong political power, and wielded it against each other, but far below flag and party went down the tap root of poisonous and personal hatred.

It was an unfortunate thing that Cal Douglas should, on a February afternoon, have shot to death his brother-in-law, Noah McKay, even if as Cal earnestly assured the Jury "he was jest obleeged an' beholden ter do hit." All the circumstances of the affair were inopportune for his kinsmen and the kinsmen of the man who died with a bullet through his vitals.

Cal bore a name for surly character and even in a land where grudge-bearing is a religion, he was deemed ultra fanatical in fanning the flame of hatred. Noah McKay, himself, was little loved by either the Haveys, into whose family he had married, or the McBriars from whom he sprang. Neighbours told of frequent and violent bickerings between the man and his shrewish wife who was the twin sister of Cal Douglas.

"Cal Douglas an' Noey McKay's woman air es much alike es two peas in a pod," went neighbourhood pronouncement. "They air both soured on mankind an' they glories in human misery."

Had the fight on that winter evening ended in the death of both participants, McBriars and Haveys would alike have called it a gentle riddance and dropped the matter where it stood. But since a Havey had slain a McBriar, and the Havey still lived it could not, in honour, be so dropped. It left an uneven score.

So the McBriars called that killing a murder while the Haveys styled it self-defence, and a new peg was driven upon which to hang clan bitterness.

Since the mountaineer has little to do in the winter and spring save gossip, the affair grew in importance with rehearsing and to each telling was added new features. It was assumed east of the ridge that Noah had incurred the displeasure of Bad Anse Havey by the suspicion of tale-bearing to old Milt McBriar. It was argued that that particular wife-beating might have passed as uneventfully as several similar episodes heretofore, had not the heads of the Haveys made it a pretext for eliminating a McBriar who dwelt in their midst and carried news across the ridge to his own people.

For several years the feud had slept, not the complete sleep of death, but the fitful, simmering sleep of precarious animosity. Slowly the bitterness had become a fevered sore, so tense and strained that it needed only a spark to fire it into actual war. But neither clan felt so overwhelmingly strong as to court an issue just yet and realizing the desperate quality of any outbreak, both Milt McBriar "over yon" and Anse Havey over here had guarded the more belligerent kinsmen with jealous eye. They had until now held them checked and leashed, though growling.

For these reasons the trial had been awaited with a sense of crisis in the town of Peril where it might mean a pitched battle. So it had been awaited, too, up and down the creeks and branches that crept from the ragged hills, where men were leading morbid lives of isolation and nursing grudges.

Yet nothing had happened, and though the streets were empty of peaceful folk and doors were barred, when the bell in the rickety cupola called men to attend "High-Court," the case had proceeded with a surprising apathy.

During the three days that the suspense of the trial continued, each recess of Court found the long-limbed frame of Milt McBriar tilted back in a split-bottomed chair on the flagstones at the front of the hotel. His dark face and piercing eyes gazed always thoughtfully, and very calmly [illegible] the dusty town to the reposeful languor of the piled-up, purple skyline. Likewise each recess found seated at the other end of the same house-front the sorter, heavier figure of a fair-haired man with ruddy face and sandy moustache. Never did he appear there without two companions, who like his Lartius and Herminius remained at his right and left. Never did the dark giant speak to the florid man, yet never did either fail to keep a glance directed toward the other.

The man of the sandy hair was Breck Havey, next to Bad Anse, the most influential leader of the clan. His influence here in Peril made or unmade the officers of the law.

When these men came together, as opposing witnesses in a homicide case, the air was fraught with elements of storm. "Thar's war a-brewin'," commented a native, glancing at the quietly seated figures one noon, "an' them fellers air in ther b'ilin'."

HOW THIS MOTHER GOT STRENGTH

Mrs. Eddy Had Only Three in Family, Yet Was So Nervous and Worn Out Could Not Do the Work.

Fair Haven, Vt.—"I was so nervous and run-down that some days I could not do my housework for my family of three. My nerves were very weak and I had pains around my heart. I had doctored for about two years without help. One day a Vinol booklet was left at our door and I decided to try it, and thanks to Vinol my health has been restored, so I can do my work once more.

"I have told my neighbors about Vinol and shall always praise it for what it has done for me."—Mrs. JAMES H. EDDY, Fair Haven, Vt.

What Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil did for Mrs. Eddy it will do for every nervous, weak, run-down man or woman in this vicinity.

Vinol creates an appetite, re-establishes perfect digestion and makes good pure blood. In this natural manner it builds up the run-down, weak and debilitated, and replaces weakness with strength.

Submarine Feat Upset Turks.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—Delayed advices to the United States Government from Constantinople say that Turkish officials regarded the loss of the battleship Messoudieh, which was blown up by a British submarine recently, as a severe loss. The feat caused consternation in the Turkish capital, because of the fear that more submarines would penetrate the Dardanelles in the future.

The Turkish officials, according to the same advices, have been much perturbed about spies. They claim that every time the Turkish fleet enters the Black Sea the Russians immediately are aware of the movement and send a stronger force to drive the Turkish ships back into port.

THE PICTURE IN RETROSPECT

Man's Work Week Ending Disastrously—Six Thousand-Year Days With Little Accomplished—Sin and Death Mark the Course—Blighting Man's Hopes and Endeavors—God Permits the Lesson, Even to Its Present Climax—He Waits to Be Gracious—The Antitypical Sabbath Dawning—It Will Bring Rest and Peace to All the Willing and Obedient, Scattering Sin and Darkness.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 27.—Speaking at the Detroit Opera House, Pastor Russell took for his text St. Peter's words, "A day with the Lord is as a thousand years," and the Prophet's statement, "A thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday" (2 Peter 3:8; Psalm 90:4). He said in part:

All resolutions against sin and in favor of righteous thinking and living are commendable and helpful. But I recommend a comprehensive resolution; namely, to get right with God through His appointed Channel, the Lord Jesus Christ, and through the instructions of His Word, the Bible. While progressing in the knowledge of the Truth and in its spirit, the individual will be abiding in God's Love—"under the shadow of the Almighty."

But this implies faith in God, faith in Christ, faith in the Bible and the study of it so as to get fully into alignment with the Divine purposes and away from the perverting influences of the creeds. While every creed may be said to contain some elements of Truth, nevertheless these creeds are so horribly mixed with errors in such poisonous combinations that it is a wonder we did not all fellow blind leaders into the ditch of infidelity long ago.

From the Divine standpoint we see that the six thousand years of earth's history, from Adam's day until now, are merely the work-day portion of a great Week whose Seventh Day, or Sabbath, of a thousand years is "the Day of Christ," "the last Day," "the Day of Judgment," or trial for the world—the Day in which "every knee shall bow and every tongue confess, to the glory of God"; the Day in which "the righteous shall flourish, and evil-doers shall be cut off" in the Second Death; the Day during which God will "pour out His Spirit upon all flesh," as He now grants it to His servants and handmaidens.

In the Divinely arranged custom of the Jews the new day began at sunset. Thus we are in the evening, or beginning, of the great Seventh Day of the Divine Week— the Day which means so much of blessing, uplifting, privilege, opportunity of Divine favor to our race through Messiah's glorious Kingdom, which throughout this Seventh Day will reign "from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth," putting down everything contrary to the Divine standards, and uplifting the world of mankind (bought with the precious blood at Calvary) from sin, degradation and the tomb—up, up, up, step by step, to human perfection in a world-wide Eden. The unwilling, resisting Divine favors and privileges, shall be destroyed in the Second Death.—Acts 3:19-22, 23.

"Six Days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work." Whoever reads carefully, intelligently, the pages of history must be struck with the energy which has been manifested by our race. The pyramids and the ruins of ancient cities and civilizations all tell us of humanity's ceaseless struggle against adverse conditions prevailing in the earth, including the strife against sickness and death and, by a few, a noble fight against further degradation.

Well does the Prophet express the truth of our observation, saying, "We have not wrought any deliverance in the earth." (Isaiah 26:18.) A few have gained fabulous riches, fame or fame, place or power; but during all this period the majority have gone down to the tomb, slain by the great associated monarchs whom the Bible declares are reigning—Sin and Death.

Even the comparatively few who have gained eminence and whose victories are most loudly extolled in human history have fallen also—many of them in the very prime of life—all of them in comparative childhood. Why should not a man live for a hundred years when we have the Divine assurance that even under the Divine sentence Father Adam resisted death for 930 years—so vigorous was his constitution?

From the Divine standpoint the children of Adam, all born in sin shapen in iniquity, of few days and full of trouble, fall asleep in death-like children wearied in their play albeit that it is a play grim wit tragedy, in which each actor performs his part most realistically.

From the Divine standpoint human ambition, strife and energy accomplishing a useful purpose, even though the efforts are usually selfish and often brutish. The lessons now being learned by Adam's children will not all be lost. The greater mellowness of heart and the broader views of the majority of those who have thus battled, selfishly for over fifty years suggest that our race as a whole might do better work in a second century than in the first Moreover, the Scriptures indicate that the great drama of sin, selfishness and passion being enacted by humanity is furnishing a lesson to angelic hosts respecting the exceeding sinfulness of sin—its downward tendency, its bitter fruit, and the hopelessness of any escape therefrom except by Divine assistance.

The forbidden fruit of Eden was from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Doubtless the Creator would eventually have given our first parents a full knowledge of both good and evil, and merely forbade them the immediate plunge into knowledge to their own disadvantage. Craving knowledge before its due time, Mother Eve disobeyed her Maker, and enticed her husband also into disobedience. The result has been that instead of learning the philosophy of good at first and of evil later, they and their race have been precipitated into lessons respecting evil first, with the knowledge of good to come later.

The holy angels, who have never transgressed the Divine Law, have continually the lesson of good—an appreciation of the Divine character, the principles of righteousness, etc. Their lesson in respect to evil they are gaining by observation instead of by experience—the way recommended to our first parents by the Creator, but in their ignorance rejected.

But God foreknew the course which His human children would take under the influence of temptation; He foreknew that they would fall into sin and would therefore experience its penalty of sin, sorrow and death. While for six thousand years His eye has pitied His poor creatures, nevertheless He has allowed His great original Plan of the Ages to move along slowly to a grand climax—the Plan which He had purposed in Himself from before the foundation of the world.

That climax in human affairs, we believe, is at hand. It marks a great change of dispensation. The six thousand years of the reign of Sin and Death are ending with a terrible Time of Trouble which not improperly might be termed the natural result of human selfishness (sin) operating under the influence of the great principles of the New Dispensation, now being ushered in. Selfishness, as represented in the accumulated financial power and energy called trusts and combines, is about to come into conflict with selfishness (sin) represented in the combining forces of humanity, labor unions, etc.

The "head-on collision" which thinking people foresee, and which the Scriptures graphically portray, will give society an earthquake shock. More than this, the graphic picture is that of a world-wide conflagration which will involve the heavens, or ecclesiastical powers, as well as the earth, or social system, and the mountains, or kingdoms, of the world. The picture would be too terrible to paint, and useless as well, were it not for the silver lining of the cloud.

The awful shock, which God's people are warned to avoid, so far as possible, by following peace and benevolence, will merely prepare the way for the glorious blessings of the great Seventh Day, in which man will rest from his own schemes and endeavors, and will come fully under the control of the great Messiah, whose Rule of Righteousness for human uplift has been prophetically pictured for centuries.

Still looking from the Divine standpoint at the six great thousand-year Days in which Sin and Death have reigned, we perceive that one effect has been just as foretold to Mother Eve—"I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conceptions." We perceive that our race has multiplied much more rapidly than it would have done had it continued perfect, as at first; for the first children, in the days following the Fall, were frequently born when the fathers were one hundred years old.

We have already referred to the sentence requiring the punishment of sin which comes to all mankind—most fully, most consciously, to those favored by contact with the people of God, who have received the Divine Revelation. The enlightened ones have been but a small proportion of the whole. After two thousand years of the reign of Sin and Death, God foretold in an obscure manner the blessing which He purposed to bring subsequently to the race. To Abraham He said, "In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

That Message, followed in Israel by the giving of the Law Covenant, has been the light of the world. For eighteen centuries it was the only light of hope, of prospect. Then, in partial fulfilment of that Promise, came Jesus, the first practical expression of Divine Love for our race. No longer would God content Himself merely with promises. He would now begin the work of human rescue.

But if any hoped that world-wide blessings would immediately spring up as the result of Jesus' work, he was mistaken. On the contrary, Jesus Himself was combatted by the Prince of Darkness and his deluded subjects. For nearly two thousand years the same principle has obtained—all followers of Jesus have been obliged to take up their cross and suffer for righteousness, for godliness, in the midst of a perverse people, amongst whom they have shone as lights and whom to some extent they have assisted in enlightening, civilizing, etc.

Thus for Six Days of the Week, so far as light, truth, knowledge of God, is concerned, have all been dark Days. The lights which God provided in His people have been as candles set upon candlesticks. They have indeed reproved the darkness, but they have been powerless to scatter it. Nor did God so design. His declaration through the Prophet is, "Weeping may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning." (Psalm 30:5.) Again, "Darkness covers the earth, gross darkness the people"; but "the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in His beams."—Isaiah 60:2; Malachi 4:2.

This promised Sun of Righteousness which is to scatter the darkness of earth consists, we are distinctly told, of Jesus and those who have walked in His footsteps throughout the Gospel Age. These, approved by the Father, will be glorified beyond the Veil by a resurrection to glory honor and immortality. Then speedily will these "shine forth as the Sun in the Kingdom of their Father." (Matthew 13:43.) This will mean the ushering in of the great Seventh Day—Messiah's Day.

From this Divine standpoint God is not slack concerning His promises. Only Six Days of the Week have yet passed. The glorious Seventh Day, in which the great Mediator, between God and men will assume His Kingdom powers, is just at hand. Instead of thinking that God is neglecting us and forgetting to fulfil the Messianic promises, we should with the eyes of faith realize that He is working all things according to the counsel of His own will. We should consider the matter from the standpoint that God has exercised great patience with humanity in not blotting out the race. He has been long-suffering; and this fact assures us that the Unchangeable One would prefer that none of His creatures should perish in death, but rather that all, if they would, might turn unto Him and live.—Ezekiel 33:11.

The great opportunity for the masses of our race to turn to the Lord and attain life everlasting will be after the darkness shall have passed, and the Sun of Righteousness shall be shining forth; after the Highway of Holiness shall have taken the place of the Broad Road to destruction; after Messiah, the great King, shall have dethroned Satan, the Prince of Darkness, from the control of the world; after the Prince of Peace shall have established lasting peace upon a proper basis. Who cannot sing heartily with the poet:

"A thousand years! earth's coming glory!
'Tis the glad Day so long foretold;
'Tis the bright morn of Zion's glory
Prophets foresaw in times of old!"

Our race was generated by Father Adam as well as condemned to death through his disobedience. What the race needs is another father, or life-giver, and this is exactly what the word Savior signifies—Life-Giver. At the cost of His own life the Redeemer became the Purchaser of Adam and his race, with a view to their resurrection, their resurrection from sin and death. In not one of the Redeemer's titles "the Everlasting Father"—the Father who gives everlasting life! (Isaiah 9:6.) Unquestionably He has not yet fulfilled this glorious office of Life-Giver to Adam's race. He will fulfil it, however—"in His Day."

Speaking to His faithful disciples, His followers in the Narrow Way, Jesus promised them, "In the regeneration ye shall sit upon twelve thrones." (Matthew 19:28.) That regeneration period corresponds exactly to St. Peter's "Times of Restitution," or years of restoration (Acts 3:19-21); and both of these statements agree to the general teachings of Scripture respecting a resurrection at the last Day—Messiah's Day — the Thousand Years of regeneration, resurrection, restitution, which will afford Adam and his race fullest opportunities for attaining perfection of human nature in an Edenic world-wide Paradise.

The Lord through the Prophet assures us of the wonderful success which will attend the establishment of the New Empire of earth, the Dominion of the Prince of Light, which will supersede the dominion of the Prince of Darkness, when Satan shall be bound for a thousand years, that he may deceive the people no more. Thus it is written, "Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet"; and the hail (Truth) shall sweep away the refuge of lies."—Isaiah 28:17.

But why the delay, do you ask? Ah, we answer, God did not permit Adam to begin the establishment of his race until first He gave him Eve—as his bride, his wife. The world needed not merely a life-giver, but a mother, a co-worker, a helpmate.

Similarly, in the Divine arrangement God has provided that the Restitution Time, the world's uplifting process, the regeneration upon our race, shall not begin until first the true Church, the Little Flock, the Bride of Christ, shall have been completed and united to the Heavenly Bridegroom beyond the Veil—made partaker with Him of glory, honor and immortality.

Thus the great Plan of the Ages, timed by Infinite Wisdom, has delayed long enough to permit all of God's spirit-begotten children to make their calling and election sure to a share with our Redeemer in His glorious work. How glad we are that the Heavenly Father and the Kingly Redeemer are beckoning us to share the things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, but which are reserved for all who love God sincerely—more than they love houses or lands, parents or children or self! The Divine Plan of the Ages rolls onward toward completion, and at every stage its progress makes for new blessings and revelations of the glorious things which God purposed in Himself from before the foundation of the world.

THE ONLY CURE FOR CONSTIPATION

Is "Fruit-a-tives"—That Wonderful Remedy Made From Fruit Juices.

AVON, ONT., MAY 14th, 1913.

"I have used "Fruit-a-tives" for Indigestion and Constipation with most excellent results, and they continue to be my only medicine. When I first started about six years ago to use them, I took four at a dose but gradually reduced the dose to one tablet at night. Before taking "Fruit-a-tives", I took salts and other pills but the treatment was too harsh. I thought I might as well suffer from the illness as from these treatments. Finally, I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised with a letter in which some one recommended them very highly, so I tried them, and I have no hesitation in recommending them." ANNIE R. CORBETT.

HANDLING BAGGAGE.

A System That Simplifies Matters For the Railroad Men.

Like most other mysteries, that of handling the thousands of pieces of luggage that come to a great railroad station has a simple solution. It seems to the layman that there must be confusion when incoming trains dump hundreds of trunks and hand bags into the baggage rooms for distribution to all quarters of the city. System, which has come to play an important part in all business nowadays, has made baggage handling a rather simple matter for the railroads. It is the use of a key number that does the trick.

Travelers have noticed that their check numbers run into six figures. If they pay attention to the figures on their checks at all. It is the third of these units, counting back from the final number, that is the key to the whole system of distribution. The expressman who handles the baggage for its home distribution hands in to the baggage agent his mess of collected checks, all sorted on that basis, and the baggage handlers hustle the stuff out with very little delay.

Suppose he has only a few checks from an incoming local train. They may read 284741, 284201, 284239, 284726, 284812, 284497, 284223, 284256, 284739, 284747, 284056 and 284123. In each case the first three figures are identical—284. The first variation begins with the fourth, or hundreds, unit. By means of this unit he separates his checks—all the 7's in one bunch, all the 5's in another, and so on.

In the baggage room the trunks and bags are distributed as soon as received in ten apartments, each bearing a unit number, from 0 to 9. That number invariably represents the hundreds unit of the claimant's check. The trunk with a 284043 check would go to the same compartment as one numbered 282643 or 283543 or 12843 or 987643. The figure 5 is the key figure, with the result that there is never any confusion or trouble in locating the baggage desired. It would be in the compartment numbered 5.

This simple plan solves the mystery as to the prompt location of a piece of hand baggage when a passenger rolls up to the baggage room door in a taxi to get the piece of baggage he has had checked and has to wait but a moment to obtain it. It is a very simple solution of the trouble that a few years ago annoyed all travelers who had to wait for baggage to be transferred from one terminal to another in their own conveyance.

The designation marquis is the second in the five orders of English nobility. The term originally indicated persons who had the care of the marches of a country. The word marches is the plural of mark, which in its political sense signifies boundaries. Such were the lands on the borders of England and Scotland and of England and Wales.

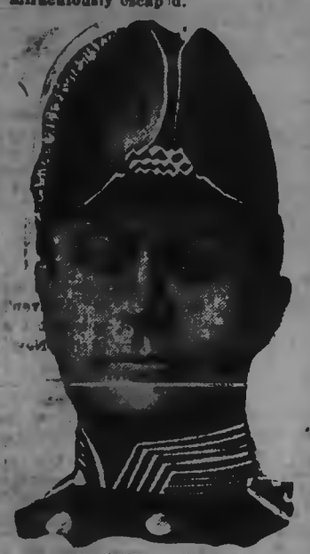
Jellicoe Is Not Big, But He Is Brilliant As Naval Strategist

ADMIRAL SIR JOHN JELLICOE, who has just been appointed as commander-in-chief of the British navy, and on whom the whole British Empire is depending in this hour of trial, has been for the past year and a half second sea lord of the naval department at Whitehall. He is, barring midshipmites, the most diminutive officer of the senior service.

Yet, in spite of his brevity of stature, he won fame in his younger days as a football player, as an all-round athlete, and as a boxer. He has seen plenty of fighting. As sub-lieutenant, he was present at the bombardment of Alexandria, and afterwards took part in the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, as a member of the naval brigade.

Jellicoe was ill, suffering from Malta fever, on board the Victoria, which was rammed by the Camperdown, and sent to the bottom of the Mediterranean, carrying down with her Admiral Sir George Tyron, and more than 600 officers and men, but miraculously escaped.



SIR JOHN JELLICOE.

He is married to a very rich woman, namely, the daughter of Sir Charles Cayser, head of the Clan line of steamers, and is regarded in the British and foreign navies as more responsible than any other officer for the marvellous progress in naval gunnery in the British fleet.

MADDEN CHIEF OF STAFF.

Admiral Jellicoe is 55 and is one of the most distinguished admirals of the service. He has wide sea experience, is a splendid administrator, and is at the same time a man of cool and determined judgment. He has chosen as his Chief of Staff Rear Admiral Charles Madden, another most distinguished officer, who happens to be his brother-in-law. Sir John Jellicoe and Rear Admiral Madden served together at the Admiralty on more than one occasion, both having, indeed, been Sea Lords, and they married daughters of Sir Charles Cayser, Bart. Sir John Jellicoe and Rear Admiral Madden are known to be in the most complete accord on matters of strategy and tactics, and were both associated in the creation and equipment of the ships of the Home Fleets, on which the fortunes of the British Empire will depend. They were members of the famous Dreadnought Defence Committee, and were associated with Admiral of the Fleet Lord Fisher of Kilverstone in his many reforms in naval administration. No officer whom the Admiralty could have selected to go afloat at this juncture enjoys so completely the confidence of the naval service as Sir John Jellicoe. In December, 1912, he became a member of the Board of Admiralty, and then vacated the command of the Second Division of the Home Fleet, to which he was appointed over the heads of 11 vice-admirals—a fact which in itself points to the high estimation in which he is held by the naval authorities. Born on June 5, 1859, he is the son of Captain J. H. Jellicoe, Inspector at Scourgdeas, Sir John Jellicoe entered the royal navy as a cadet on July 15, 1872, passing out of the Britannia first of his "batch" by over a hundred marks. In the examination for sub-lieutenant, which rank he attained six years later (Dec. 5, 1878), he took three "firsts," in itself a remarkable achievement.

GREAT ON GUNNERY.

Much has been said about the improvement of good shooting in the navy, and in this connection considerable praise is due to Admiral Jellicoe. Without his help—so a writer in The United Service Journal once remarked, reflecting a judgment which is known to be well founded—the good work fostered by Admiral Sir Percy Scott would have been heavily handicapped—in fact, impossible; for the then Director of Naval Ordnance proved himself a man of original thought and prompt action, and one of the most capable gunnery experts in the navy.

During the time he was in command of the Drake, he turned it into one of the best shooting ships in the navy, and while he was at the Admiralty as Director of Naval Ordnance, Capt. Jellicoe did all that was possible to ensure the guns mounted in ships in the first fighting line being fitted with the most up-to-date day and night sights, as well as to instal a fire-control set of instruments in each ship for "spotting" and controlling at long-range shooting.

Meaning of the Green Bough.

The custom of placing a green bough on the roof of a newly built house is not confined to Germany, but was adopted by the French Canadians, who brought it with them from Brittany. The custom originated from the superstition prevalent centuries ago that every tree is inhabited by a spirit; consequently it was believed that every time a tree was felled another spirit was dispossessed, and this was supposed to cause some bitterness on his part against society. Rather than risk having these homeless and disgruntled spirits vent their ill feeling upon the houses under construction or upon the builders a branch was planted on the highest part of the house for their occupancy. They were then supposed to be mollified, and if they remained so until the roof was put on any evil design contemplated would prove harmless, for the spell would be broken.

Brazil Found by Accident.

Amerigo Vespucci made the first map of Brazil, although only of the coast line, and it was the publication of this map that led to the fixing of the name of the new world. Brazil itself was revealed to Europeans in 1500 by an accident—the drifting out of its course of a Portuguese expedition. The country indirectly owes its modern advancement to Napoleon. To escape from the conqueror King John of Portugal fled to his dominions in America and, believing Portugal lost to the royal family, set about putting Brazil upon a civilised basis by throwing open its ports to the whole world.

A Bit of Forestry.

"Do you know how to tell a hard wood tree from a soft wood tree?" said a forester. "I'll tell you how to do it, and the rule holds good not only here among our familiar pines and walnuts, but in the antipodes among the strangest banyans, baobabs and whatnots. Soft wood trees have needle leaves, slim, narrow, almost uniform in breadth. If you don't believe me consult the pine, the spruce or the fir. Hard wood trees have broad leaves of various shape—the oak, the ebony, the walnut, the mahogany and so on."

Wireless in the Field Prevents Communication Ever Being Cut Off

WIRELESS telegraphy is the new force in modern warfare which has changed all the old problems of communication. Formerly the aim was to capture and destroy the enemy's telegraph lines or submarine cables. Nowadays the matter is not so simple, for the wireless zones cover Europe, and ships at sea may be in touch with the War Offices in their capitals.

A wireless expert, writing in The London Chronicle, gives in an illuminating way the realization of what the new telegraphy means and how it is made use of in war. He says:—

"Through the medium of the Eiffel Tower regular communication should be maintained with the wireless telegraph station at Moscow or St. Petersburg and France and Russia should therefore be able to keep in continuous communication, despite any interruption of the ordinary telegraph service. The danger of interference with the wireless service by stations of the opposing nations is practically non-existent. To commence with, each station would be too busily engaged in dealing with its own correspondence to attempt to prevent another station from working, and at best they could only hope to overhear communications.

"TAPPING IMPRACTICABLE.

"In wireless telegraph, the adjustment of one circuit to another in such a way that the 'time-periods' are the same throughout the system, so that electro-magnetic waves possessing a different time-period will produce little or no effect on the system, considerably reduces the danger of tapping messages, while the provision of secret codes and cyphers would make such fragments of messages as are overheard unintelligible to an outside party.

"An incident during the recent Balkan war illustrates the remarkable reliability of wireless telegraphy. During the siege of Adrianople, all communication between the city and Constantinople was stopped. But shut up in the beleaguered city with the imprisoned garrison was a 1½ k.w. Marconi wireless telegraph station of the portable type, and this fortunate circumstance alone enabled her to keep in touch with Constantinople, where is installed another Marconi station.

At no time did the station fall, and during the time that the city was invested over 450,000 words were transmitted to headquarters without a hitch. This, too, in spite of the difficulties the allies attempted to create by placing one of their stations to the westward of Adrianople and another to the eastward, so that they might come as nearly as possible in a direct line between the Adrianople and Constantinople stations. As soon as the latter commenced calling up Adrianople, or vice versa, the allies hammered away at their two stations in a vigorous but vain attempt to "jam" the Turkish signals. The efforts of the Turks were entirely successful.

STOPS GUERILLA WARFARE.

"Thanks to Mr. Marconi's genius, and largely to his company's enterprise, portable wireless telegraphy is available for field use. It is more than likely that the use of this apparatus will help to curtail that particularly troublesome form of warfare—guerilla fighting.

"Portable military stations are designed to be carried in carts, automobiles, on pack-saddles, and by hand, and they are adapted for use on aeroplanes and airships, the range of communication being 13 and 350 miles or more, according to the type employed. The Marconi stations are ingeniously designed to insure absolute secrecy, the method being to change the wave-length of the transmitter at frequent intervals from one fixed wave-length to another in a fraction of a second.

"The operator can therefore change his wave-length or 'tune' after every three or four words to any of the waves to which his switch has been adjusted by sending a code letter indicating to which 'tune' he was about to change. The operator at the station with which he is communicating, and whose receiver is similarly fitted, would be able to follow him without difficulty. The wireless service of an army, properly organized with such stations as these, makes it impossible for any station not informed to read messages transmitted.

GUARDING BRITAIN.

Sir A. K. Wilson Describes the Coast Defence System.

Is invasion possible? asks London Tit-Bits. This has now become a vital question, for there is an ever-present dread in the minds of many people that we are liable at any moment to be invaded by Germans or bombarded by the German fleet.

But let us, even in this dark hour, endeavor to put our minds at ease. Sir Arthur K. Wilson, the great naval authority, recently stated emphatically that the invasion of England is impossible, for the following reasons.

The really serious danger that this country has to guard against in war is not invasion, but the interruption to our trade and destruction of our merchant shipping. Before the Germans can land on our shores it will be necessary for them to run the gauntlet of our North Sea, Channel, and other fleets, which, let it be remembered, are in wireless communication with their commanders-in-chief and with the Admiralty.

Thus, if the smallest gunboat suspects danger, in an amazing short space of time the whole fleet, and also the Admiralty, will be informed of the fact by wireless. Many people are of the opinion that our coast-guards are old-fashioned and out of date. Needless to say, such people have no knowledge of our splendid coast defence organisation.

Supposing by some extraordinary mischance the Germans do succeed in an attempt to reach a temporarily unprotected part of our shores—and there are very few spots now unprotected—what would be the result? Simply this—certain destruction for the Germans. For if that does happen by any strange and unforeseen stroke of ill-luck, the enemy's transports or warships will, directly their presence is detected, and long before troops can be landed, be attacked and sunk by some of the submarines comprising the chain that is stationed all along our coast for that very purpose.

Besides these submarines, there is a large force of destroyers either in the ports along the coast or within wireless call.

In addition to these vessels that are definitely detailed for coast defence, the system of relief for those acting at sea ensures a large number being probably in harbor at their respective bases or within call while going to or from their stations.

These destroyers form, in conjunction with the submarines, an effective second line of defence in the very improbable event of such a second line being required.

We thus see that not a single loophole has been left or overlooked whereby it can be possible for the Germans to gain a footing along the coast.

Even greater precautions are being taken. Nothing, however insignificant it may seem to the landsman, is being left to chance. It stands to reason that the nation has not been spending millions of pounds for the maintenance of our sea supremacy without the authorities taking the greatest care that the splendid body of men whose duty it is to guard our lives and homes are thoroughly efficient in the minutest details affecting the service, be they admirals or stokers.

Reid on an Island.

Crofters from the Island of Harris, off Scotland, last spring seized the southern half of the neighboring island of Taransay and planted potatoes there, and now serious trouble is anticipated. A board of agriculture commissioner has visited and reported that the seizure merely amounted to a few landless cottars taking advantage of a trifling privilege for many years granted them by the farmer of the island. It now appears that the land seizure was on a much larger scale, and that the raiders planted potatoes extensively after the visit of the commissioner. They have also got fencing materials, and have enclosed their potato ground so as to secure it from injury to the tenant's stock.

Their intention now is to remove the farmer's cattle to the northern and larger end of the island, and they have commenced building houses, as they are of the opinion they have a kind of hereditary right to land where they have so long been residents.

Historic Clontarf.

Clontarf, where the recent collision between the National Volunteers and the soldiers took place, is one of the most historic spots in Ireland. It was there that, on Good Friday, April 23rd, 1014, Brian Boru and the men of Munster, Connaught, and Meath fought the Danes. Brian was killed in his tent; Sigurd, Earl of Orkney and Caithness, perished also; and 11,000 Irishmen and 13,000 Danes are said to have fallen. Victory remained with the Irish, but the Danes reoccupied Dublin.

In modern times O'Connell's monster meetings for Repeal were to have culminated at Clontarf. But the meeting was prohibited by the Government, and O'Connell was put upon his trial for conspiracy, and convicted, though the verdict was eventually reversed by the House of Lords.

Greatest Song Writers.

The immortal quartet of song writers are Goethe, Heine, Burns and Beranger. Of the four Burns is by far the most popular. Goethe was at heart an "Olympian" and in all things a critic; Heine was in his deepest soul a pessimist and cynic; Beranger, while much more human, was a little too critical, while Burns, demonstrate to the core and of immense sympathy, threw himself into the common human life of the world with a whole heart and wrote the songs that will live and be loved while humanity endures.—New York American.

THE RESEMBLANCE.

Although Very Striking, It Was Not Quite Complete.

The tramp sat serene and dirty on the back door step, eating the breakfast for which he had whined, and the servant stood looking at him curiously.

Presently the knight of the road observed the attention she was paying him.

"Wotter yer lookin' at me for?" he asked in idle curiosity. "Think I'm a long lost cousing?"

"No," replied the maid coolly, "but I must say you remind me of a man I once knew."

"Sweetheart?" asked the tramp.

"None of your business!" was the maid's retort. "But something happened to him which'll never happen to you!"

"What's that? Died a millionaire, did he?"

The maid's reply was crushing.

"No; he was accidentally drowned while bathing!"—Omaha Bee.

Her Fear.

Bismarck was no favorite with women, least of all clever women, who dared to think for themselves and imagine that they could fathom questions of state. He was never tired of snubbing strong minded ladies, putting them down and stamping on them.

One day he paid a visit to the Russian embassy at Berlin, where he behaved as usual, flouting even the mistress of the house, the Countess Schouvaloff herself. He took his leave at length, to the relief of everybody, and presently the family mastiff was heard barking at the great man as he passed through the courtyard. Immediately the countess ran to the open window, and Bismarck heard her voice saying to him in a tone of gentle entreaty:

"Oh, please, M. le Chancellor, don't bite my dog!"—London Tit-Bits.

He Couldn't Understand.

A small boy was seated in the parlor with his sister's persistent young man. Being of an inquiring mind, he asked Mr. Gaysmith, "Do you weigh very much?"

"About 150 pounds, my little man," the hopeful lover responded.

"Do you think sister could lift you?" the boy continued.

"Oh, goodness, no!" said the young man, blushing at the mere thought. "But why do you ask?"

"I don't believe she can, either, but I heard her tell ma this morning that she was going to throw you over as soon as she could."—London Weekly Telegraph.

Took a Load Off Mother's Mind.

Six-year-old Dora returned unusually early from school the other day. She rang the doorbell. There was no answer. She rang again, a little longer. Still there was no response. A third time she pushed the button, long and hard. Nobody came to the door. Then she pressed her nose against the window screen and in a shrill voice, which carried to the ears of every neighbor on the block, called:

"It's all right, mamma. I ain't the instalment man!"—Fun.

Same Effect.

Did Not "Spot" Bobs.

One of the most interesting collections of autographs in existence may be found in the parish church of Stratford-on-Avon, Shakespeare's town. It belongs to the sacristan, who has an almost miraculous instinct for the scenting of celebrities. And if you ask the sacristan he will be pleased to show you the book. There are the signatures of the Kings and bishops, poets and playwrights, painters and musicians, singers and statesmen. You will find Mr. Balfour on one page, Marie Lloyd on another. But the custodian of the volume has one regret. He failed to secure the signature of Lord Roberts, the famous general having left the church without being "spotted."

Line of Swiftest Descent.

What is the line of swiftest descent? To any one not acquainted with the laws of higher mathematics a proposition such as this would appear absurd, the most obvious answer being a straight line. However, it has been proved by mathematicians that the line of swiftest descent is a curve called the cycloid. It is this curve that the eagle unconsciously utilizes in his wonderfully swift swoop to his prey. The analysis of the curve is simply a straight line motion combined with a circular motion. The best illustration showing this is a cartwheel as it rolls along the ground. Any point on the rim of the wheel is describing a cycloid, and no point is at any time describing a circle or going in a straight line. A peculiar thing is deduced from this knowledge, and that is that no point on the rim of a wheel rolling on a surface goes round the center of the wheel, for the center is describing a straight line, and all the points on the rim are describing cycloids; thus as no circular motion exists, the statement holds.—New York Press.

Tennyson's First Poems.

The wind came sweeping through the garden of an old Lincolnshire rectory one morning in the beginning of last century and blew upon a child five years old, who opened his arms to the blast and let it carry him along, crying as he traveled, "I hear a voice that's calling in the wind." That was Tennyson's first line of poetry. The first poem he ever composed was written upon a slate one Sunday morning at Louth. The subject, set him by his brother Charles, was "Flowers," and little Alfred covered his slate with blank verse after the model of Thomson's "Seasons." His next attempt was an elegy upon his grandmother, who had just died, written at the request of his grandfather. When it was written the old man put 10 shillings into the boy's hand and said, "There; that is the first money you have ever earned by your poetry, and, take my word for it, it will be the last."—Westminster Gazette.

The Silent Trombones.

Hans Bruder was one of the two trombone players in the Apollo orchestra. On the evening of a special concert, in the course of which an overture that contained a trombone solo was to be played, Hans received an urgent invitation to attend a small party in a neighboring town. Mindful of his responsible position in the concert, he hesitated for a long time before accepting, but he was an easy-going, pleasure loving soul, and an idea dawned on him—he would send a substitute to the concert in his place.

For the position of substitute he picked out a friend who could not play the trombone, but Hans assured him that skill was not necessary; it would be enough if he should puff out his cheeks and move the slide in perfect time with the other trombone player. Then Hans left him in charge of the instrument and hurried for the train.

The substitute went to the hall. The overture began. After a wild burst of music and a crash of drums came deadly silence. The frantic conductor stared at the substitute and waved his baton. Every head in the orchestra turned to see what was the trouble. But not a sound came from the puffing, pumping trombone players.

The other man also had sent a substitute.

Queer Reasoning.

An old artisan who prided himself on his ability to drive a close bargain contracted to paint a huge barn in the neighborhood for the small sum of $12.

"Why on earth did you agree to do it for so little?" his brother inquired.

"Well," said the old painter, "you see, the owner is a mighty unreliable man. If I'd said I'd charge him $25 likely he'd have only paid me $10. And if I charge him $12 he may not pay me but $9. So I thought it over and decided to paint it for $12, so I would not lose so much."—New York Globe.

Corrected Her.

The American tourist was taking the rest cure for a day in a London boarding house.

"I shall want no more meals," she said when the maid brought up tea. "I shall be up for dinner. There's nothing more I want."

Then in the next breath she added: "Oh, yes, there is! I want that hot water bottle. But that's not to eat."

The cockney maid stood silent for a moment, then said gloomily: "Oh, yes, it is to 'eat! You want me to 'eat it for you."

A Test of Nerve.

To crouch in a trench or covered bombproof from dawn until dusk, to hear the incessant whistle of thousands of projectiles, to mark the little clouds of dust kicked up by bullets as they strike the ground near a trench or shelter, to start at the bursting of shrapnell shells, each containing 200 or 300 bullets which are scattered over many yards, is a test of human nerve which Napoleon's Old Guard was never called upon to withstand.—Waldemar Kaempffert in American Review of Reviews.

Lunar Rainbows.

Lunar rainbows are seldom observed in the temperate zone. Very likely the physical phenomenon occurs frequently, but is invisible because of the faintness of the moon's light. In the tropics, where moonlight is more intense, says the Scientific American, lunar rainbows are more frequently observed. They are by no means rare at Reunion island. At all places the phenomenon is most frequently seen at full moon when the moon's light is highest, but it has been seen in various phases of the moon. It was first observed by Aristotle. A lunar rainbow is produced at full moon by the spray of the great Victoria falls of the Yguassu, in Brazil.

Not So Short.

He was supposed to be a poor but otherwise honest young man, while she was admittedly a thing of beauty.

"Will you marry me?" he asked.

"No," she answered.

"You are very short," he muttered.

"Ditto," she replied. "That's why there is nothing doing in the matrimonial line."

"Oh, I don't know!" he sneered as he extracted an obese billbook from an inside pocket and displayed a number of $1,000 bills. "I'm not so short."

Whereupon the unwary maid tried to fall upon his neck, but he gracefully sidestepped, and she fell to the floor in a faint.—Chicago News.

The Kat Plant.

In parts of Abyssinia and Yemen the natives use a plant called kat (Catha edulis), the effects of which are similar to those of the Peruvian coca. The freshly cut leaves have a rather pleasant taste and produce a kind of intoxication of long duration, with none of the disagreeable features of ordinary inebriety. Messengers and soldiers are enabled by chewing the leaves to go without food for a number of days. Among those who abuse the habit the body tends to dry, the visage becomes emaciated, and nervous trouble follows, the most usual being a trembling of the limbs, but these cases are rare.

Pride of the Peruvians.

The Peruvians are a proud, imperial race, living amid the grandest scenery of the western hemisphere and holding high ideals of what is best in education and the unbought grace of life. On the great country estates there is much of the fine traditional chivalrous sentiment that came from the best people of Castile and Aragon. The Indians of the high plateaus are a unique reminder of a civilization that bourgeoned centuries before the face of the white man had blossomed like a flower in the western forests. The immemorial records of a civilization that vanished in the midst of man's earliest recollections are faintly suggested in splendid ruins among sublime scenes. The name and fame of the brilliant men who built the walls and temples of Cuzco are lost, and all we know of the wonder and the charm of that forgotten culture in the Andes is found in the pathetic ruins of cities that are half as old as recorded time.—Peter MacQueen in National Magazine.

Unwritten Law of the Sea.

Here is one of the unwritten laws of the sea which we think could be repealed to advantage. It is that which requires the captain of a ship to stay on the bridge during fog or very bad weather, no matter how long it continues. It is a fairly common thing to read in dispatches that the captain of this or that ship had been on the bridge for twenty-four or forty-eight or even sixty hours at a stretch because of storm or fog. Why should this be practiced? The most rugged man alive cannot be as alert, mentally and physically, after twenty-four hours of exposure as he was when he went on duty. He cannot be as competent to render quick decisions—such, for instance, as an impending collision might call for—as a man who was unfatigued. The average transatlantic passenger, we fancy, would much prefer to trust his life in an emergency to a fresh chief officer than to a jaded captain.—Marine News.

A Queer Punishment.

The Slovaks (Hungary) are a very peaceful, law abiding community, but there are probably black sheep among their number, and in front of a church at Postyen may be seen an ancient stone pillar, reminiscent of the days when punishment was meted out in much the same way as it was in England in those days. Fastened to this pillar in the center is a large iron clasp, and at the base two smaller ones close together. These clasps fitted around the waists and ankles of the offender, and when a man or woman had stolen something he or she was locked to this post on a Sunday and compelled to hold in the hands whatever had been stolen. Every Slovak attends church on Sundays, from which it may be gathered that this public exposure was no small ordeal. The post bears a terse inscription, the translation of which is: "I do not ask you to come, but if you come I receive you."—Wide World Magazine.

"DON'TS" FOR WAR CRITICS

Lord Curzon, addressing a meeting at Harrow, Eng., gave the following twelve pieces of advice:

Don't think the war does not affect you individually.

Don't be overjoyed at victory; don't be downhearted at defeat.

Don't be unnerved by personal or family bereavements.

Don't be frightened at the casualty lists, so long and sometimes so distressing.

Don't think that you know how to wage the campaign and that the War Office does not.

Don't get nervous because the progress of the war is slow; it can only be slow in these stages.

Don't believe all that comes from Berlin.

Don't underrate the enemy.

Don't waste breath in attempting to ascertain what is to happen to the German Emperor in this world or the next. We will endeavor to dispose of him in this world.

Don't begin to divide up the German Empire before you have got hold of it.

Don't listen to anyone who cries "Halt!" before we have carried out the full purpose for which we are fighting.

When the war is over don't throw away the lessons of the war.

Lord Curzon said the Kaiser's name would go down to history as "William the Bloo' tained" and "William the Assassin."

WHAT GERMANY LACKS

Individual Initiative of Kaiser's Soldiers Not to be Compared to Allies

The special correspondent of the London Morning Post at Belgian headquarters, communicated to his paper some highly interesting and instructive information regarding the studious war preparations of the German army and the actual efficiency of that body in active service. The correspondent wrote:

"A general impression of German army war tactics after some weeks' observation in the field leaves these two points outstanding: (1) the wonderful thoroughness of preparation on the part of the German nation for this war; and (2) the failure of the German nation to assert a superiority over, or even an equality with, its British, French and Belgian antagonists in unforeseen contingencies calling for individual initiative.

"In all that could be provided for by thought beforehand, in all the book-work and routine of war, in the matters of discipline and of equipment, the German force was generally above criticism. In those other things which tell of the character of a race, of its native wit, and its natural courage the German has taken second place to the Belgian, the Frenchman, the British man."

A German Warning

Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, of New York, who is of German birth, but has lived in the United States for fifty years, takes a view of the war which is original at least. He wants the war to end in a draw. He does not want the allies to win; but neither does he want Germany to win "by too big a margin." Germany, he says, could not be trusted with such a power as

JACOB H. SCHIFF
the New York banker

a complete victory would give her. It would make her a menace to the entire world.

In the role of a world-conqueror Germany would become a world-dictator—would indulge in a domination which would be almost unbearable to every other nation, said Mr. Schiff in an interview.

An Old Soldier's Ideal

In times of peace General Joffre lives in a little house at Auteuil, 6, Rue Michel Ange. The blinds have been drawn since the beginning of the war, but passers-by always notice a modest little bunch of flowers placed on the doorstep. These flowers are renewed each week. For some time it remained a mystery whence these bouquets came, but it was eventually discovered that the donor was "Pere" Jean Gaylard, a veteran of '70, who was wounded three times. He works as a linkman at the Auteuil railway station.

GERMAN EMPIRE MUST GO

She Must be Stripped of Her Colonies, Says Sir Harry Johnston

In the Teuton dream of world conquest Palestine was enumerated. "When I saw the documents in London which established this fact," said Sir Harry Johnston, the eminent African explorer, in an address at Toronto, "I ascribed it to the vanity of the German Emperor, and his probable aspiration to promulgate upon the Mount of Olives his own gospel."

The speaker was ruthless in his exposure of facts surrounding the

SIR HARRY JOHNSTON

Prussian militarist intrigues for conquest, but he was eminently fair and generous in his tribute to the German people. In thirty years, as a colonising power, said he, Germany had deserved well of the civilized world. Her present outbreak reminded him of nothing so much as "the criminal lunacy of a near-relative or an esteemed neighbor."

The outcome was inevitable. The German Empire as such must pass away. The German overseas dominions must all pass into other hands. Russia would secure a cancellation of railway concessions to Germany throughout the Turkish Empire, giving the Russians a Mediterranean port opposite the Island of Cypress. Germany would be freed from "the ambition, the cruelty and the duplicity of the Prussian dynasty."

DRIVEN INTO BATTLE

Raw German Lads Offered as Sacrifice, Officer Had Knout

A subaltern in the 6th Division writes: "The enemy made a night attack on the regiment in front. I know all this is true. About 300 Germans advanced with shouts and happened to hit on a gap between two trenches, so most got through in rear of our lines; some of them then started to fire on our trenches from the rear, while others sat down and lighted a fire and sang hymns. Of course, most of them were bayoneted and the rest captured. They were all young recruits, about 17 years old, some of them with brand new kits; they had been sent out with only one officer, and told to break through our lines and not come back. Their bolts were taken from their rifles, and they were evidently driven forward, as a cat-o'-nine-tails was found on one of the dead; some of them were weeping with fright, and all the prisoners were overjoyed at being taken alive. Of course, what had happened was that these raw recruits had been sacrificed to attract our attention, while an attack was going on further down the line."

The Supreme Test of a Healing Agent

Psoriasis or Chronic Eczema Defied All Treatment Until Dr. Chase's Ointment Was Used.

After suffering with the terrible itching of Psoriasis for five years, and being told by physicians that she could not be cured, Mrs. Massey turned to Dr. Chase's Ointment and was entirely cured.

MRS. MASSEY.

You will find this letter interesting, and will not wonder that the writer is enthusiastic in praising this ointment.

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes:—"For five years I suffered with what three doctors called psoriasis. They could not help me, and one of them told me if anyone offered to guarantee a cure for $50.00 to keep my money, as I could not be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and I am glad to say I am entirely cured, not a sign of a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this ointment enough."

Can you imagine a more severe test for Dr. Chase's Ointment? This should convince you that as a cure for eczema and all forms of itching skin disease Dr. Chase's Ointment stands supreme. Put it to the test. 60c a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Romantic Story of Peer.

The death at Llandaff House, Weybridge, Wales, recently, of the Earl of Stamford recalls one of the most romantic histories of the peerage.

The family is a very old one, dating from the time of Richard Coeur de Lion. Lady Jane Grey, who occupied the throne of England for a few days, was perhaps its most notable member.

Lord Stamford's earldom was created for a Grey who led a Roundhead host in the field against his sovereign. Royalist historians write him down as a bad general and a cowardly soldier, while his Puritan companions found his life scandalous and unseemly. But when the tide turned he had the sense to tack about, and so, in spite of the doings of a son whose name is on King Charles' death warrant, the new earldom was saved to his descendants.

The seventh earl died in 1883, and his heir was discovered in South Africa, an unfrocked missionary, who, after two marriages in humble life, had lately legalized his union with a half-breed Kaffir woman, the sister of a Dutch wine-grower's slave boy. English society did not call back the new earl. He was content to live on in his corrugated iron shanty at Wynberg, adding to his seats a stone-built house, which he called "Stamford Hall."

He lived happily with his colored wife for several years, and had one daughter, who married Mr. Pieter Pieterse, of the Transvaal. There were no children of the two previous marriages.

When the late earl succeeded to the peerage he was professor of Classics and Philosophy at Codrington College, Barbados.

Weighing Words.

An Advertising Expert says, "The man who weighs his words, says what he means and no more, is the one who gets a reputation for solidity in his community. Advertisers should remember this. Exaggeration is futile—it does not convince. Aside from the morality of the matter, it does not pay to insult the intelligence or stretch the credulity of your public. Get a reputation for truthful advertising, and people will go a long way out of their road to do business with you."

JOLLITY AT THE FRONT.

Advent of Christians Is Relished By the Troops.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—A Times' correspondent in northern France wires: Let those who wish to form a true picture of the British soldiers' Christmas Day think of them as sitting in their trenches at the evening meal and shouting across to the Germans in their trenches: "Say, Walter, you've forgotten the soda."

There will be plum puddings in the trenches. If report speaks truly it is probable that the puddings will be eaten under fire—perhaps in intervals of fierce action.

In the hospitals, too, the same spirit prevails. I heard a number of wounded Belgian soldiers singing Christmas carols last night. Their voices were gay.

High Insurance Against War.

LONDON, Dec. 24. — Lloyds is charging 30 guineas per cent. to insure against war between Italy and Germany, Austria and Turkey within one month, and 50 guineas per cent. that war between those countries will not be declared within six months.

Five guineas per cent. is asked to insure against war breaking out between Great Britain and Norway within 12 months.

Most than one of the contestants is beginning to look on the whole affair as an overworked shell game.

It is better to be a depositor in the savings banks of America than a plutocrat in the capitals of Europe.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

Fur collar, cuffs and belt striped silk in green, blue and white is employed effectively, considering that the gown itself is in the same tone of green so that the silk echoes it as well as brightens it. It is almost necessary in combining striped and plain materials that some color among the stripes match the plain fabric. The skirt of this dress is something of a relief after the many plain skirts, fastening as it does on the side and having box plaits at the back. The waist crosses over in surplice style and has tiny tucks at each shoulder. So that you may copy it, a pattern can be obtained, No. 6979, which comes in six sizes, from 34 to 44 bust measure.

It is possible to use stripes in any of three ways, that is, lengthwise, crosswise or bias, but the bias effect is not often seen. Particularly is the circle cut as in the picture, with the stripes running up and down, and ending with stripes running round or diagonally. These points are small seemingly themselves, but for the successful use of striped materials are most important. Striped velvets make handsome waistbands and are used for shaped of trouser when the sleeves are made of different material from the body. In the latter case some other portion of the dress is trimmed with velvet—the girdle or the underskirt.

Price 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number of the pattern required.

"A Continuous Christmas"

Mr. G. A. Gillespie's Reference to "A Continuous Christmas" in the Examiner's "Symposium of Views" on Thursday, is More Fully Endorsed.

In the following timely editorial from the Christian Science Sentinel of last week by John B. Willis:

The return of the Christmas-tide this year is sure to remind all thoughtful Christians of the heart-saddening incongruity between the sweet song of "On earth peace," that floated down out of the Judean skies that first Christmas time, and the outcries of passion and of pain attending the present strife among Christian nations. Surely there will be at least a momentary lull in this strife, when above its dreadful din the echo of those far-away angel voices is heard again, reminding all of the coming of the gentle Christ-child to teach men that only in love for God and love for one another can happiness and peace be found.

The sufficient reason for the Master's moments of apparent depression appears when we remember that, knowing the world's wilful way, its pride and selfishness and love of power, he must have anticipated the unspeakable tragedies of the past nineteen hundred years, when he said, "Ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars." Nevertheless, there remain his loving assurances: "Peace I leave with you;" "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." In these and other kindred sayings he disclosed the vital truth brought near again in Christian Science,—that despite all the turmoils of human experience, the promised Comforter is come, and that it is ours to find the freedom and joy of heaven in the declaration and demonstration of the omnipresence and omnipotence of good.

The phenomenon of this mortal life can be known for what they are, the fictions of falsity, and their terrors escaped from only as we prove again the power of the Christ-idea, whose continuous coming constitutes the true Christmas-tide. We can celebrate a far-off event, but we can know and really possess only that which is present in consciousness; hence the significance of those wondrous words: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."

This is the secret of Christianity, as the Discoverer of Christian Science has declared in all her teaching,—that the true Christmas, the Child-coming, is not simply a long-time past occurrence to be rejoicingly remembered, but a state of consciousness to be entered into and manifested in affectionate and effective, that is, Christ-like living. It is that spiritual illumination and uplift of sense which makes men more wise, more loving, more pure, more just, more joyous, more gentle, and more inspiring. As the true concept of the Sabbath gathers up all the days of the week and gives them the sanctity of that which is consecrated unto the Lord, so the true concept of Christmas gathers up all the revelations of Truth, all the radiations of that "Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world, and scientifically centres them upon the solution of the one great problem, the redemption of humanity.

As the disciples took bread from the Master's hand and gave it to the multitude, so are we called to feed the hungry, comfort the afflicted, lift up the fallen, heal the sick; in a word, inaugurate Christ's kingdom, supplant the tragedies of warring sense with the peace and joy of a perennial Christmas.

How great the need in all the world to-day of those who are indeed Christ-like, who have a demonstrable knowledge of the Master's teaching, and who have gained something of his patience, his courage, his loyalty, his technique in demonstrating divine law, his skill in winning men!

Sardine Can Retreats in Face of Enemy

PARIS, France, Dec. 28. —An important item on the menu of the French infantryman in these cold days is tinned sardines.

At several points on the battle line, the French trenches are within 50 yards of the Germans, and not infrequently, in the intervals between active hostilities, and interchange of more or less uncomplimentary remarks takes place.

At one such place a week or so ago, a French soldier shouted across to the German opposite the information that he and his comrades were making a satisfying meal on a "mixed grill" of cheese, sausage and sardines.

The German retorted that the Frenchman was a liar, whereupon an empty tin was thrown at him for evidence.

He admitted the weight of it, but suggested that it would have been better had the tin been a full one. A few seconds later a full tin fell a little way in advance of his trench, and the German, who was half-famished and careless of consequences, began to clamber after it, only to find that the Frenchman had tied a string to it, whereby they were able to keep it out of his reach.

A roar of laughter went up and a voice called to him that if he wanted sardines he must come to the French lines to eat them. The German hesitated, and then came and ate, after which he was taken to the commander.

On another occasion in the Vosges, a French "seventy-five" began to work badly at the moment of a German infantry attack. The battery commander called for oil, but there was none to be had, except at a spot half a mile to the rear.

At this juncture one of the gunners remembered that two tins of sardines had been sent him from home. They are hurriedly wrenched open and the oil used for lubricating the gun, which was soon in action again.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Their Coast Line is Longer Than That of the United States.

"It is not generally known perhaps that the coast line of the Philippine Islands is longer than that of the United States," said a man who has spent more than fifteen years in that country. "The Philippines are numerous islands," he continued. "It would take one many months to tour all of the islands. Of course the climate varies, but in most parts it is delightful. The average temperature is lower than in many parts of the United States, and the humidity is not nearly so great. Records of temperature in the Philippines have been kept since 1903, and in that time the maximum recorded was 103 degrees. The mean temperature is from 70 to 80 degrees.

"If the humidity were great there are times when it would be almost unbearable, but ordinarily I would rather live in the Philippines than in most sections of this country. It is fortunate that in the month of greatest humidity, September, the temperature falls lower than at any other time of the year, which makes it possible to endure the conditions.

"I have frequently been asked if there is much drinking among the Filipinos. There is comparatively very little. The Filipinos have discovered even if some of our own countrymen have not, that alcoholic drinks and the tropics do not mix. It is seldom you see a Filipino intoxicated. There are native brewed drinks in different islands, but the people do not overindulge."

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.

More Liable to Generate in Powdered Than in Solid Substances.

The scientific phrase for combustion is oxidation, or the combining of some substance with the oxygen of the air. Some substances have greater affinity for oxygen than others, and whenever the combustion reaches a certain point of rapidity fire results.

Anything that increases the facility of combination with oxygen increases the danger of spontaneous combustion or explosion, and for that reason a substance is more dangerous when pulverised than when solid, because the separated particles of matter are brought more directly in contact with the oxygen of the air. There is no danger of spontaneous combustion or explosion in a mass of unground wheat, but mills have been destroyed by explosions of flour dust.

Mixed oils absorb oxygen and give off carbon and hydrogen, causing a rise of temperature that may reach the burning point, as has often occurred in heaps of rags, tow, sawdust and similar bodies soaked with oil, paint, varnish, turpentine and sometimes grease.

Bituminous coal is liable to spontaneous combustion when moistened with water, and the coal dust in mines is a common cause of explosions. Moisture aids spontaneous combustion in piles of damp hay or freshly mown grass, and barns have been burned from that cause.

How to Sweep.

Few people handle a broom properly, although instruction in its use every day of their lives. Always draw the broom to you, never from you. Sweeps (the strokes that are to be moved along more quickly, and will not raise much dust. Short strokes through the broom should not be in a part of sweeping way. With the handle toward the sweeper. This keeps the broom every sweeping much more laborious.

SPIES IN ENGLAND.

Mr. Le Queux's Startling Experiences With German Agents.

At the house of a mutual friend a few days ago, writes an English journalist, I renewed a pleasant acquaintanceship with Mr. William Le Queux, the popular novelist, who had retired from the Continent shortly before the outbreak of the world war. Naturally our conversation turned on the terrible struggle in which we are involved, and it was after expressing his admiration of the prompt manner in which our Government had grappled with the situation, and the extraordinary quickness with which our army had fleet had been so efficiently mobilised, that Mr. Le Queux remarked:

"Even more satisfactory, I think, is the manner in which this country is now being cleared of German spies. Of one thing you may be quite certain—that this war will result in the Secret Service Department adopting such measures in future that the German spy who values his skin will be too frightened to live among us for the purpose of prying into our military and naval secrets.

On this phase of the war Mr. Le Queux knows exactly what he is talking about. There is no man who possesses a more intimate knowledge of the Secret Services of Continental Powers. For several years he has worked quietly and assiduously gathering first-hand information concerning German spies, and the knowledge he has gained of their methods and the discoveries he has made have proved of the greatest value to our Foreign Office.

"Curiously enough," continued Mr. Le Queux, "the public for some time refused to believe in the perfect organisation of the German espionage system in this country. To-day they are beginning to realise what a menace to us German spies actually were. In 1908, while reconnoitring with two military experts between the Tyne and the Thames, work which occupied twelve months, for the purpose of writing my forecast, 'The Invasion,' I discovered extraordinary activity among German secret agents. They seemed to be everywhere, collecting details of telegraphic communications, telephones, fodder, horses, the location of banks, postoffices, food, stores, etc.

"It was in consequence of my discoveries that Colonel Mark Lockwood asked a question in the House of Commons regarding German spies in this country, a question which was met with laughter. Eight days later I placed before the authorities two hundred documents which left no doubt as to the exact situation. Without any delay they quietly established a Confidential Department to investigate the matter, and to register all suspected of being German agents.

"It was very quickly apparent that Germany had thrown an enormous number of secret agents upon our shores. I estimated the number at 3,000, and events have since proved that I was right."

Mr. Le Queux has played no small part in these investigations, and has come across many interesting and dramatic incidents. Five years ago a very excellent German band appeared in London, and played its plaintive tunes in various parts of the Metropolis. Six months later, during which time the members of the band were successful in making a large number of notes valuable to the German secret service, they were arrested and deported.

Military Service.

What is "actual military service"? This question was raised several times in the Probate Court after the Boer War. It had previously been decided, on the analogy of the Roman law, that a soldier was not on actual service unless he was on an expedition, and that he was not on an expedition because he was under orders to leave the barracks where he had been quartered to take part in a war.

Sir Francis Jeune took a less narrow view. In one case he decided that a Volunteer, having been accepted for service in South Africa and sent into barracks at Colchester under orders to embark, was already on an expedition; in another he held that a soldier in India whose will was contained in a letter written to a friend after his regiment had been mobilised for active service in South Africa, but before it had moved from the place where it was stationed, was already in expeditions.

Surgery at Sea.

Benefits that can be obtained by those who have to undergo a surgical operation in these days of advanced science attain bolder relief from a story told by Sir John Bland Sutton, surgeon to the Middlesex Hospital.

Sir John, who was speaking at a meeting of the British Medical Association in Aberdeen, referred to old-time methods. He described the indelicate treatment accorded in 1808 to the chief officer of a ship who had his hip dislocated. As a preliminary to the operation the patient drank half a bottle of brandy and fifty drops of laudanum. When he was properly drunk and drugged he was fastened by a ring-bolt on the deck, and ten seamen, under the superintendence of the captain, hauled steadily on the leg. Their efforts were unavailing. It was afterwards found that the efforts of the unfortunate patient's shipmates had broken the bone which interfered with the sciatic nerve.

Corner Shelves.

There is nothing so convenient as an extra shelf in an unused corner. The possibilities in a shelf are great, whether it be built in the kitchen, the cellar or the bath-room, nor is its useful use its only virtue. It may also be made ornamental by suitable draperies and a suitable shape to it.

LUCK.

Some people say it wasn't luck that made 'em rich and proud,
They claim 'twas wisdom, work and pluck that raised 'em from the crowd.
I don't deny that there's a pile of truth in what they say,
And yit it always makes me smile to hear 'em talk that way.

For instance, there was Henry Weed—taught school here years ago.
His learnin' wasn't any good. We had to tell him so.
He tried to get another school, but couldn't anywhere;
Directors thought he was a fool and said as plain and fair.
He, havin' nothin' else to do,
He wrote a silly book or two,
Most mushy stuff I ever read.
But I have lately heard it said
That Henry was a millionaire.

And there was John Tate's oldest son, a lazy, worthless chap.
When there was hard work to be done he never lugged his pap.
The old man drove him off at last—just told him plain and flat
That all the monkeyin' was past. What happened after that?
They say he's cultin' money down
And keeps six servants up in town,
He sells some kind of medicine
He guarantees to keep 'em thin
When women think they're gettin' fat.

Take them two fellers—was it pluck with which they were endowed,
Or was it just a bit of luck that made 'em rich and proud?
Take notice that I don't deny that work and wisdom win,
But when you say that ends it, why—excuse me if I grin.

Very Queer.

Harry Lauder, the famous Scotch comedian, was traveling by train in a compartment with one or two other people. Facing him was a man who, after peeping at him in a puzzled way over the top of his newspaper, at length summoned up courage to say:

"Excuse me, but you are very like Harry Lauder."

Mr. Lauder, very naturally, smiled broadly.

"Are you Mr. Lauder?" the other continued.

"Aye, that's me," replied the comedian.

"Well, that is queer!" the other exclaimed. "I thought you'd been sent to a lunatic asylum!"

The smile abruptly left Mr. Lauder's face, but after a somewhat awkward pause it came slowly back again.

"Oh, did you?" he said. "But, you see, I'm paid for bein' daft."—London Home Notes.

He Had Heard.

Farmer Turnut had had a good day at market. His cattle had fetched good prices, and, feeling flush, he bought a nice piece of cloth to have made into a suit of clothes.

But, alas, on his homeward way he lost it, a happening which annoyed Mrs. Turnut very much.

Full of the grievance, she told the vicar about it next day, blaming her husband's carelessness for the loss.

A week later the vicar met Turnut.

"Good morning, Mr. Turnut," said the good man. "Have you heard anything about your cloth?"

Turnut smiled sadly.

"Yes," he said solemnly and mournfully, yet philosophically, "I have—morning, noon and night!"—London Answers.

The Wife's Dilemma.

"The weather is very trying to everybody," said the doctor.

Lighter Than Cork.

One of the strangest trees in existence is the ambatch, growing in the shallow waters of Lake Chad, in Africa, a body of water which, when at its maximum extent, covers 10,000 square miles, and yet has, on the average, a depth of only six feet.

The ambatch tree grows so rapidly as to attain its full size, twenty-five feet high, with a trunk a foot in diameter, in two years. The wood when dried is wonderfully light, its density being only two-fifths that of cork.

THE ERA OF GLASS.

It May Come After Our Iron Ore Deposits Are Exhausted.

The iron ore deposits of the world are being rapidly exhausted, and the time is not far distant when we will have to get along without iron and steel. Before that day arrives some substitute for these valuable things will have to be found, and it has been suggested by a scientist familiar with the subject that the logical successor will be glass.

Glass can be made to meet nearly all the requirements of iron and steel and with improved methods of manufacture will be a great deal cheaper. There is an abundant supply of the materials from which glass is made, and long before iron reaches the objects stage it is many than likely that glass will be one of its strongest competitors.

The chief fault with glass is its brittleness, but it is possible even now to produce a grade of glass which can stand a great deal of hard usage and serve many of the purposes for which iron is employed. The progress of invention is bound to evolve a quality of glass which will be as strong and durable as iron and transparent as well.

The use of glass will effect a great improvement in sanitary conditions. The building of the future, according to this scientist, will have its walls, ceilings, floors, sanitary fixtures and almost everything else made of glass.—Exchange.

BELATED RECOGNITION.

Plaint of a Woman Who Was Shadowed by a Detective.

"Acquaintance with a detective is not the good thing some people may imagine," said a young woman who has never yet been accused of being an adventuress or anything else that is supposed to get one's name on the front pages of the newspapers.

"A few months ago I was robbed of a belt that I prized very highly because it was unique and cannot be duplicated. I spent considerable money and had the assistance of a headquarters detective, but without recovering the belt.

"That was all well enough, but the other day as I was walking down Broadway I saw Mr. Detective. He saw me, too, and remembered that he had seen me somewhere, but had evidently forgotten the circumstances. He 'shadowed' me for a block; then when I turned into a store he slipped into a doorway and waited for me to come out. Again he shadowed me till I turned into my doorway.

"At that point he seemed to suddenly remember that he had known me as a client, not as a victim, for as I looked back he seemed to have a sheepish look in his face as he turned and walked rapidly away."

New York's First Mayor.

The first mayor of New York, Thomas Willett, was inducted into office in June, 1665. Governor Richard Nicolls, the first English executive of the future Empire State, was responsible for the appointment of Willett, who was a wealthy merchant and trader and had a town house in New York and a country estate in Rhode Island, where his body was buried in 1674. Willett, who was a shrewd business man, governed New York honestly and well and after his first term of one year was made mayor again in 1667. The municipal government of which he was the head was composed of five aldermen, three Dutch and two English, and a sheriff, although police duties devolved largely upon the mayor, and he was police magistrate as well.

Americans In Ireland.

Dublin, the capital, is as distinctly different from Belfast as Washington is from Pittsburgh, for Dublin has few industrial plants and is a hotbed of politics. It has many historic spots, fine monuments, wide streets, a splendid university, a fine castle and a cathedral where the famous Dean Swift occupied the pulpit for years. Cork, too, is a pleasant city with a style distinctly its own, and here the American feels at home. It seems that half the residents there have friends or relatives in the United States, and one is continually hearing stories of these friends. The majority of the Irish who return to Ireland seem to open up a business in Cork, for I counted no less than a dozen shops on Patrick street with the word "American" attached to their signs. There was an American haberdasher, an American book store, an American photographic studio and an American lace store. One of the best places to see the native of southern Ireland is at "Paddy's Market," a sort of huge second-hand store set up in the open street in Cork.—Mrs. C. B. Miller in Leslie's.

Will Use Lots of Glass.

Over 1,000 tons of glass will be used on the buildings at the Panama exposition at San Francisco next year. Of this 550 tons have already been ordered. There will be 28,000 panes of glass in the facades of the machinery building and 65,000 square feet of glass in the skylight.—Wall Street Journal.

BRITISH ADVANCE IN FLANDERS

COMPLETE DEFEAT OF AUSTRIANS EXPECTED

SUCCESSFUL ADVANCE OF THE BRITISH IS REPORTED

Germans Forced to Establish a New Line South of Ypres as a Result of the Progress Made, Reports the Official Communique---Advances Along the Entire Line in the Rheims Region.

RUSSIANS CAPTURE 30,000 AUSTRIANS

PARIS, Dec. 28.—The successful advance of the British line in Flanders, forcing a new German line south of Ypres, was detailed in this afternoon's official statement. "The allies' advance in Belgian continues to the dunes." The statement continues: "At that point the Germans have established a new line south of Ypres." "Near Holtebeck a section of our trenches was lost. In the region of Lens the French troops have taken 500 yards of trenches. In the regions of the Aisne and in Champagne artillery duels have been of the most tense character. In the region of Rheims and Perthes slight progress has been made along the entire line by our troops. All along the heights of the Meuse, the Germans are bombarding St. Die."

PARIS, December 28. — (Special Cable).—For two days a violent battle has been raging along the entire front in the Vosges district. Reports received here today from Basle declare that during Saturday and Sunday extremely heavy cannonading could be heard in Switzerland. It was evident that the heaviest guns of both the Germans and the French were in action and the firing continued day and night.

The firing was preceded by one of the most remarkable flight yet credited to the French aviation corps. Leaving the French lines an aviator flew over Mulhausen and the surrounding country. Circling back and forth over the German lines he located the artillery of the enemy. The French gunners were given the range and immediately afterwards a deadly fire was opened upon the Germans.

With the guns of the allied fleet along the Belgian coast again hammering at the German positions fighting along the entire front has taken renewed vigour. On the French centre the allies have been able to strengthen their positions, despite the fierce counter attacks, and at some points have been able to take the offensive. Continued gains are reported from the Argonnes.

PETROGRAD, December 29.—News of another crushing defeat administered to the Austrians is now expected daily in Petrograd. With the official and unofficial reports indicating that the Russians have taken upwards of 30,000 prisoners during the recent fighting, indications to-day are that the Austrians are on the verge of a complete defeat at every point.

NEW YORK, December 28.—J. W. T. Mason, the war expert of the United Press says:

"The British air raid on Cuxhaven creates a paradox. The result should be satisfactory to England, chiefly because no serious damage seems to have been done to the Germans. If the English aviators had been able to inflict important losses on the enemy the raid would have demonstrated England's own insecurity against an air attack. As it is, one more proof is now forthcoming that offensive air tactics need cause no present alarm to the British Isles.

"The success of the British light cruisers in convoying aeroplanes to German waters and in returning unharmed, is a tribute to the skill and daring of English seamanship. The spirit demonstrated by the British raid is fully as high as that shown by the Germans when they assailed the Yorkshire coast. Berlin naturally emphasizes the fact that no damage was done by the hostile airmen.

"German warships did not venture from their fortified harbours to engage the British cruisers. In this

BANK CLERKS DID NOT BREAK THE LORD'S DAY ACT

Magistrate Rules That Only Persons Enumerated in the Act or of a Similar Class of Employment Are Barred By It

WAS A TEST CASE

Magistrate Dumble in this morning's police court dismissed the charges against three local Bank clerks who were accused of violating the Lord's Day Act by working on Sunday. The case was an important test one, and the decision was given as follows:

The charge herein is that the defendants, young bank clerks, did exercise their ordinary calling on the Lord's Day. The evidence was that they were engaged in balancing their bank books; that having special work to do at the end of the banking year they had got behind in their ordinary work and this Sunday afternoon were trying to make a little time to get their books up to date.

The charge is laid under the Act commonly known as the Lord's Day Act. This law was old English law (9 Car. 2 ch. 7) in force in 1792 when Upper Canada passed her Constitutional Act, and thereby adopted this English law, and it has ever since been the law of Ontario. It reads as follows:

Sec. 1—"It is not lawful for any merchant, tradesman, artificer, mechanic, workman, labourer, or other person whatsoever on the Lord's Day to sell or publicly show forth or expose or offer for sale or to purchase any goods, chattels, or other personal property, or any real estate whatsoever, or to do or exercise any worldly labour business or work of his ordinary calling, etc., etc." Penalties are imposed.

If the Act applies to these young men it would be under the words, any person whatsoever who do or exercise any worldly labour, business or work of his ordinary calling. Many charges have been laid under this Act, but few if any convictions made. The Judges unanimously decide that the Act applies only to the classes of persons enumerated therein and to others following like vocations. Laws against Sabbath breaking have existed since the reign of [illegible] Rome, who made himself Pope. Early laws were largely shaped by Ecclesiastics who aimed to make people religious by Act of Parliament. In present days the Judges seem inclined to leave such questions to be dealt with in fero conscientiae rather than in the courts of law.

In this case I find that the bank clerks are not of the class of people made liable under the law regarding the profanation of the Lord's Day, so I have no course open to me but to dismiss the charge.

"We regret to announce the death of Senator Kirkhoffer, who died in Ottawa last evening. For many years he was a resident of this town and was known as one of the most prominent cricketers of his day He captained the Port Hope Cricket Club for many seasons and led them to victory by winning the championship of the Province in 1881 There are only two members of that club now residing here, Dr. F. J. Burton and W. S. Blackstock. He was known by his team mates as 'Kirk' and was a jolly good fellow and the life of the boys on the cricket field. who were greatly attached to him, and those who are left of that team today will sadly regret his passing away."

AN ANSWER TO THREATS

That is How the British People Regard the Raid of Warships and Aeroplanes on Cuxhaven

ZEPPELINS FOILED

Special Cable:

LONDON, Dec. 28.—The raid of British warships and aeroplanes upon the German naval base and the dropping of bombs upon Cuxhaven may be regarded as England's answer to the threats of Admiral Von Tirpitz.

This was the statement of a government official here to-day. All England is elated as a result of the success of the British squadron in entering the waters of the heretofore dreaded Heligoland. It is generally believed to-day that the bombs dropped by the naval aviators did more damage than the Germans dare to admit.

"Von Tirpitz threatened with words to attempt to starve out England by establishing a submarine patrol and torpedoing merchant ships," the official declared.

"Deeds are better than words. The raid made upon Cuxhaven speaks for itself."

Naval and military authorities today declare that the raid of the British fleet and aeroplanes on Christmas day resulted in the explosion of one of Germany's greatest claims, that Zeppelins could be used successfully in attacks upon warships. Although Zeppelins were engaged with German aeroplanes in the attack upon British cruisers and destroyers, the bombs which they dropped fell harmlessly into water. The Germans claims that two cruisers and a convoy were struck and that the latter took fire. This is denied by the Admiralty.

That cruisers and Dreadnoughts are also able to retain their supremacy over submarines in an open fight was also demonstrated. English authorities assert by clever manoeuvring the British fleet completely frustrated the attacks made by German submarines.

The much-talked-of mayoralty contest between William Buller, present head of the civic administration, and George H Duncan, aldermanic representative for the South Ward, is a reality that sprang into being this morning simultaneously with the advent of the hour set for receiving nominations. There were few surprises outside of the incendiary remarks that were delivered by Mayor Buller following Ald. Duncan's expose of a conversation that was alleged to have taken place some time ago between Ald. Duncan and Mayor Buller, in which the latter assured Ald. Duncan that he would not oppose him at the forthcoming election.

The Mayor blamed the newspapers for leaking an election which he had hoped would go by acclamation. Trouble arose when one candidate got up to contradict statements made by the other.

Mayor Buller related a conversation that took place in ex-Mayor Bradburn's office. He said that he saw Ald. Duncan as he was leaving the building and was informed by the latter that he would not oppose him (Mayor Buller) if he decided to run for Mayor.

Ald. Duncan was to state that he was in ex-Mayor Bradburn's office when Mayor Buller came in. This ended the discussion.

One Acclamation.

The only candidate to be elected by acclamation was Mr. T. F. Matthews of the Public Utilities Commission. He expressed his appreciation

THREE YEARS FOR THE ASSAILANTS OF FRUIT DEALER

Two Italians Who Assaulted Mr. N. Minicola in Attempt to Rob Him, Committed to the Kingston Penitentiary

MIGHT HAVE BEEN MURDER

Nicholas Latanso and Frank Carnival, the two Italians who assaulted Nicholas Minicola on the night of Saturday, December 19th, came before Magistrate Dumble this morning for trial. They were found guilty of attempted robbery with violence, and were sentenced to three years in the Kingston Penitentiary.

The two men were arrested, it will be remembered, through the clever detective work of Sergeant Kidd and P. C. Deannard, who tracked their footprints for blocks in the snow, and later, when the men were arrested, made certain that the feet of the two Italians fitted with the footprints exactly.

Crown Attorney Hatton conducted the prosecution, and Mr. Widdifield, of Gordon and Widdifield, appeared for the defence.

Nicholas Minicola, the Hunter Street fruit dealer, was the first witness for the Crown. He said that it was his custom to keep his store open until midnight Saturday nights. On the Saturday night in question he shut up the store about 12 o'clock, and started for home. He had two hundred and fifty dollars in his pocket, including eighty dollars in cheques.

Witness had just turned from Reid Street on to Brock, when, in the act of shaking his pipe out, he noticed two men following him. He recognized Carnival, and identified him in Court. The other man he saw a minute later when he hit witness on the head with a hammer. He identified Latanso also as the other of his assailants. Witness stepped to one side to let the men pass, but instead of passing, Carnival threw his arms around Minicola from behind, thus pinning the latter's arms. He thought it was

CANADIAN SENTRIES KILL BUFFALO MAN

Another Duck Shooter is Wounded —Were in Canadian Waters Carrying Firearms When Fired Upon

DETAILS LACKING

SPECIAL WIRE TO THE EXAMINER:

BUFFALO, N.Y., Dec. 28.—Fired on by Canadian soldiers as their boats were approaching the Canadian shore of Niagara river near Fort Erie today, Walter Smith, a lake fireman of Buffalo is dead with a bullet hole through his head, and Charles Dorsch, also of Buffalo, is at the General Hospital with a bullet wound in his breast.

Details of the shooting are not yet known, but it is believed to have resulted from a recent order prohibiting the transportation of fire arms into Canada. Both men were in Canadian waters when the soldiers are said to have opened fire on them without the formality of asking questions. Smith and Dorsch engaged boats at Mutz Bros'. Ferry this morning, saying they were going duck hunting. They were warned regarding taking fire arms into Canadian waters.

Mr. Ward was an officer in one of the English regiments and had been in France since the opening of the war. He had been soldiering for a number of years, and had been in India with the regular troops. His brother, Mr. "Larry" Ward, enlisted with the first contingent at Galt and is now in Egypt.

The late Mr. Jack Ward has visited in Peterborough on several occasions, and friends here will be sorry to hear of his death.

NEW SPEAKER.

It is rather reversing the usual order to call in the doctor after the undertaker. Dr. Jameson, of South Grey, has been selected for promotion to the speakership of the Ontario Legislature in succession to W. H. Hoyle, of South Ontario, who was formerly connected with the undertaking business.

ABILITY NOT AGE COUNTS.

The youth of Mr. McBrien, of Toronto, is urged against his candidature for the Board of Control. Lack of years is not in itself a disqualification. Other things being equal—ability and judgment and honesty—the younger, within reasonable limits, the better. If it is true that "no fool is as bad as an old fool," it follows that the older an incompetent, the worse he is. Besides, if a young man is good the sooner he proves himself fit the better. In modern commerce and industry, we give preference to young men on the assumption that they have more energy and enterprise. Why should we exclude young men from municipal service? At the worst they can't be any worse than some of the seniors, who, though not senile from age, are too abundantly senile in their official capacities. Ability, not age, should be the gauge.

BALANCE THE ACCOUNT.

A few days ago a strong deputation waited on Premier Scott, of Saskatchewan, urging him to enact the closing of all bars during the war. In reply the premier is said to have said that the adoption of such a course would "throw many persons out of employment." There is no doubt truth in this contention; but Premier Scott might have done a little per contra figuring. If he had gone into the matter, might he not have found that if the money wasted over the bars had been saved to the homes, these homes, could have been able to contribute enough to have paid the unemployed through closing the bars, a fair salary for doing nothing, and still had more money for home comforts than when the bulk of the bread-winners' earnings were swallowed in the shape of beer and whisky? This would be a legitimate view to take of the matter if the economic aspect of the traffic is to be a deciding factor in dealing with it. Benighted Russia has found it to advantage to forbid the sale of vodka—rye whisky—as a war measure; but of course Canadian, and especially Ontario, politicians, have too much moral superiority over Russia to be caught by such considerations—political profit is much preferable to the good of the people.

THE BASE OF PROSPERITY.

We look for largely increased production of western grain next year; and to make the most of it, the crops must be moved with the greatest facility, and at the cheapest rates. The Victoria, B.C., Board of Trade has its eye on the Panama Canal as a good outlet. This body has prepared estimates showing that grain from points west of Moose Jaw can be moved by this route, to Europe at 9 cents per bushel, as against 25 or 26 cents per bushel by the present route in the open season; or by rail, during the winter, at 36 or 37 cents per bushel. If the estimates given are correct, this new route will serve Western Canada in good stead, while our Hudson Bay route is awiting for the completion of the railway, due to be finished in 1916. If the war lasts the demand for farm products of all kinds will be brisk, and with cheaper routes and better profits the tendency to production will be increased and "back to the land" will practically nullify the get-rich-quick mania. While we are unitedly striving to promote "business as usual," we shall be more and more impressed with the fact that extensive and well conducted agriculture is the basis of national prosperity and sound development.

A COMMON DELUSION.

There's financial genius inspiring the management of civic affairs in Ottawa. With an overdraft on current account of between $200,000 and $300,000, the city fathers propose to make every thing right by "boosting" the assessment $50 per head or about five millions next year—to repair the mistake of one form of extravagance by another. With the taxable value of all property at the lowest ebb, the Ottawa city fathers act under the delusion—rather a common delusion—that high taxation through high assessment is good administration.

HERSELF TO BLAME.

It is reported that "Berlin has had the saddest Christmas in centuries." This is easy of belief. Berlin owes its saddest Christmas to Germany—the Germany that has permitted itself to be shackled by the fetters of a mercenary and merciless militarism. The outrages in Belgium are coming back upon their perpetrators — the people of Germany—who have surrendered their manhood, and the rights of manhood to the military machine. The enemies, the Germans, are taught to most hate and despise, are the truest friends of Germany—will free Germany from her self-imposed bonds, that have contributed to making last Christmas the "saddest in centuries," not only for Berlin and Germany, but for the whole world. Before another Christmas it is hoped that the world and Germany will be free, and the Kaiser and his cult of brute force brutally exploited, will be evil memories only.

PEACE IN 1915?

Shall we have peace next year? That depends. Before we have peace Germany must be humbled and punished. The sword of justice must be unsheathed and used upon Germany for the crime she has committed in declaring and waging a war that had no justification, and has had unprecedentedly calamitous results in human suffering, industrial waste and irreparable loss. Germany must be made to realize what iniquitous tortures and wrong she has inflicted upon innocent Belgium. She must be made to pay for the devastation she has created in France. She must be made to compensate, so far as compensation can be made, the barbarous outrages she has committed upon the peaceful places and people of England. We can have no peace till the power that has wasted half the world and menaces the liberty of the rest, has been broken, to the end that when peace is made it shall be made world-wide, perpetual peace; when there will be universal disarmament, and the assurance given that peaceful and accordant settlement of international disputes shall replace the sanguinary arbitrament of force. Never in the world's history has the world experienced in every way the brutality of war as it has done in this war. And never have the nations, combatant and neutral, had forced upon them the tremendous folly of armed conflict and the subordinattion of the people to autocratic power. The people of a nation, not a bloody war caste, must be the supreme consideration. And we shall not make peace till this consideration takes first place in the minds of the world's rulers. We shall make peace when we shall have provided that democracy can dance on the grave of militarism and oppression.

AN IMPORTANT OVERSIGHT.

When, in the light of the happenings during the past four months, the preparedness of Germany is considered, especially its spy system, one can understand why Krupp, Kaiser, Kronprinz & Ko., really believed they could whip the whole world. They left only one thing out of their reckoning—the British mind. They seem not to have quite understood this. The personal equation has upset Germany's best laid plans.—Chicago Tribune.

ROBBING THE STARVING BEBLGIANS.

The German government has stood callously by without lifting a finger to save these millions of innocent noncombatants, whose bread its rapacity has stolen; and while foreigners send over shiploads of free food to keep them alive, its one thought is to put its fingers again into their pockets and feel if there are not perhaps still a few coins in them left to steal. — London Chronicle.

WE LOOK TO OUR LEADERS.

We look to the statesmen at Ottawa for good advice and assistance in these days, not only regarding the national position in the present struggle of the British Empire, but also of the national position in the money markets and the economic field generally. About these matters, we as Canadian citizens cannot be told too much by our leaders. But they are not, for some reason or other completely filling the need of the people for such mental food. With the exception of Sir George Foster Hon. W. T. White, and to a lesser extent, Sir Robert Borden, who have spoken several times to large audiences, we are being left to flounder along as best we can . . . Several of the statesmen at Ottawa seem to have been lost to the public eye in the mysterious atmosphere created by the handing out of war contracts. No information is being vouchsafed the public regarding these contracts their value and the firms getting them, so that preparation of those data is not taking much of their time. Sir Rober Borden should depute one or two of his colleagues to break what has become almost the silence of leadership, as he, Sir George Foster and Mr White have already done to a limited extent. — Monetary Times.

WHY BILL WAS A FAILURE.

"A man from Kansas was visiting a friend in this city last week.

"How is old Bill So-and-So," asked the friend.

"Bill is dead," answered the man from Kansas.

"Dead, hey? Did he die rich?"

"No; died a pauper."

"Bill was too smart to get along."

"Yes, if Bill had been blessed with as much reliability as he had ability he would have been a great man."

The above is reproduced from the Kansas City Star, which uses it editorially as a text on which to make some remarks for the benefit of young fellows who would like to get along in the world. In Toronto and in every town one does not have to look very far before he sees a fellow like Bill. The trouble with them is that they are too smart to get along. They want to make too much too often out of everybody. People find them out, learn that they always want the long end of every stick, are always taking short cuts to make gains, and are shifty and unreliable wherever self-interest is concerned. A man of this kind does not put much faith in any body, thinks everybody is out for number one, and does not care what happens to any other number. He will tell you that every rich man in town made his money crookedly, and he likes to give you what he calls the truth about these man, because in his way he justifies his own attitude. But as time goes on he can get nobody to invest in his projects, because people have found that his schemes are too smart to work well, or that he is too unreliable to tie up to. The scale of his operations steadily becomes reduced until he finds if necessary to scurry around to get a bare living, although when he started he had gifts that promised big things When a man begins saying that he has no faith in anybody he may rest assured that he is in a fair way to reach the time when nobody will have any faith in him.—Toronto Star.

KAISER'S "CRIB" IN ARGONNE LUXURIOUS CAVE AS LAIR

M. Gaston Deschamps, who is a well-known contributor to the Temps, and HM. Lepine, ex-prefect of police, have been visiting Villers-aux-Vents and Revigny, on the outskirts of the forest of Argonne. It was here that, in the beginning of September, the Crown Prince and his staff distinguished themselves by acts of wanton cruelty prior to retreating along the west side of the forest.

"Of what importance" asks M. Gastin Deschamps, "could the existence of the 50 houses of Villers-aux-Vents be with regard to the outcome of this war undertaken by William of Hohenzollern and his worthy heir? The destruction of these humble erections could not have the least considerations. To drench with paraffin, by means of the fire hose, the walls and roofs of these poor rustic cottages; to stuff the nave of the Church with straw in order that it might burn more quickly; to add to the fury of the flames by throwing on them the inflammable pastilles manipulated in his Leipsig laboratory by that astonishing chemist, Ostwald, the doctor-professor who signed the manifesto of the German "intellectuals"; such monumental refinement of malice is an almost unique instance of that mono-mania of murder and destruction which the allenists call furor teutonicus, and which Julis Caesar defined very clearly in his reflections on the savagery of the Germans."

"Doubtless," says M. Deschamps, scornfully, "this is one of the reasons why William II. let the heir to the throne loose on this bit of the Department of the Meuse. Did not Professor Yahn, a shining light at the University of Berlin, whose statue is on one of the squares, desire that France should become a desert tenanted by wild beasts? 'Thus,' he said, 'the old convents will be turned into nests for owls; the battlements of the towns consumed by fire will serve as eyries for eagles; and fires will prepare lairs for hyenas.'

Prince's Hasty Flight.

The Crown Prince and his staff arrived at Revigny on a Sunday morning. They requisitioned a house in the Rue de Vitry, and tied their horses to trees in the garden. After uttering threats against the owner of the house they took their boots off and called for champagne. They evidently intended to stay for some time for they took possession of the bedrooms and had a telephone fixed up in the hall. They had no sooner sat down at the table than a bomb, dropped by a French aviator, exploded in the courtyard outside the dining room windows. No one was injured, but there could be no question of tarrying at Revigny. Order was given to saddle horses. At the same moment, as though at the word of command, gangs of soldiers, who had been drinking heavily and pillaging, got to work with paraffin hose and "inflammable pastilles."

The Kaiser's son went and took leave of his hosts. The "Death's Head Hussar" slept that night in a sort of cave near Penthiere Wood, outside the Village of Villers-aux-Vents. M. Deschamps went to see the Imperial cave.

"It is," he says, "the size of an ordinary bedroom, and the entrance is down a square hole. There is still a carved oak chair, taken, I was told, from the Church, but which was broken up when the Crown Prince had no further use for it. The sides of the cave are hung with chintz curtains taken from one of the houses of the Village. Cupboard-doors and shutters had also been wrenched off to serve as partitions and flooring. Several rows of barbed wire defended the approaches to the lair, the roof of which consists of zinc padded with a thick layer of hay and straw. There was also a trap-door through which the Prince and his staff had access to the trenches of the soldiers, thus enabling them at a moment's notice to escape into the open country. They did not fail to make use of it when General Joffre's victory of the Marne forced the German army to retreat all along the line."

Women as Hostages.

M. Deschamps adds that the Germans took with them from Villers-aux-Vents several persons as hostages, chiefly women, who have not been seen again. The Germans also seized a poor imbecile, and demanded where the French troops were. The only answer they could draw from him was: "Yes, yes, it's all right." The wretched man was stripped, driven through the village, and then, black and blue from the blows he had received, put against a wall and shot.

"These statements," says M. Deschamps, 'were made to me on the spot by eyewitnesses worthy of credence."

M. Emile Henriot, the special representative of the "Temps," who is with the party of French war correspondents now visiting the front, makes a very grave allegation against the Germans. He declares that at the military hospital at Nancy he has spoken with a wounded French soldier who bears on each cheek at a distance of one centimertre, (less than half an inch) from the eyes the scars of cuts made by a German soldier who tried to blind him (apparently with a pair of scissors) as he lay on the ground on the evening after the battle

"He told me," says Mr. Henriot, 'how he lay unable to move—he had been wounded by a shell splinter — when some Germans appeared, and one of them struck him in the face. He received the two wounds at the same time, on the cheekbones. He could not say with what instrument for he had his eyes closed and pretended to be dead.—London News.

RISING IN PHILIPPINES.

Outbreak at Navotas is Promptly Quelled by Authorities.

MANILA, Dec. 28. — Reports from Navotas, a town six miles north of the capital, say that simultaneously with the outbreak at Manila on Christmas eve thirty men entered the municipal building, seized three policemen on duty there, and ineffectually tried to open the safe.

Later the Filipinos seized a number of attendants conducting midnight mass and also captured the Filipino governor, Melendras. When reinforcements of police arrived the revolutionaries fired a volley and then retreated. Later they encountered another force of police with which they exchanged shots, and in this engagement the constabularly succeeded in arresting ten men. In all, 21 Filipinos were taken prisoners at Navotas.

The authorities to-day are in full control of the situation and the incident is considered by them to be closed.

Have You Looked Up that Fur Sensation?

McWilliam's announcement of a few days ago of his having taken advantage of a large wholesaler's pressing need, to secure a fine lot of made-up Furs at less than ordinary cost to manufacture was of peculiar interest at this season of depressed trade conditions. A French Submarine Sunk in Pola Harbour

MILAN, Dec. 27.—The reported attack by French submarines on the Austrian naval base at Pola is confirmed. It appears that in the course of the operations the submarine Curie was sent to the bottom while making an attempt to force an entrance to the port for the purpose of torpedoing the squadron which lay at anchor. The Curie succeeded in penetrating to the harbour bar; then she struck a steel net fixed across the entrance. When her crew endeavoured to retreat they were discovered by an Austrian merchantman, which immediately gave the alarm.

The forts then opened fire. Two cannon shots struck the Curie, which immediately sank. The captain and all of the crew, with the exception of one officer had time to swim clear of the vessel, and they are now prisoners.

A three-hundred ton boat has been put out to raise two steel nets and the piece between them at one time.

THE PLEASURES OF READING

By F. M. DELA FOSSE

It fell to my lot lately to consign many volumes to the flames whose usefulness was, apparently, ended. They were soiled and torn, and many of them in the last stages of decrepitude and decay, but as they were cast, one by one, into the furnace to receive their final purification, I could not help musing on the taste of some of our present-day readers, who abhor a soiled book, and, comparing it with that of Charles Lamb, who loved them This is what one of the gentlest and most lovable characters in English literature had to say on the subject: "How beautiful to a genuine lover of reading are the soiled leaves and the worn-out appearance, nay, the very odour (beyond Russia) if we would not forget kind feelings in fastidiousness, of an old 'Circulating Library' Tom Jones or Vicar of Wakefield. How they speak of the thousand thumbs that have turned over their pages with delight; of the lone seamstress, whom they have cheered after her long day's needle-toil, running far into midnight, when she has snatched an hour, ill-spared from sleep, to steep her cares, as in some Lethean cup, in spelling out their enchanting content. Who would have them a whit less soiled? What better condition could we desire to see them in? "Ah, those words voice the actual value of a book in abounding clarity, as cheerers of the comfortless, a solace for the aged, the recreation of the toiler, the delight unspeakable for the student.

It may call up a smile on the faces of many who may happen to read these lines when the assertion is made that it would be a good step forward if more people could be induced to think like Charles Lamb. It is nice to handle a new book; fresh from the mint as it were; a book on which no desecrating thumb has left its ineffaceable mark, and upon whose title page no friendly critic has penned his opinion of its merit. But mere externals give no clue to the intrinsic value of anything, and the fear is forced upon one that many readers, acting upon impulse, choose their books as some choose their wives, not so much on account of the intelligence and common sense they may display as of the fine figure they are enabled to cut by the help of their milliners and dressmakers.

It is not to be assumed that every book, no matter how soiled, is to be read till the print is almost indistinguishable because of the dirt. Charles Lamb certainly did not have this in mind when he penned the words above quoted. But what he assuredly did have in his mind was that a work of genius even if dog's eared and dirty was a treasure to be guarded and that any book that was worth reading was worth keeping to its greatest limit of usefulness. Not many readers, I think, look at the matter in this light To most, a book is merely a book, whether it is written by the author of "Crooked Cale; The Caliban of Celestial City" or by Cervantes or Victor Hugo or Thackeray With them there is no other line of demarcation than the broad and very apparent one dividing dirt from cleanliness They are really and truly afraid of handling a soiled volume under the belief that all sorts of danger from disease is to be apprehended from contact with them. If this were true, however, many librarians would be in hospitals, for they handle hundreds of such volumes every day. If more people recognised this fact I am sure there would be far less discontent over the shabbiness of library books and a wonderful accession of literary knowledge and humanitarian ideas through their agency.

There is something about a book that should appeal more strongly to the affections than almost anything in the category of one's personal belongings. Our halls may be filled with costly tapestries; pictures of surpassing excellence may hang on our walls; we may be fortunate enough to be possessed of curios from all parts of the world; daggers from Damascus, assegais from South Africa, boomerangs from the wilds of Australia; many of them may be of great interest, recalling days, perhaps, when we went a-shopping in Eastern bazaars, or trophies of stirring events in our own lives or in those of our forefathers. But they do not speak to us as a book speaks; they do not draw us any nearer to humanity. They are of themselves, things apart, tangible, but cold; we see them, we touch them, but there is a lifelessness about them that chills us; they are mementos—nothing more. How different it is with a book! Its cost is a mere song compared with the gewgaws and works of art that adorn the homes of the rich and yet what a treasure it may contain. Why, the most worthless book that was ever penned has a certain value, infinitesimal it may be, but greater than many a so-called chef d'oeuvre of the artist or the sculptor. And if this can be said of the worst book that was ever written, what can be said of the best or of the multitude that lie between the two extremes?

OUT READY TO STAY THERE

For we're allied one to another, and each man fights for his brother,

Each time I'll stand beside the other for the trench;
For we're allied one to another and each man fights for his own,
We can't stand for a forcure, we can't stand the foreign curse,
And we can't stand around at home.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Gen. Sir Thomas Kelly-Kenny, formerly adjutant-general of the British forces, is dead in London.

It is stated that the German aeroplane which dropped two bombs on Dover on Dec. 20 fell into the sea.

Preliminary estimates place the number of parcel post packages handled during the Christmas rush in the U. S. at 100,000,000.

The ice bridge has formed across Kingston harbor to Garden and Wolfe Islands. This is the earliest date for many years that the harbor has frozen over.

Eight persons were killed and over one hundred wounded in the town of Sochaczew, Russian Poland, yesterday by bombs thrown down from five German aeroplanes.

Most Rev. Patrick Wm. Riordan, Archbishop of the diocese of San Francisco, of the Roman Catholic Church, died at his home there yesterday. He was born in New Brunswick in 1841.

RAN INTO A NET.

French Submarine Curie Sunk at Austrian Harbor Mouth.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—A steel net stretched across the entrance to Pola Harbor, the great naval port of Austria, proved the undoing of the French submarine Curie, says a despatch from the Milan correspondent of Lloyd's News.

In company with other submarines the Curie was attempting to force an entrance into the harbor for the purpose of torpedoing an Austrian squadron at anchor there. The Curie had penetrated to the harbor bar when she collided with the net. An Austrian merchantman gave the alarm, and the forts opened fire. Two shots struck the Curie, which gradually sank. The captain and crew, with the exception of one officer, swam clear and were captured.

BATTERY AT FRONT?

Montreal Gunner Reported Wounded —Accident Says Hughes.

OTTAWA, Dec. 28.—A laconic announcement issued by the Militia Department raises the question as to whether the Canadian heavy battery and ammunition column is at the front. The announcement states that on Dec. 26 Gunner Bissonnette of the heavy battery and ammunition column of the Canadian Expeditionary Force was seriously ill. The cause of the illness is a gunshot wound in the chest. Whether the wound is accidental or was received in action is not stated.

The heavy battery is from Montreal, and consists of three sixty-pounders. It is considered possible that the need of the allies for heavy guns has induced the War Office to despatch the battery to the front.

Questioned regarding the wounding of Gunner Bissonette, Maj.-Gen. Hughes last night stated that it was probably an accident. Asked whether it were possible that the heavy battery was at the front, he stated that he did not consider it likely. No other information is available here in connection with the matter.

Two Killed By Bombs.

PARIS, Dec. 28.—A despatch received here from Nancy says that a Zeppelin airship flew over that city early yesterday morning and dropped a total of 14 bombs. Two persons were killed and two others wounded.

The Berlin official announcement of yesterday said that German airmen threw medium-sized bombs into the outskirts of Nancy in retaliation for the throwing of bombs by a French airman into an unnamed German village.

Patrolling Cruiser Damaged.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—The steamship Manitou, of the Atlantic Transport Co., is undergoing repairs in Plymouth Sound, as the result of a collision with a warship in the Downs. One of the patrolling cruisers desiring to examine the liner more closely approaching so near in the darkness that a collision occurred. Only good seamanship, apparently, averted a serious accident. Several plates on the Manitou were started by the force of the collision.

ITALIANS ARE IN CONTROL

Occupation of Avlona in Albania is Now Complete

ROME, Italy, Dec. 28.—News received from Avlona, Albania, says that the occupation of the entire town by Italians has been effected.

All the Government buildings in the Albanian seaport were taken over by the Italians. Perfect order, the advices say, has been re-established.

The 10th Regiment of Bersaglieri Sharpshooters have left Palermo for Avlona, Albania, where they will arrive to-day and replace the bluejackets, who were landed last week to restore order and protect Europeans and the peaceful inhabitants.

None of the powers have protested against Italian occupation of Avlona, Albania, and the hope is expressed by many in Rome that no complications will arise which will force Italy to abandon neutrality.

BOTH SIDES CLAIM TO HAVE WON VICTORIES

Line of Russian Successes From Southern Poland to the Carpathians is Reported and Austrians Admit the Loss of the Towns of Jaslo and Krosno—East Prussian Success Confirmed

LONDON, Dec. 28. — In Poland, where the Russian Emperor has joined the Grand Duke Nicholas at the Russian headquarters, the German attacks on the Bzura and Rawka rivers are being made almost exclusively with artillery, while an offensive in force has been assumed farther south along the River Pilica, where hard fighting continues, and both sides claim to have inflicted heavy losses on their opponents.

The Russians apparently have again gained ascendency over the Austrians in south Poland and Galicia. The Austrians themselves admit the loss of the towns of Jaslo and Krosno, on the south Galician Railway, which their army from across the Carpathians recaptured a week or more ago. The Russian report last night is the record for a series of victories from middle Poland to the foothills of the Carpathians.

Unless some prisoners have been counted more than once the Russians, according to their own accounts, have taken 30,000 Austrian prisoners since they resumed the offensive.

A despatch on Saturday stated:—

"The success reported in East Prussia is confirmed by the general flight of the population into the interior of Germany.

"By extraordinary efforts the Germans are drawing together upward of 1,000,000 men to the Russian front, and this movement may be influenced by a desire to take Warsaw."

The war expert of The Novoe Vremya of Petrograd, in a summary of the war published Saturday, refers to what he calls the "Collapse of the Austrian campaign in Galicia; the lack of cohesion on the part of the German armies to the north of Cracow, and the dogged perseverance, but with waning spirit of the Germans at Sochaczew, which he says describes the situation in Poland.

It is believed that the defence of Przemysl by the Austrian garrison is now in its last gasp. The failure of the frequent and disastrous sorties which the defenders have made against the encircling line of Russians has destroyed the morale of the Austrians, who are now forced to choose between the alternatives, surrender or complete annihilation.

The following official communication was issued from General Headquarters at Petrograd last night:—

"On the left bank of the Vistula, the general position is without essential change.

"Between the lower courses of the Vistula and the Pilica the fighting on Dec. 25 was of less desperate character, with the exception of that region bordering on the Pilica, where throughout the night and day violent combats continued. Likewise fighting of a desperate nature with the Austrians has been going on along the lower courses of the Nida river. On Dec. 24 in that region we took prisoners 68 officers and about 4,000 soldiers.

"In Galicia the fighting along the the lines of the Bzura and Rawka rivers was confined in general to artillery fire. We have repulsed with success various attacks by the Germans.

"Along the lower course of the Nida river we ousted towards evening of Dec. 25 from the village of Wislica the Austrians who had obstinately defended it, and who attempted to fortify themselves on the left bank of the Nida. We then drove the Austrians beyond that river.

"South of the Vistula, in the region of Tarnow (Galicia), on Dec. 25, we drove back the Austrians from the Tuchow-Olpiny line. The enemy abandoned ten rapid-firers, and we took 43 officers and more than 25,000 soldiers prisoners. The next day we continued the pursuit of the Austrians, who retreated in disorder. We captured eight machine guns and about 11,000 prisoners. We occupied the heights near Siedliska, on the left bank of the Biala river.

"In the direction of Dukla (Carpathians) there were engagements on Dec. 25 and 26, and the Austrians, driven from the Zmigrod-Dukla line, are in full retreat. In the latest encounters in this region the Austrians suffered enormous losses and left in our hands as prisoners more than 10,000 men."

ROUND THE STORES

Despite the fact that it is against all the predictions of scare-mongers, there is abundant proof that December's business in Peterborough was fully up to last year's.

Nothing is more inspiring in battle or in business life than courageous words, demonstrated by courageous action. How the merchants of Peterborough inspired business courage during the past few months by their splendidly full preparations for the holiday trade, when so many of our citizens were croaking despondency, is just now coming to light.

Perhaps few who watched the spirited announcements of our principal merchants in the Examiner were impressed with the pluck and faith which characterized all their advertisements. Instead of advertising falling off as might have been expected, there has been no perceptible cancelling of space. Peterborough merchants vied with each other in practically telling the public, from one end of the city and county to the other, that the times demanded courage, and that it was the purpose of business men to stand shoulder to shoulder in a fellowship of expenditure. In other words, that it was their duty, not to aid in stagnating business by a panic-stricken policy of retrenchment, but to do what they could to keep open the arteries of business as full as ever. They preached the sermon of Hope.

From a number of inquiries during the past week end, one instance may be cited, showing the effects of this hopeful stand taken by our merchants, and the impetus it gave to business—acting like breastworks suddenly thrown up before an unexpected ice—and which helped so much to inspire liberal buying on the part of the public.

On several occasions during the week, while passing through the busy streets, on shopping trips, trying to solve the problem of "what to give," the conversation was interrupted with:—"Let's try Cressman's."

In we went, as my companion wished; and, just to show you the type of man Mr. Cressman is, he was the first to greet us with the friendly salute, "Where will you be shown," apparently on the alert to make you at home.

"The furniture department." "This way, please, to the elevator"; and in a trice we were landed in a large cosy section of the store to join a dozen or more others on the same mission as ourselves.

Just to see how they handled their prospective customers gave us some ideas of the Cressman Co. methods. While the sales force endeavoured to enlist our interest in the goods, they were very conscientious in their advice regarding suitability and qualities. We found prices harmonizing with our notion of values, and were agreeably surprised with the large assortment and varied styles of furniture displayed. We had no trouble in solving our problem, and came away satisfied with our investments.

On our way back to the office, Mr. Cressman again met us with the inquiry:

"Did you find what you wanted?" And it was then that we took the liberty of congratulating Mr. Cressman on his busy store and his obliging salespeople. For it was Saturday morning and we noticed the crowds surging all over the four spacious storeys of the building. There were plenty of salespeople; and customers were being well handled. Every clerk was using her and his "think tank"—seemed to know when to talk and when to keep still.

"You must find your business quite as heavy as last year, Mr. Cressman, if these crowds are any criterion of your every day trade."

"Thank you. I am pleased to say that our trade has been heavier than last year. You may be a little incredulous, but it is a fact. Our volume of business has been considerably heavier than last year."

"That must be quite encouraging, especially when trade conditions have been so disturbed by the war and other troubles. In this struggle for business, it must help to keep one in the sunny temperament."

"Well, we did everything to encourage this condition by trying to carry out Britain's motto: "Business as usual." We enlarged our premises by taking a lease of the Schneider store, and built our beautiful new Arcade, which has proved a drawing card for displaying goods. In the matter of advertising, we have been quite as aggressive as ever, and the public has appreciated our efforts splendidly."

Carol Service At St. John's

The annual carol service, held last night in St. John's Church, was greatly enjoyed by the whole congregation. A great feature was the entire absence of solo work, unison passages alternately by soprano and alto tenor and bass being most effectively employed. Notwithstanding the absence of a dozen of the Choristers the seven numbers (with only the necessary break between) were finely sung. The standard anthem for Christmas, "Sing O Heaven" by Berthold Tours, 'Sleep, Holy Babe, and "Hark, What Mean Those Holy Voices ?" were evidently thoroughly prepared; during the carol "Sleep Holy Babe," the lights on the nave were put out, adding much to the softly sung harmonies.

TERRIBLE MOMENT COMES WHEN BULLETS WHIZ ABOUT SOLDIERS

(By Alice Rohe.)

ROME, Dec. 1— (by amil to New York).—The most terrible moment in a battle for the soldier in the ranks is that instant when the first bullets come whizzing by him. Suffering is then at its keenest and that feeling does not go away until the soldier is given the order to return the fire.

This is the conclusion of Lieut.-Col. Mangiarotti, who has just completed interviewing 2,000 privates and from 1,700 of them got the foregoing answer.

After the first depressing moment of fear the soldiers declare that there is a feeling of freedom, of exhilaration, followed by all the thrilling fever of battle. Mangiarotti thinks that movement gets rid of fear and that this is the explanation for the soldiers' observations.

He concludes further, that actual fighting is not as terrible as the preliminary operations before battle for the horrors of war are much worse—before they begin to fight.

GERMANS OFFER GENERAL DEFENSIVE TO THE ALLIES

Chief Actions of the Day Occur at Points Where East Indians Are Stationed, But Assaults Are Repulsed—Flanders is Again Enveloped in Fog Which Stops Fighting—Firing Heavy.

PARIS, Dec. 28—Violent bombardment by the Germans of positions of importance on both the right and left wings of the allied battlefront, with scattered attempts by infantry to break through the Franco-British lines, were outstanding features of the official reports issued by the War Office yesterday.

In fact artillery duels were fought along the whole of the front from the sea to the banks of the Moselle.

The most sustained cannonading of the German guns was against St. Die, which was under a continuous rain of shells from 9.30 in the morning until noon yesterday.

In point of numbers of guns and men engaged the most important conflict was that waged by the Germans in an effort to dislodge the French and British troops, with Indian contingents, at La Boiselle and other neighboring trenches in the vicinity of Albert.

Here the Germans opened an attack shortly before midnight on Saturday, and their guns kept up an almost incessent cannonade all night, the artillery being silenced only long enough to permit of the advance of their infantry in futile attacks which were broken before they reached the line of the allies' first trenches. Two of these attacks were made, but in each of them the allies presented such a solid front that the Germans were not able to carry their advance through.

In Flanders a lull has come in the fighting owing to the dense fog which has swept up from the Lys and has drawn a veil between the opposing line of trenches almost to the sea.

In the angle of the Oise and the Aisne the French are still holding Gen. von Kluk's forces to their trenches while strengthening the positions they assumed before Puisaleine during the fighting of last week.

The strength of the German lines of defence along the western battle front is indicated by a semi-official note issued in Paris in reference to artillery captured by the French in attacks on German trenches in the Perthes region on Dec. 24.

The note says that when these trenches were taken the French gained possession of two quick firers, several siege guns mounted on carriages, one gun of 50 millimetres with an armored cupalo and a revolving gun of 37 millimetres.

The following French official statement was issued by the War Office last night:—

"After having all last night directed a very sharp artillery and infantry fire against our troops stationed at La Boiselle and in the adjacent trenches, the enemy delivered two consecutive attacks, without success.

"We hold strongly the trenches captured near Puisaleine. On the heights of the Meuse we have consolidated our occupation of the ground taken near the trench of Garonne.

"Saint Die has been bombarded violently from 9.30 o'clock in the morning to noon.

"Between the sea and the Lys the day was calm and cannonading intermittent.

"Between the Lys and the Oise there is nothing to report.

"In the valley of the Aisne and in Champagne artillery duels continued. In the region of Perthes the enemy, after a violent bombardment upon the trenches which he had lost, attempted a violent counter-attack, which was repulsed by the fire of our artillery and infantry.

"In the Argonne there was slight progress to the south of Saint Hubert. One company gained between 100 and 200 metres. We bombarded a ravine, forcing the enemy to evacuate several trenches. Between the Meuse and Moselle, to the east of Saint Mihiel, two German attacks against the fortifications of the burnt woods were repulsed.

"A dirigible dropped a dozen bombs on Nancy in the centre of the city and without military reason. Our aviators in contrast bombarded the aviation hangars of Frescar, one of the railroad stations of Metz, where movements of trains were noted, and the barracks of Saint Privat at Metz. In upper Alsace, our troops realized further progress upon the heights which dominate Germany, and have repulsed some attacks there."

THE NEEDS ARE MANY

Secretary of Canadian War Contingent Association Tells What Comforts Are Required

DOING A GREAT WORK

Mrs. Jas. Knox, President of the Canadian Kitchener League, has received the following interesting letter from the Hon. Secretary of the Canadian War Contingent Association:

Mrs. Jos. Knox.

Dear Madam,—Your letter of October 20th has just reached me today. It has been delayed in some way at the Canadian camp. The above Association was formed by the British Colonial Office, with similar associations for Australia, New Zealand, India, etc., to act as a sort of clearing house or go-between for the activities of the various overseas helping leagues. We have already established a splendid hospital, near Folkestone, of 65 beds, which has been filled continually with British and Belgian wounded. The Canadians, as yet, are not at the front. We, in conjunction with the Canadian Red Cross and Field Comfort Officers, are handling things for the Canadian troops from our London headquarters, as given on this letterhead. We shall be very pleased to see that such things as you desire, are forwarded to the Belgians.

For our hospital we need a constant supply as the unfortunate Belgians come in half naked. Few have underclothing or socks beneath their uniforms. We send these splendidly brave men away, when convalescent, fully equipped, besides supplying them when in the hospital. Many of the British soldiers have lost their kits, too, by the time they reach the hospital, and of course we do the same for them, too. Now, as to our requiresemnts, we need flannel shirts (both day and night) woven underwear, body belts and socks, mufflers, woollen mittens and wristlets woollen helmets and cardigan jackets, and knitted or chamois lined vests. The cold is frightful and the soldiers cannot be too warmly clad.

For the hospital we also need dressing gowns, towels and plain rolled bandages. Queen Mary, after whom (at her request) the Canadian Hospital is named, sent a number of suits of clothes, dark blue, made of wool and cotton mixture. These suits are used in all hospitals, while the wounded man is unable to go out, but able to be up. We are badly in need of more, and the need will increase. It would be a great boon to us if you could have some made. They are not hard to do; the coat is just a plain sack, little more than a smoking jacket. They should be made for a rather tall man (5 ft. 9 in.) and the coat, big. If it is the fate of our Canadians to be wounded, we shall of course, receive them at our hospital, and these suits will be very useful for them. It is the experience of all that nine times out of ten the wounded men get separated from their kits (quite naturally) and in the interval of finding and forwarding them, the men must be clothed.

For the Canadians at the camp I would recommend mufflers, socks, helmets, (khaki coloured wool) and padded or lined (sleeveless) vests, to be worn under their tunics. I believe they are to be supplied with the short fur coats worn by the troops at the front, but the vests will be very welcome.

We no not need helpless-case shirts—anything else is welcome. The Belgians will be glad of and can make use of anything. The Servians, too, are in a great state of want, and many Canadians and English people are trying to send them medical stores of all kinds. They have put up a marvellous fight.

As to sending the things. I would advise you to write or ask your local Agent to write to Mr. G. M. Bosworth, C. P. R., Montreal. The Canadian Pacific are. I understand, handling many cases of comforts sent from Canada to England; but at what rates I do not know.

I am sorry the people in Canada have not understood earlier the work the above Association has undertaken. We are the headquarters for receiving, distributing and giving out information about the comforts for the troops. However, better late than never, and from all over the Dominion I am receiving letters and putting people in touch with things over here. It must be most annoying to be left as long as you were, with no response to your kind enquiry as to how your League might help. I enclose a picture postcard of the Hospital and one of our circulars. From this you will see that Mr. Perley, who has taken Lord Strathcona's place, is head of one committee, and Mrs. Peerly is head of the one of which I am Honorary Secretary. This last committee receives and distributes all parcels of clothing, comforts, etc. I should be grateful if you would spread the above information as widely as possible. At all times I am glad to give information of any kind about the Association. Please address letters and all boxes of clothing, supplies and comforts to

Trusting that it is not too late to avail ourselves of your kindness, and those interested with you, on behalf of the Canadian soldiers

TURKISH FORCE REPULSED WITH HEAVY LOSS

Black Sea Fleet Bombarded Shores in Transchorok Region.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 27.—There is satisfactory news from the Caucasian front. A Turkish detachment, reinforced by newly formed troops, sent from the direction of Erzerum Dec. 24 crossed the Euphrates to march through the Dudsch region and attempt to break through to Alisker, but was repulsed with heavy losses. The united efforts of the Russian troops and the Black Sea fleet in bombarding the shores have cleared the Transchorok region of Turks.

Private John Thomson Writes To Peterboro' Relatives —Letter is Censored

The following letter has been received by Mr. William Thomson, 218 King Street. It is from Private John Thomson, now fighting in France. Mr. Thomson, of this City, is an uncle of the sender. The envelope bears the official stamp of the censor, and, like all such letters coming directly from the front, contains no clue as to where it was despatched from. The communication reads as follows:

I am very sorry that I never wrote sooner, but it is rather difficult owing to the scarcity of writing material. I have plenty now. I hope you are all keeping well and enjoying yourselves.

I am keeping in fine condition and as happy as can be expected, especially under these circumstances.

I suppose the war will have a crippling effect on things in general. I can quite understand how it will effect everybody, but I hope it won't effect you too much.

I suppose you will understand it is very cold here, especially when in the trenches. The trenches we are occupying just now are only sixty yards away from the Germans. That is the reason why we don't get shelled. They are afraid of dropping shells into their own trenches.

I shall take this opportunity of wishing you a merry Christmas and a very happy New Year, only hoping that I shall spend a good one also. It won't be the fault of the authorities if we don't. They are doing all they can for us, and especially the people at home. I have more cigarettes now than I ever had.

We are not allowed to give any information concerning this business. To tell you the truth, we know absolutely nothing about it. That is, where we are or what we are doing. All I can say is that we are in the trenches. I happen to be writing this letter in a large house, where a part of fifty of us are billeted for forty-eight hours. We had a piano playing just now. It is quite a relief to hear some music.

Well I must now draw to a close, hoping to hear from you soon.

PRIVATE JOHN THOMSON.

DESTROYER WRECKED.

Crew of British Warship Taken Ashore After Hard Struggle.

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland, Dec. 28.—(Via London.)—A British torpedo boat destroyer went ashore early yesterday morning on the coast of Kingsbarns, six miles southeast of St. Andrew's. Her crew was saved by lifeboats.

The destroyer was steaming south from Aberdeen to the Firth of Forth, and in the darkness and without shore lights lost her bearings. After the rescue of a portion of her crew, one of the lifeboats was stove in by the heavy sea, and the remainder of the crew were saved only after considerable difficulty by a second lifeboat.

ANTWERP IS BEING FORTIFIED

Germany is Preparing to withstand a Bitter Siege

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 28. — German officers have been good enough to state that there are now in the fortified zone of Antwerp about 200,000 men. They will remain there until the city is besieged by the allies from Roulers, and they will then retire on Ghent, but Antwerp will be fiercely defended before evacuation. Garrison troops no longer appear in the city, but remain in the neighborhood of the first line of forts. Day and night about 2,000 men are working at the reconstruction of the forts. Fort Waehlen has been abandoned, but great activity is being displayed at Fort Wavre and St. Catherine.

Lieut.-Col. Stewart Gets Command.

OTTAWA, Dec. 28. — Lieut.-Col. R. Gordon Stewart of the 43rd Rifles, Ottawa, has received news of his appointment to command of the infantry regiment to mobilize here for the third contingent. Maj. Stars For The Week

On Friday, New Year's Day, the sun rises at 7.3 a.m. and sets at four minutes later than it is today.

During the past week the sun has passed eastwardly among the stars about 7 degrees in the constellation Sagittarius, and a little less than half a degree towards the north.

The moon rose at 12.43 noon today and will not set until 2.23 o'clock to-morrow. During the week the moon will rise about 45 minutes later each afternoon and set about one hour and 25 minutes later each successive morning.

On New Year's Day the moon will rise at 4.50 in the afternoon and set at 7.25 next morning.

To-day the planet Mercury will be at the nearest point to the sun in its orbit which it circuits in 88 days.

To-morrow the moon will be at her nearest point to the earth during the month.

The planet Saturn rises now early in the evening and passes directly overhead at midnight. The moon will pass 5 degrees to the north of Saturn on Thursday.

Jupiter is still very bright in the southwest in the early evening. Jupiter sets in the northwest shortly before 9 o'clock?

Mars has passed to the west of the sun and is now a morning star, but will be for some time too close to the sun to be readily seen for some time yet. On Friday Mercury and Mars will be in conjunction close to the sun in the early morning, less than a degree apart.

On New Year's Day the moon will be at the full.

The Planet Mercury.

The earliest records that have come down to us in regard to Mercury, are from a time when the principal stars, the sun, the moon, and the wandering stars which were called the planets, were regarded as gods of varying rank. With the Greeks apparently Zenith, the chief deity, stood for the sun, whilst all the rest were more or less subject to him. The planets or wandering stars, were observed at stated and regular times to approach and then recede from the sun from which it was though they gained their strength or received some mission to perform.

Saturn returned to the sun less frequently than all the rest, then Jupiter, then Mars and next Venus, and the most frequent visitor to the sun and the one that strayed from him less further than all the rest was Mercury, the special messenger of the gods. The representations that we see of Mercury show him with wings to his feet and to his helmet, indicative of his rapid movement. And the planet acts this part very well indeed, as he dodges in and out, now to the east and then to the west of the sun, several times during the year. It was not until the telescope had shown Mercury to be a body somewhat like the earth, 3,000 miles in diameter, and at a distance from the sun about one-third that of the earth, and receiving nine times the light and heat that we receive from the sun, that the romance that ancient legends had surrounded him was resolved and he took his place in common with the earth as a member of the solar system, though still obeying as mysterious a force as that at first ascribed to him.

PRINCE OF WALES WORKS UNDER FIRE

He Insists on Sharing Perils With Brother Officers at Front.

LONDON, Dec. 27.—"A good soldier and sportsman" is the reputation that the Prince of Wales has gained for himself during his comparatively short experience of service, says the Weekly Despatch, and he has gained it among men who are among the finest soldiers and best sportsmen in the world.

Continuing, the Despatch says: "The Prince of Wales did not go out to the front to take up some ornamental and ingloriously safe job on the general staff. Indeed, there are no such jobs going in this war. His Royal Highness as a matter of fact went out as a transport officer on the general staff, and as such he puts no less than fifteen hours in his strenuous workday, and sometimes he has twenty-four, or even forty-eight, hours of work at a stretch."

A Universal Peace Founded On Righteousness Between Nations

Christ First a King of Righteousness and After That a King of Peace, Says Rev. R. G. Peever

Taking as his text a part of the second verse of the seventh chapter of Hebrews, which reads: "First being by interpretation King of Righteousness and after that also King of Salem, which is King of Peace," the Rev. R. G. Peever preached a powerful, optimistic sermon last night, which made a profound effect upon the large congregation. Referring to the war, he pointed out that Christ was not King of Peace alone, nor King of "Peace at any price," but was, first, "King of Righteousness," and after that, "King of Peace." So the spirit of Christ was in the British Empire. It was an Empire of righteousness first and peace afterwards, based on righteousness and justice, the foundation stones of the Kingdom of God.

The subject of Mr. Peever's discourse was "World Peace and Its Only Foundation." The nations of the world, he said, had tried three means of maintaining peace. Firstly, by mantaining a balance of power among the nations. Thus we had the Triple Alliance with Germany, Austria and Italy, and the Triple Entente with France, Russia and England. Thus, too, we had the Munro Doctrine, and the agreements between South American nations. But the fallacy of this plan as a war preventing element had been repeatedly exposed.

Secondly, there was the balance of armaments among the nations—a more deadly and damnable policy than the first. The slogan, "In times of peace prepare for war" had been exposed, in spite of the fact that nations had gone mad in spending their best and giving their best for the armament of their country. This was not a means of maintaining peace, but only undermined the sub-soil of civilization.

Thirdly, there were the Pacific Societies, such as the great Hague Conference or Tribunal. In this we had failed, although the speaker was free to confess that this was a step in the right direction. It had been called a great jest and a costly failure, but in his opinion and in the opinion of many leading statesmen as well, it was neither.

"I believe," said the speaker, in reference to The Hague Conference, "that in the end the nations of the earth will reach a peaceful understanding along that line."

In spite of three means of preventing war, just at a time when considerable distance in the direction of peace seemed to have been gained, and war appeared almost an impossibility, the world was plunged into the greatest war of history. The question was rightly asked, "What shall be the foundation of the permanent, unbroken peace."

The answer was when the nations took an attitude of righteouness to each other. The Vatican had proposed a truce for Christmas, and Germany had at once complied, whereupon the world remarked that it was a piece of unspeakable mockery. How could Germany, with her sword buried up to the hilt in the heart of Belgium, pretend to celebrate Christmas in the right spirit? As Dr. Chown had said, "What fools we were to think that we could build Heaven on the mouth of Hell."

"But," said Mr. Peever, "when the nations of the world are ready to submit the righteousness and justice of their disputes and their differences to the judgment of men, then the dawn of a permanent, universal peace will be upon us." That must be the final ground upon which the world should have peace. But ground had been gained in the march towards permanent peace. This was shown by the fact that to-day no nation wanted to admit that they had assumed the initiative in this appalling, stupendous, wicked war.

Militarism was incompatible with the spirit of God, with world peace, and with the brotherhood of man. It was a danger spot in a nation; its standards were contrary to the spirit of the sermon on the Mount. Militarism was a national boomerang which returned to spell doom to the nation which launched it.

In conclusion, the speaker paid a glowing tribute to the righteous and just behaviour of the Mother Country to the colonies and Dominions of the British Empire. He referred to her justice to the Red Indian of America and the Negro of Africa. He told in eloquent terms how her policy had held together in peace for years 35,000,000 people of great difference in caste, habit, language, traditions and ideals in India; how the principalities of that country which, had her hand been withdrawn, would have clashed within twenty-four hours were turning their men and their money into the development of their country, and were under her very guidance developing a nationality. "Our Empire," he said, "is built and held together by righteousness and justice, the foundation stones of the Kingdom of God."

YESTERDAY AT ST. PAUL'S

Rev. R. Pogue Delivers Interesting Sermon at Morning Service

"Our Lord is now rejected,
And by the world disown'd,
By the many still neglected,
And by the few enthroned;
But soon he'll come in glory,
The hour is drawing nigh,
For the crowning day is coming by-and-by."

This was the keynote of Sunday morning's service in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church.

Rev. Mr. Pogue, the pastor, took as his text, Luke 2:7—"There was no room for them in the inn," and, in a brief but pointed discourse, brought home to the hearts of his hearers the loneliness of Christ,—lonely because shut out of the hearts of men.

The path of our Lord while on earth was lonely. The incident of his birth was symbolic of his whole life, and finds expression in the earth since them. The world has never put itself about to make room for Christ. It was not that He did not long for them: He was no recluse like John the Baptist; He made Himself at home at the wedding feast; He made an agreeable guest at the table of Matthew the publican, and in the home of Simon, yet all through His life He was alone. He was thrust out of Nazareth, the home of His childhood; even when working miracles of healing and ministering to the sick, the people besought Him to depart out of their coasts. Everywhere He was a homeless wanderer. "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." He was betrayed by one of His disciples and forsaken by the others, and even today He finds no room in the hearts of men.

"My son, give Me thine heart," are His appealing words. Ever He pleads: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with im, and he with Me." Man is a free-will agent, thus the Saviour finds the door locked on the inside. Not till we voluntarily open unto Christ the door of our heart, will He come in to be enthroned. We have room for pride, for pleasure, for greed, self-seeking, and even for Satan himself, but none for the Lord of glory.

Some will argue, and with truth, that Christ is making room for Himself, that more and more He is coming to His own; that, this Christmas time, for example, He is remembered by over half the world; that throughout the world there is being exhibited more of brotherly love, and unselfishness, all because of His presence; that there is a difference in the standards of the professions, of business, of the relations of capital and labour, and of war; that there is a difference in the standards of the nations of the earth. Some would almost make us believe that the millennium was about to come. These may be pleasant to look upon, but they give a picture of the world when the sun is playing upon it, and we do not see the thunder clouds, shades of night, hanging over it. Christ had certain ideals that have failed, but because He has not been admitted into our hearts. Men have not made room for Christ in their hearts as they should.

Christ longs for a place in our pleasures. Was Christ enthroned in our recent festivities?

With some Christ is a disturbing influence. We shut Christ out of the hall of mirth, forgetting that His presence would bring us the greatest pleasure and happiness.

Many have no room for Christ in their homes. The home is a divine institution, made so by the sacredness of the marriage tie. Christ loves to grace it by His presence. The motto of every home should be: "Christ is the Head of this Household." Then how softly we would speak, how kind we would be to others, how pure and good our thoughts! Every home should be dedicated, as is every church, to the glory of God. Then would we have less room for satins and diamonds, for dancing and music, and more room for Christ.

In the realm of business we leave very little room for our Lord; but here, perhaps more than in any other thing, a change is taking place. Never before has business been so dominated by the spirit of brotherhood. Employer and employee are working together as they never worked before. Competition is becoming unknown; co-operation has taken its place. Now it is "Each for all, and all for each." Men who shut Christ out of their business shut Him out to their own hurt; no man ever took Christ into his life but profitted thereby; no man ever took Christ as his partner but thrived as a result.

Oh, the sorrow and shame as we see Christ shut out of the councils of the so-called Christian nations! If Christ were enthroned in the parliaments of the world there could be no such war as shakes the earth at the present time. War is the direct result of spite and hate; if the spirit of Christ directed the nations there could be no war. Even the Church is silent, has nothing to say against war.

While it is our duty to support the war until the liberties of all nations are proclaimed throughout the world, the task of the Church is to see that war shall cease, and this can be brought about only when Christ is crowned King of all lands and of all peoples.—Paul Penman.

SPECIAL CHILDREN'S CHRISTMAS SERVICE AT ALL SAINTS' CHURCH

The service at All Saints' Church last night was of a special character. The children of the Sunday School assembled in the Parish Hall, marched in a body to the church, and took up their position in the front seats, which had been reserved for them.

The church and altar were beautifully decorated with evergreens and a profusion of flowers and plants.

The choir rendered special music, in keeping with the spirit of the occasion, which was a children's Christmas service.

The Rector, Rev. Mr. Grobb, instead of delivering a lengthy, lofty sermon over the heads of his young hearers, gladened the hearts of the little tots by giving them a charming little talk, in delightfully simple language, on the subject of "Stars."

Taking as his text the second verse of the second chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel: "We have seen His star in the east and are come to worship him," he sought to impress upon the children the wonderful story, the wonderful fact of Christmas — of Christ. Gaining their attention by referring to the lamentable truth that Christmas comes but once a year, instead of every day, as many would wish—that everybody is happy, not only on the festive day itself, but in their recollection of times past, and their anticipation of those to come, he led up to the fact that something wonderful must have happened on that day. Then, in a few words, he reviewed the story of the birth of the babe in the manger, and the visit of the wise men of the east, who had been guided on their long journey by a star. This led up to some thoughts on the stars in the sky, the spiritual interpretation being brought home by the story of a black man of Africa, who looked upon the stars as "lamps which God had left lighted along the dark road leading to His city."

The Rector suggested to the little ones that they pick out a star, and as they gaze upon it, say: "There is my star, and Jesus has left that star lighted to lead me to Him."

In the application to their daily life he referred to two other stars, one the star of his promise: "In my father's house are many mansions, if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." The other, the star of His command, which implied being like Jesus, making everybody happy, just as everyone is happy at Christmas time, and always having their eyes upon Christ beckoning to them to be loving, good and kind.

IN REGARD TO THE COMPLAINTS

There seems to be a good deal of agitation in town over alleged unfair treatment of the City and business men by the railways, both as to trains and freight rates. On being asked by The Examiner if there was any way out of the difficulty, Mr. Burnham said that he would be only too pleased to receive all complaints founded upon fact, for which day and date and details are given, and lay them before the Railway Commission, which has supreme control in these matters. Whatever difficulties exist can and will be solved fairly and justly by the Railway Commission, and promptly as well, but vague complaints are of no use.

ADVOCATING INCREASE IN THE ACREAGE

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., Dec. 28. — The Government is preparing to carry on the campaign for increased production throughout Canada, and Mr. C. C. James, agricultural expert, will address series of meetings at various points in the Dominion at which he will advocate an increase in acreage everywhere.

The Government believes that next season will be one of the most prosperous which the farmers have ever experienced. It also believes that prosperity will continue for years after the war is over.

Negative Side Won Debate

Which Was Held Under the Auspices of the T. A. S.

The regular meeting of the Sacred Heart was held yesterday afternoon, when the following officers were elected:

President—N. Bibby.
1st Vice-Pres.—M. Neary.
2nd Vice-Pres.—P. Coursey.
Treasurer—J. Finn.
Fin.-Sec.—W. Grady.
Rec.-Sec.—W. Maher.
Guard—Felix Landry.
Marshall—P. Garvey.
Asst.-Marshall—J. Theobald.

A debate was then heard: Resolved, that "Asistics are detrimental to the country and should be excluded." Mr. W. O'Brien acted as judge. The affirmative side was represented by John Theobald, leader, and John McCarney, assistant, and the negative side by Leonard Dunn, leader, and Vincent Maher, assistant. The judge's decision favoured the negative.

Twelve new members were received into the society.

MAYOR BULLER AND ALD. DUNCAN IN THE FIELD FOR THE MAYORALTY

of the honour conferred upon him which was followed by a resume of his thirteen years' service, first in the capacity of Water Commissioner and latterly as Commissioner for the Public Utilities Commission. It is interesting to note that Mr. Matthew has been elected by acclamation on each occasion with the exception of his first election. He assured the citizens that the Commission would make every effort to straighten out any kinks that existed in the lighting system, recently acquired by the City. He referred to the appointment of Mr. Ross Dobbin, as Waterworks Engineer, and Mr. H. O. Fiske General Manager of the Utilities Commission.

The Mayor's Speech.

Mayor Buller's remarks were as follows:

"Nothing to Say."

"I am glad to have had the pleasure of serving you as Mayor for the year 1914. I think I have filled the bill in that capacity. It has been said that I should not serve owing to my civic appointment. As to that I have nothing to say. My desire to offer my services for another year has been approved of by the authorities.

The City has progressed through the dark days of depression created by the present European conflict. The City's credit is good. As regards the grant of ten thousand dollars to the Patriotic Fund, I would say I supported that and would support it again if it came up to-morrow. The money is to aid those who have gone out to fight your battles and mine. Some time ago the City suffered from the re-ranching policy of the Bank with whom it had been doing business, with the result that we had to hunt elsewhere. We found a Bank who were willing to extend credit to us. Then we put a quantity of short-term debentures on the market. This I advised the Council to do in order to give the poor workingmen employment. There is considerable work yet to be done, and it is up to the incoming Council to see that it is accomplished. The surface drainage system must be undertaken, particularly in the West and East portions of the City. We have done a lot of work this year and we have done much to help the workingmen. I have nothing to say against my opponent. We are the best of friends, but I hope your humble servant will be given an opportunity of serving another yeart."

Ald. Duncan.

I desire to respectfully solicit your votes and your influence that I may be elected Mayor of the City of Peterborough for the year 1915, said Ald. Duncan. I was born in this City and have lived here all my life, and feel, and have always felt, a deep interest in the City. I have served you in the City Council for eight years, having been elected several times by the whole City under the general vote system and also since then have represented the South Ward. I have been Chairman of the Board of Works for two years, and Chairman of the Property Comittee four years, and served as a member on all the other committees, and the experience I have had and the knowledge of the affairs and needs of the City I have obtained during those years will be of advantage in the position of Mayor if you elect me to that office.

I offer myself as a candidate at this time because I have been requested to do so by a large number of electors. One year ago a number of my friends urged me then to be a candidate, but I stood aside upon the statement to me by the present Mayor that he wished the office for one year only and would not run for a second term, and that my two-year term as Alderman would then have expired and it would be a more convenient time for me to be a candidate for the office, consequently I am not violating any custom in being a candidate this year.

My course in the Council is known to you, and, while I do not claim not to have made a mistake in the eight years, I feel that I can ask you to support me upon my record as an Alderman During the coming year I believe the Council should have two principal aims, namely, to conduct the business of the City with the strictest economy so as to make the tax rate as low as possible, and to expend the revenue upon necessary works in such a manner as to give as large an amount of employment as possible for the money expended, and to produce the best results. If you elect me I will keep this aim in view, but the burden of taxation must be as light as possible, and that work may be given to those who need it upon works for the benefit of the City so far as the revenue will permit.

Clean Fight Promised.

His Worship Mayor Buller continued that he never paid any attention to the newspapers. He blamed the newspapers for stirring up an election, and that his promise to retire at the end of the first year in favour of Ald. Duncan was without foundation. He related a confidential conversation that occurred last year between himself and ex-Mayor Bradburn, in which the latter remarked that he had heard that Ald. Duncan was not going to run. He later met Ald. Duncan, who confirmed this assertion. He then assured Ald. Duncan that he would have a chance to run next year.

Ald. Duncan admitted having remarked last year that he would not oppose Mayor Buller. He surprised the audience by asserting that he was in ex-Mayor Bradburn's office when the present Mayor went in.

Mr. W. H. Moore—"What else was in that office?"

"I am going to fight it out and fight it clean," said Ald. Duncan, in conclusion.

The nominations closed with three cheers for the King.

PETERBORO' BOY IS TRUSTEE OF A BIG ESTATE

Mr. B. S. Armstrong Appointed By the Will of Cincinnati Millionaire, Also Formerly of Peterborough

The Cincinnati Time Stars, in speaking of the will of the late Joseph T. Carew, formerly of Peterborough, who left a huge estate, says:

"The business ideals which made Joseph T. Carew one of the most progressive merchants of this country, as well as one of the most successful, are to be preserved for Cincinnati. His will, filed in Probate Court, Friday, provides a means of continuing his business policy intact for at least a quarter of a century. His object was to prevent even the suggestion of a change which might affect the business which grew so well under his direction.

The will, which was written last October by Attorney W. T. Porter, provides that his entire estate shall be placed in the hands of A. G. Weis, secretary and treasurer of the Mabley and Carew Company, and B. S. Armstrong, Mr. Carew's cousin, and who is also a director in the company. Mr. Weis and Mr. Armstrong are to be joint executors and trustees. The entire income of his estate is to go to his family. The trusteeship is to continue until the youngest grandchild is 30 years of age. There are now two grandchildren, one four years old and one three. The amount of the estate was not estimated at the time the will was filed.

The B. S. Armstrong mentioned in the above item is an old Peterborough boy, and brother of Mr. J. D. Armstrong, 487 Water Street, and Mr. W. W. Armstrong, of Regina.

THREE YEARS FOR THE ASSAILANTS OF FRUIT DEALER

a joke. But he was soon disillusioned as Latanzo, the other man, got around in front of him and commenced to beat his head with a hammer. He hit him ten or fifteen times, while Carnival still held his arms from behind.

"What kind of cap did you have on?" asked Mr. Hatton.

Minicola produced a thick cap with the words, "This is what saved me."

"Is that the cap you had on that night?"

"Yes."

"Could you see him every time he tried to strike you?"

"Yes."

"And tried to dodge him?"

"Yes."

"Did he hit you on any place but on the head?"

"Yes. On the shoulder. When I saw I was in danger I started to cry for help, and then Carnival released my arms and clapped his hands over my mouth. Then we all went down together. I got up first with my arms free and said, 'If you wanted anything why didn't you ask me for it instead of trying to kill a man?' Then Latanzo ran and Carnival followed him."

"Were you bleeding?"

"Yes. The blood was streaming down both sides."

Witness said that while Latanzo was using the hammer with one hand, he tried to get into his pockets with the other. He went home and telephoned for the police.

"Did you go home the usual way that night?"

"Yes."

"How long had you known Carnival?"

"For about seven or eight years."

The examination of Minicola occupied about an hour and a half.

Sergeant Kidd said that in response to a telephone call that night he went to see Nicholas Minicola at his house. He had several bad cuts and lumps on his head. Minicola told him that one of his assailants was Frank Carnival, and the other an Italian whose name he couldn't recall at the time. At Laurence's, where Carnival boarded, they learned that he had been in the house until about 12 o'clock that night. By footprints in the snow he traced one man to an Italian's residence on Donegal Street. There they arrested Latanzo, who was nearly undressed. When he went to put on his boot Sergeant Kidd felt them with his hand, and they were wet. In bringing the prisoner to the station they passed the corner of Reid and Brock Streets, and there they measured Latanzo's boots with one of the footprints. It fitted exactly. The footprints on Reid Street were on the middle of the road, and were for a part as though the man had been running.

When Latanzo was finally interned they returned to Laurence's house on Hunter Street, where Carnival boarded.

P. C. Deannard corroborated Sergeant Kidd's evidence.

Detective Meagher, who examined the prisoners after they were arrested, told of a confession by Carnival, who admitted to witness and the Chief, that they had planned the robbery and attempted to carry it out. Carnival said that he hit Minicola while Latanzo struck him. After the scuffle (said Carnival) the two of them ran away. According to Carnival's confession, the footsteps in the snow were correctly traced by Sergeant Kidd and P. C. Deannard. Latanzo at first denied the whole thing, but later admitted it. Carnival said that for two months they had waited a chance to rob Minicola.

The Magistrate said that it was a fortunate thing that one of the blows from the hammer did not fracture Minicola's skull. It was a clear case of robbery, planned beforehand — a crime in Italy as well as in Canada. He must find the prisoners both "guilty," and the sentence of the Court was that they be committed to the Kingston Penitentiary for three years.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

The Hockey Season Will Open With Bowmanville Here To-night

Peterborough Intermediates Will Make Their Initial Bow To-night When They Clash With the Rubber Town Team in an O. H. A. Fixture.

LOU MARSH REFEREE

The opening of the O.H.A. season at Brock Street rink to-night, the earliest in years, should attract a grand crowd to see the clash between the Bowmanville and Peterborough intermediates. The moderating of the weather, while it will make things more comfortable for the fans, will not interfere with the ice, and a fine sheet is ready for to-night. The Petes finished their training for the game with a lively practice on Saturday evening, and are in good shape for their initial clash of the season. Two new faces will be seen on the line-up to-night, Ask Hunter, last year with Toronto Rowing Club, and Pethick, formerly of Regina.

Fans are reminded that the games this season will be played in three twenty-minute periods instead of two thirty-minute halves as in other seasons. The new system makes the play faster as the players go at top speed all the way.

Lou E. Marsh, of Toronto, will referee, and the game will start at 8.15 o'clock, with the Petes lining up as follows:

Goal—Janes.
Right defence—Hunter (capt.)
Rover—Park.
Centre—Halpin.
Right wing—Kenneally.

The Bowmanville team will be picked from the following: Fred Cryderman, W. Hunter, W. Davey, Frank Williams, H. C. Higginbotham, R. C. Jones, R. G. Williams, Fred Spry, P. E. Greenfield.

HOCKEY GOSSIP

Every junior candidate is expected out at the practices this week as the team will play its first game a week from to-night. The juniors practice to-morrow night at 7 o'clock and a full turnout is expected.

The local intermediates made a good choice when they elected Ack Hunter as captain. The Toronto boy knows the game from all angles and has had a wide experience in senior company. In addition he is popular with the players.

Every fan should be at the rink to-night to see the lid taken off the new season.

Williams, who played with Oshawa last year will be on the line-up of the Bowmanville team to-night.

Six of Cobourg's hockey players are with the Canadian contingent. If they ever come to close quarters there will be mourning in many a Prussian household. If the Lakeshore boys are as handy with a bayonet as they used to be with a hockey stick. They were bears with the rock elms two years ago when the Petes met them in a sudden death game at Port Hope.

If the officers of the Peterborough Junior City League want to make a hit with the Peterborough Hockey Club they should lose no time in re-organizing for the season. And it may not be a bad thing to consider lowering the age limit. Last year it was the same as the O.H.A. standard— under 20 years. The result was that a number of boys who might have been good Junior O.H.A. material were discovered too late. At that Legros, Knapman, Jackson, Rose and O'Connell of this year's junior squad were with City League teams last season.

Leo Derocher, who is home from Ottawa for a few days, practiced with the Petes on Saturday evening and showed some of his old class in the nets.

The management of the Brock Street rink, as well as the management of the Peterborough Hockey Club, will conduct a campaign this year against smoking during hockey matches. The smoke nuisance not only annoys the ladies, but on a soft night especially bothers the players, making the rink dark and interfering with the breathing. Fans who are truly loyal will do all in their power to assist in the crusade and offenders will be dealt with accordingly.

The new lights for the Brock Street rink have arrived and will be installed in time for to-night's game. Manager Meharry has secured the latest magnetite lamps, similar to the ones tested recently at the corner of McDonnel and George Streets, and the rink will be brilliantly illuminated.

Mr. Harry Morgan, secretary of the Peterborough Hockey Club, suggests a game between the local juniors and the old boys who are home for their holidays in aid of the Salvation Army Home, the game to take place this week. The old boys are willing to play, and it would be a good workout for the local youngsters for their game with Port Hope on Monday. The old boys would have a strong line-up with Stratton, Matthews, Cavanagh and others, and the fans would get a rattling good game. If arrangements can be made for the battle, it will likely take place Thursday night.

Our old friend, Lou E. Marsh, will referee to-night's game between Bowmanville and the Petes. Louis's last appearance was with the old Victorias Rugby Club. Gene Hurtubise and other old residents will recall the occasion.

Belleville intermediates have registered the following players: Cleveland Moon, Jas. Marshall, C. W. Earle, Vincent Brown, E. G. Airey, T. Whalen, Wm. H. Finkle, F. A. Morrison, Ray A. Tuite, Samuel Symons, Thos. Brant, Joseph Connolly, Benson Brant, Harry Bradley.

Commission Is Cancelled.

OTTAWA, Dec. 28. — There has been no friction between Gen. Sam Hughes and Gen. Alderson, who is in command of the first Canadian contingent.

A day or two ago, a cable was sent by a Canadian correspondent with the troops at Salisbury Plain, stating that there was friction and that as a result, the resignation of Gen. Alderson might be expected.

The correspondent who cabled the story had been given a supernumery lieutenancy to enable him to remain with the troops. This commission has been cancelled.

Turkish Troops Leave for Front.

ROME, Dec. 28. — The Turkish military authorities have removed the troops and artillery from Adrianople and are sending them to defend the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus, according to a despatch from Athens.

ATTACK SLACKENS IN EAST.

Germans Are Bringing Up Siege Guns —No One Knows What For.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—The Morning Post's Petrograd correspondent telegraphs:—The Germans on Friday sensibly slackened their hitherto frantic attempts to force a passage of the rivers which mark the Russian front. On the left bank of the Vistula they have now brought up a number of heavy calibre artillery, up to and including 11-inch guns. These monitors are moved along the ordinary roads by motor traction, but on an emergency can even be dragged by horses, thirteen to a gun. Naturally they move only on the best chaussee roads, and these are extremely sparse in Poland, but frost has now set in and will doubtless facilitate heavy traffic of every kind, provided the snowfall is not too heavy. Presumably the heavy artillery is not intended so much to force the passage of rivers as to assist in the bombardment of fortresses which the Germans apparently now foresee may soon be within range of their guns. Their first idea was — if they got across the rivers — that they would soon dispose of the Russian forces behind this line and march gloriously into Warsaw.

The Germans have brought up their heavy artillery a little prematurely, perhaps, for it still is a long way to Warsaw—even when the passage of the rivers is forced, which has still to be done. In fact, after sacrificing enough men to make an army corps in a week's attempts, day and night, the Germans have decided to get through without wetting their feet along the left bank of the Pilica. I have, however, no definite knowledge here. According to my information, the Germans have taken nothing whatever by assault, neither towns nor positions, since Russia decided to reconstruct its strategic front.

SEEN IN GARDENS.

Garden vases are particularly beautiful and are built along the most classic lines. Many are reproductions of vases found in the old Roman gardens. Others are copied from the famous vases in the gardens at Versailles.

Garden benches are useful as well as ornamental. One beautiful specimen is an exact reproduction of one that was found in the ruins of Pompeii. These benches when placed at the end of an avenue of trees are beautiful.

German Story Is Denied.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 28.—The Russian Government has authorized the official news agency to deny in the most categorical manner the statement that Russia had ceded to Japan half the Island of Sakhalien in exchange for heavy artillery. It is asserted that the report is absolutely unfounded.

One of the items given out by the German official press bureau at Berlin Dec. 25, stated that reports had been received from Copenhagen to the effect that Russia had traded half Sakhalien to Japan for heavy guns.

ROUMANIA UNITED.

Even Pro-German Leader Favors Action Alongside of Allies.

BUCHAREST, Dec. 28—The policy of Roumanian alliance with the powers of the Triple Entente has obtained such powerful support that even the Conservative leader, M. Marghiloman, whose leaning is rather to the side of Germany and Austria, was forced to declare at a meeting of his party committee that he was in favor of action against Austrian and Germany.

For some time past there have been successive Italo-Roumanian manifestation culminating in the foundation in Rome of an Italo-Roumanian league.

THE GREATEST HAPPINESS COMES TO OURSELVES WHEN WE MAKE OTHERS HAPPY WITH OUR GIFTS

THE value of a gift consists not in costliness or variety, but in the feeling of affection, or regard, or sympathy, or honor, which it is supposed to carry. It is time that both the giver and receiver realized this. Too often the spirit of Christmas is utterly sacrificed in the contest between the desire to spend and the duty of refraining. For a gift to be worth the giving, no sacrifice of duty must enter into it. A tiny flower] given in love and simplicity is better than a rare and costly gem procured with worry, anxiety and doubt. When you give something TO WEAR you exhibit good sense, good taste and good judgment.

Let us suggest—

UNDERWEAR, UMBRELLAS, NECK SCARFS, CRAVATS, PYJAMAS, JEWELLERY, HOSIERY, SUSPENDERS, HANDKERCHIEFS, HOUSE COATS, GLOVES, MUFFLERS, SUITS, SWEATER COATS, SHIRTS, COLLARS. TIES, HATS, CAPS, OVERCOATS, etc., in fact everything carried by first-class Clothing and Men's Furnishing Stores.

Card to the Electors

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY OF PETERBOROUGH:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—I desire to respectfully solicit your votes and your influence that I may be elected Mayor of the City of Peterborough for the year 1915. I was born in this City and have lived here all my life, and feel, and have always felt, a deep interest in the City.

I have served you in the City Council for eight years, having been elected several times by the whole City under the general vote system and also since then have represented the South Ward. I have been Chairman of the Board of Works two years and Chairman of the Property Committee four years, and served as a member on all the other Committees, and the experience I have had and the knowledge of the affairs and needs of the City I have obtained during those years will be of advantage in the position of Mayor if you elect me to that office.

I offer myself as a candidate at this time because I have been requested to do so by a large number of electors. One year ago a number of my friends urged me then to be a candidate, but I stood aside upon the statement to me by the present Mayor that he wished the office for one year only, and would not run for a second term, and that my two-year term as Alderman would then have expired, and it would be a more convenient time for me to be a candidate for the office, consequently, I am not violating any custom in being a candidate this year.

My course in the Council is known to you, and, while I do not claim not to have made a mistake in the eight years, I feel that I can ask you to support me upon my record as an Alderman. During the coming year I believe the Council should have two principal aims, namely, to conduct the business of the City with the strictest economy, so as to make the tax rate as low as possible, and to expend the revenue upon necessary works in such a manner as to give as large an amount of employment as possible for the money expended and to produce the best results. If you elect me I will keep these aims in view, that the burden of taxation may be as light as possible and that work may be given to those who need it upon works for the benefit of the City so far as the revenue will permit.

Again soliciting your votes, and wishing you all the compliments of the season,

I am, yours respectfully,

GEO. H. DUNCAN

respect they failed to make any effort to force a battle, which an English squadron at least attempted when Scarborough, Whitby and Hartlepool, were bombarded."

LONDON, December 28. — Fighting in Northern Poland, where the Germans have started a new offensive threatening the Russian right flank, to-day began to assume great importance. The German official statement to-day merely announced that the attack in that region is developing. After being driven back be the East Prussian frontier however the Germans have advanced 15 miles from the Lautenburg-Neidenburg line, and again moved forward 10 miles into Russian territory. Petrograd admits that Mlawa has again been occupied by the Germans.

NEW YORK, December 28.—A cable to The Herald from Amsterdam, says:

"Telegrams received by newspapers from Germany give but few details of the British aerial raid on Cuxhaven, but they all describe the amazement and confusion produced by the sudden and unexpected blow administered by the navy. What surprises the Germans is the daring of the British cruiser force which succeeded in coming through the mine field to the mouth of the Elbe. The Cuxhaven demonstration has been useful as a forerunner of the coming inevitable destruction of the German fleet in German waters."

AUTO BACK-FIRED BURST INTO FLAMES

While being cranked by its owner yesterday afternoon the automobile of Dr. Gallivan back-fired and started to blaze. The flames were dangerously close to the gasoline tank, but the doctor managed to extinguish them with a couple of pails of water. The fire brigade had been called but was not needed.

NOT DOWN-HEARTED.

The inspiring placard in blue ink, printed in type large enough to catch the eye of the veriest myope, entitled, 'Are We Downhearted? No!" which was posted in the stores and on the billboards of the city on Saturday, is to be credited to Mr. Thos. Barrie, President of the Retail Merchants' Association of this city.

The world-crisis we are now witnessing has brought out many instances in which our business men ave triumphed over croaking despondency. Such "strengtheners" as the placard referred to is better than a general election. They've got the touch that business likes. Now is the time for every man to be a live wire. "Business as usual," has the right ring.

Mr. J. A. Fowler Passes Away

Pioneer Resident of North Monaghan Township Died This Morning After a Brief Illness

Universal regret will be felt over the death of Mr. John A. Fowler, of North Monaghan, who died at half past three this morning after a very short illness. The late Mr. Fowler had been ill only a couple of days preceding his demise, and the news of his death will come as a shock to a very large circle of friends in this county, where he has been known and respected for the past three quarters of a century.

The funeral will be held Wednesday afternoon at half past three o'clock from the family residence to the Little Lake cemetery. No flowers, at the request of relatives.

The late Mr. Fowler celebrated his 88th birthday on the 19th of last month, and has lived practically all his life in the same locality, having been born in 1827 at the old homestead, lot 1, concession 11. In 1854 he located at lot 2, concession 12, and has resided there ever since, the long space of 60 years. Deceased was the oldest son of the late William Fowler, who was born in Scotland in 1775 and came to Canada in 1817, settling first in Port Hope. Four years later he found his way north and settled at lot 1, concession 11, where the late John A. Fowler was born.

The late Mr. Fowler was twice married. In 1853 he took for his bride the daughter of Mr. Black of Prince Edward county, who passed away four years later, leaving three small children. In 1859 he married Miss Hugan, daughter of the late William Hugan, who passed away seven years ago, leaving eight children.

Of Mr. Fowler's family of eleven, eight survive him as follows: Robert and Miss Katherine at home, James and Mrs. Harry Webber in North Monaghan, E. Bruce and George in Peterborough, William in North Dakota, and Mrs. Thompson in the Northwest.

Two brothers, George and James, and five sisters, Mrs. A. Grant, Mrs. Richard Lillico, Mrs. George Tully, Mrs. Dobbin and Mrs. Leach, also survive.

Mr. Fowler was in religion a Presbyterian, for many years a member of the congregation of St. Andrews', Peterborough, but more recently he worshipped at the Presbyterian church, Springville. In politics he was a lifelong and staunch Liberal. He was a sturdy type of the successful agriculturist and of honourable manhood. He was held in universal respect, and in his passing Peterborough county loses its oldest pioneer resident.

EX-MAYOR BRADBURN WAS NOMINATED

Two Ward Elections Were By Acclamation—Ald. F. H. Dobbin Returned.

Two elections by acclamation, and eight candidates to contest the remaining three vacancies is the net result of the aldermanic nominations that took place in the respective wards between the hours of twelve and one o'clock. The candidates fortunate enough to be elected by acclamation were F. H. Dobbin in the Centre Ward and John Edgar of the South Ward. The West Ward nominations brought out ex-Mayor Bradburn. It is just a week short of one year since Mr. Bradburn retired at the apex of his municipal career, having served two years as Mayor. When interviewed to-day, he declined to state whether he would remain to contest the election. Like all other candidates, he has up until nine o'clock to-morrow evening to qualify.

Turkeys Were Unfit For Food

But the Purchasers Got No Redress

The liver of a turkey bearing all the ear marks of tuberculosis adorns the still outside the office window of Sanitary Inspector Spence. A large crowd viewed the remains from the street while waiting for the hour at which the nominations were called. Only a week ago, Sanitary Inspector Spence was presented with two turkeys similarly afflicted, by the purchasers, who had declined to take them home for food consumption. The inside of one revealed an advanced state of decomposition. Dr. Sutton, who was present at the time, declared that fowl afflicted with tuberculosis was unfit for food.

Several attempts have been made to suppress the sale of fowl suffering from blackhead and tuberculosis, but without avail. The Public Health Act refuses to convict parties concerned unless it can be clearly proved that the consumption of such fowl is injurious to the public health. This is almost impossible to do.

LAUDER DREAMS OF HIS SON AS HE WATCHES WAR FILM

Scotch Company Star Sees Pictures of Belgium, Where Boy Soldier May Be

Harry Lauder, the Scotch comedy star, crossed the little private alleyway from the auditorium to the Studebaker yesterday and watched the war picture. His only son, a boy of 29, is a soldier in the British army somewhere along the battle front.

"The pictures," he said, "are amazing, in view of modern warfare. They show us the actual embers of Belgium still smouldering.

"The films are the result of a piece of enterprise as modern as the modern way of fighting. To have gone to the inside crater of this seething volcano of slaughter and destruction for the benefit of revealing to all mankind in unerring and unimaginative photography what occurred, is a gift to humanity, a contribution to history —a credit to journalism.

"I cannot remember anything, personal or impersonal, that affected me more deeply. I saw a million pictures beyond the ones upon the curtain. For every dead I saw the suffering living; for every living refugee I saw his dead. And my heart went out to little Belgium and its peaceful, lovable peasants, caught and torn between two engines of blood-soaked destruction.

These wonderful pictures open a two-day engagement at "The Grand" New Year's Day, with matinee at 2.30.

NORTH MONAGHAN CANDIDATES DISCUSS THE FINANCIAL AFFAIRS OF TOWNSHIP

Administration of Wm. G. Howden Was Criticized in Parts, Especially Road Work and Overdraft—Brisk Meeting in the Town Hall After the Nominations Yesterday—Extravagance Charged by Some Speakers.

NEW CANDIDATES SPOKE

For Reeve—
Wm. G. Howden,
John McIntosh.

For Deputy Reeve—
Thos. Young,
Herbert Foster,
Robert Dobbin,
Fred Stenson.

For Councillors—
Wm. Robson,
Arthur Vass,
William Stevens,
H. B. Rye,
Joseph Bell,
John F. Clark.

North Monaghan's ratepayers take the affairs of their municipality seriously, if the large attendance at yesterday's nominations in the Town Hall affords a safe criterion. At least one hundred were present to hear William G. Howden's report of his stewardship as Reeve during the past year. He made a strong appeal for re-election, an indication that he is satisfied with his administration. Several of the speakers plainly stated that they considered that a change would be in the interests of the Township. The ratepayers, as a body, will express their opinions at the polls on Monday next.

A year ago Mr. Howden was returned by acclamation. There was considerable feeling then over increased taxation and a financial situation which had to be met by the Reeve and some of the Councillors giving their personal notes to meet certain demands. Yesterday, the complaints were of the same tone as those registered twelve months ago. In addition to the repitition of the financial difficulties of the previous year, it was stated that money has been expended for road building without satisfactory results, and the township faces a deficit of approximately $700, which some of he speakers stated was not explained to their satisfaction, and which Mr Bruce Johnston remarked could not easily be explained. It was not suggested that the money had been misappropriated, but it was asserted that there was not a clear statement as to why there was an overdraft.

The nomination of Mr. John McIntosh to oppose Mr. Howden may, therefore, be regarded as an evidence of a strong feeling that the Township's business could be conducted more carefully and intelligently. The honours that were bestowed a year ago gratuitously upon Mr. Howden will now have to be fought for.

The contest has something of the appearance of a struggle between the City and the country sections of the Township. Reeve Howden has been regarded as a representative of the former group. Mr. McIntosh lives south of the Gravel Road and out in the Township. The outward manifestations of yesterday's meeting were all for a united effort in behalf of the whole Township. Out of sight of the Town Hall, however, you will find no disguise to the divided sentiments which, arising from [illegible] are sure to become intolerable within a few years to the residents of the outlying section.

The Reeve's Remarks.

The usual speeches followed the period for the reception of nominations. Mr. Howden reviewed the year's work. Our deficit, he said, last year was $1,400. We could only raise $3,700, which left $2,300 for this year's work, and $300 had to come out of that, leaving $2,000 to to work with. There were about fifty men waiting for their money. It had to be procured and it was procured.

Mr. Whitfield—How was it that you struck the rate at 5 mills and afterwards lowered it to 3 3-10 mills?"

Mr. Howden—"I was not in favour of the five mills."

Mr. Whitfield—"Were you not at the first meeting?"

Mr. Howden—"Yes; it was a special meeting called by myself."

Mr. Whitfield — Does the 3 3-10 mills clear us or leave us a couple of thousand dollars in the hole, like last year?"

Mr. Howden — "I believe we are clear of debt."

This levy referred to was explained as a special collection to clear up all existing liabilities and remove the Township's indebtedness. It was decided upon at a meeting some months ago and was an additional tax to that for the year's work.

Mr. Howden, continuing, stated that when he was in the Council first (eight years ago) the out-going Council had left a surplus (on paper); but at the first meeting of the new year there was a stack of bills presented. "I asked them," he said, "where was their surplus?" There was none. The accounts had to be paid by the new Council.

If elected I will give the same careful attention as in the past. Monaghan never before got her just dues from the County Council. We were paying our good money and we got nothing. If I have not averaged $1,200 a year for you, you need not vote for me, and I can make it larger.

Mr. Howden read a letter from Mr. Burnham, M.P., who stated that the Reeve had tried to secure certain drowned land claims but that there was no money available from the Government as a result of the war expenses.

Mr. John McIntosh.

Mr. McIntosh, the other candidate for the Reeveship, said he had formerly been thirteen years as a Councillor, had served as Reeve and also as Collector. He had the experience. He had been tried in the balance, and he asked if he had been found wanting. Regarding the drowned lands money, Mr. Howden should have secured it long before the war broke out. He said there was $700 for statute labour in one section that had to be paid, and he felt another levy would have to be made.

Mr. Bruce Johnston, who acted as Chairman, said he could not see how a 3 3-10 mill rate would pay for what had been estimated at 5 mills.

Mr. Howden said it was intended to pay for the stone crusher at once, instead of running it over three years as first proposed. Then there was a demand for $150 to send a family to England. These and some other items were considered when the five-mill rate was estimated. Afterwards changes were made whereby the 3 3-10 would be sufficient.

Mr. McIntosh made a strong plea for support, saying that he responded to the desires of many of the ratepayers who had asked him to come out.

Mr. Thos. Young.

One year in the Council left him in doubt as to whether he would run for the deputy-reeveship or not. This is the first time Monaghan has been privileged to appoint a deputy reeve. Mr. Young said the Council had run up against some of the difficulties which were touching the world as the result of the war. Regarding the personal notes to meet Township expenses, the Council had to pay men who had worked on the stone crusher and the Councillors and Reeve went good on their notes. The crusher cost $1,900. Half the cost was secured in a government grant for permanent improvements, but first the crusher had to be paid for. We had to sign another note, but the Township got the crusher for half the cost. Ten chances to one, said the speaker, North Monaghan would not have got a grant like that for a number of years to come under the present conditions.

Mr. Whitfield — "Why was the Township rate so high?"

Mr. Young—"We thought it best to wipe out the entire indebtedness at once. My idea was to spread the stone crusher's cost over three years. The 5 3-4 mills would clear up everything. I believed it was too much of a burden to put on the ratepayers. Consider the man paying rent for a year. It was not fair to him, nor to others. I thought it better to reduce it and at a later meeting it was lowered to 3 3-10 mills.

Mr. McIntoch—"That means there is about 5 mills still required. There seems to be something under the blanket we can't get at.

Mr. Young—"Expenses are going up steadily as the Township grows. The school tax of the City was alone as much as the whole tax seventeen years ago.

Mr. Young made the suggestion that professional accountants audit the books in future. He said that

INVESTMENT OF CRACOW AGAIN ABANDONED

Official Confirmation of the Retirement Made Two Weeks Ago

TWO AUSTRIAN ARMIES SEPARATED

PETROGRAD, Dec. 28 via London.—The investment by the Russians of the Austrian fortress of Cracow has again been raised. Following the discovery of an attempt made by the Austrians to divide the Russian forces in Galicia, the Russians retreated for a distance of fifty miles.

Advantage for the Russians.

The Russian Galician army, which a short time ago was in touch in the south with the Austrian garrison defending Cracow, moved back of the Biala River, which is some fifty miles east of the former Russian position.

Notwithstanding the fact, that the Russian retrogression completely relived the investment of the fortress of Cracow, it is claimed by military observers to be a marked advantage for the Russians, the retirement being due to the discovery of the Austrian army to cut into halves the Russian forces in this region.

The Austrian reports from the Russian southern front say, began advancing December 23 from Tymbark, 35 miles south-east of Cracow, with the apparent object of swinging around the left of the Russians along the River Biala, northward of Tarnow, and joining froces with the army of Gen. Boehm-Ermolli, which was advancing along the railroad from Sanok and Lisko.

The premature appearance of Gen. Boehm-Ermolli's army to the south of Przemysl, however, put the Russians on their guard, and the Russians concentrated along the Biala River, moved down and attacked the Austrians at Tuchow, fifteen miles south of Tarnow, where they were successful in preventing a junction of the Austrian armies.

Meanwhile, the attention of the Russians was directed to the Austrians advancing from Sanok, which movement was checked. After their successes in this district, the Russians took the offensive along the Biasl River.

Christmas Day the Russians won the battle of Tuchow, the Austrians retreating throughout the following day. The Russians captured 3,500 prisoners and 18 machine guns.

Later the Russians crossed to the western bank of the Biala and successfully stormed the heights of Siedliska, four miles south of Tuchow.

The Russians took possession of a twenty mile piece of territory and thus succeeded in separating the two Austrian forces.

Gen. Boehm-Ermolli's army is said by the Russians to be in full retreat and the western army of the Austrians is reported to be badly crippled.

Cuxhaven Raid Will Prove Incentive To Even Greater Risks

Greater Activity Reported From Naval Bases--General Pau Believed to be Within Reach of a Triumph---Roads Knee Deep in Mud in Flanders.

SPECIAL CABLE:

LONDON, Eng., Dec. 28.—(Special cable.)—While the French and British troops in the northwest of France and southern Belgium are checked to-day by frightful weather conditions, important events taking place in Alsace. The French columns under Gen. Pau are pressing forward, and advices from Paris indicate that they are on the verge of a substantial triumph.

Meanwhile there is a growing belief that the British fleet is again about to strike, this time in far greater force than was used on Christmas Day.

ZEPPELIN FEAR HAS BEEN ALLAYED.

The successful raid on Cuxhaven, it is pointed out in naval circles, shows conclusively that Zeppelins are impotent. They have been considered of far greater menace than the mines, but now that fear has been removed.

While the Admiralty continues ophinx-like, great activity is reported from the several naval bases, especially those commanding the direct route to Heligoland.

MUD KNEE-DEEP IN FLANDERS.

In the operations from Lombaertzyde it is reported the allies were compelled to advance along the roads and through the country where the mud and water was more than knee deep.

Artillery cannot be mounted at present, and until another freeze sets in, fighting must be of the long range variety.

DOURO BOY ACCIDENTALLY SHOT BY HIS FATHER'S GUN

John Henry Leahy Was Unloading Shotgun After Hunting Trip---Oldest Son is in a Serious Condition at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Harry Leahy, the nine-year-old son of John Henry Leahy, of Douro, residing about seven miles from the city, was accidentally shot by his father on Saturday. Mr. Leathy had returned from the woods nearby, where he had gone shooting and was in the act of unloading his shotgun in the wood shed. From the information received it seems his son was in the kitchen and about to open the door to join his father in the shed. The bullet exploded and its discharge pierced the door and lodged in the boy's hip and abdomen. He was hurried to St. Joseph's Hospital, and although seriously injured hope is held for his recovery.

The sympathy of the neighbourhood is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Leahy, who are grief stricken by the accident.

BERLIN SAYS ADVANCE IS SLOW ON RUSSIAN FRONT

SPECIAL CABLE:

BERLIN, via The Hague, Dec. 29.—To-day's official reports throw little light on the general situation, though minor gains are reported against the Russians in Poland. There it is stated the German lines have been advanced to a number of points on the Lower Vistula. Fighting continues southeast of Skirniewice and between Plitza and the Upper Vistula.

ADVANCE NECESSARILY SLOW

The weather, however, continues to hamper a general advance, and ground is gained literally by inches.

In the west the situation is unchanged. The warm weather of the last few days turned the country into bogs that are still impassible, though now that frost has again set in, it is said the fighting soon can be resumed.

In Alsace the French continue their efforts to advance against Mulhausen.

THE BELMONT CLUB NOT THE OFFENDERS

Dear Sir,—In view of the fact that in your Saturday's issue, "Canuck" did not state definitely from where he heard the dance music on Christmas night, I beg to say that there was no dancing indulged in in the Belmont Club quarters at any time during Christmas day or night. I thank you for this space.—Yours, etc.,

THE LITERARY METHODS OF IRVIN COBB

When Irvin Cobb was questioned regarding his literary methods the other day in New York, he made the following admissions:

"I plug away at the machine about four hours a day. If I turn out 2,500 words in that time, I feel good about it. I can't dash off stuff. I guess the guys who talk about dashing off a masterpiece don't dash more than an inch at a time.

"Newspaper training is good in one way—it brings experience to a fiction writer better and quicker than any other occupation. It's bad in another way, for it tends to too much speed in writing and too much carelessness of the finer points.

"I was once a 5,000-word man. I could write 5,000 words about a catfight, but I couldn't write more than 5,000 words about the combined tragedies of all the various worlds. No subject nor plot could wring more than 5,000 words out of me. Then it happened that dire circumstances forced me to write a page story about the development of a mining camp in Kentucky. It had to be 10,000 words long—just had to be. So I wrote 10,000 words, and now I could write 10,000 words about eating a bag of peanuts—but I won't."

Tea growing is a fine art. The quality of tea depends on the elevation of the land and the nature of the soil. Cheap teas are produced in vast quantities in the low-lying valleys where the humidity encourages the growth of large coarse leaves. On the breezy hill-tops are found the most delicate and tender growths. Salada tea is grown entirely on hill-top gardens, hence its distinctive charm of flavour.

PRZEMYSL'S FALL IN THREE WEEKS

Garrison Has Lost 30,000 Men in Sorties—City is Full of Wounded and Food Supply Near an End.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—A Budapest correspondent writes: "I had an interview this morning with an officer who returned wounded yesterday from Przemysl. He says that every night for a fortnight two regiments have been called upon to deliver attacks on the besiegers at different point, and usually only half of the party returns. The garrison has lost during these sorties more than 30,000 men in killed, wounded and prisoners. Every available place in the city and fortress is packed with wounded. He says the garrison may hold out three weeks, but in no circumstances can it resist longer, for the food supply is coming to an end.

"Regarding the campaign in the Carpathians, the officer said that the most desperate fighting is going on there under horrible conditions for both sides. The Russians have reinforced their troops all along the front, and they deliver fierce attacks for the possession of the better positions in the Latoteza Valley. The battle has been raging for a week. Since last Sunday the river has been frozen and the Russians broke up the ice for seven kilometres to prevent the Austrians from crossing. The next night it was sufficiently frozen again to allow crossing in some parts, and in certain places men were fighting hand-to-hand battles on the top of the thin sheet of ice, which broke under them. In some instances the Russian and Austrian soldiers were struggling together in the icy water, and gave a helping hand to each other to get on the top again."

100,000,000 CHRISTMAS PARCELS DELIVERED IN UNITED STATES

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—Santa Claus delivered 100,000,000 packages by parcel post during the Christmas season according to estimates at the post office department to-day. With the co-operation of the postmen and thousands of sub-carriers throughout the country every package that came into any post office up to a late hour last night, was delivered.

It was too early to-day after the Christmas rush for the department to make any official estimate but it was believed that the business was 80 per cent heavier this year than last when 70,000,000 packages were carried by parcel post.

Department officials estimated to-day that as a result of the heavy Christmas business this year the total parcel post carriage for 1914 will reach 900,000,000 packages.

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

CHAPTER VII.

Physical exhaustion will finally tell, even over such handicaps as a mountain feather-bed and the fumes of a backwoods cabin.

If Juanita Holland did not at last actually fall asleep she drifted into a sort of coma and uneasily dreamed that she was watching a polo game at Bryn Mawr. The man whom she had sent away was dashing, with lifted mallet, after the willow ball and she was bending forward with parted lips.

Behind the white goal posts was a ragged mountain thick with tangles of laurel and rhododendron, for such is the chaotic topography of dreams. Just at the moment when the man, whom she had sent away, raised his mallet for the stroke which should score a goal, she saw Bad Anse Havey step from the thicket and throw to his shoulder a rifle which barked before she could scream a warning. The other man fell from his pony with a red smear on his silk shirt and as he fell he said calmly, but bitterly, to her across the field, while their eyes met, "This is your doing, Juanita."

She wondered if she had really screamed aloud as her eyes opened and stared at the rafters, but little Dawn's sleeping breath rose and fell undisturbed at her side, and the snores about her went on unbroken. She raised her and hand wiped the perspiration from her eyes. She even ventured to look cautiously about.

After all she must have slept heavily for now besides the four beds there was a pallet on the floor and at its top the fire-light, which was lower now, but still strong, showed a towsled head, and at its bottom two bare feet. Jeb had come home from the dance.

Again she shut her eyes, but their lids were hot and feverish. The whole procession of the day's wretched occurrences paraded before her and she wondered if these creatures were worth the effort she was making in their behalf. Here they slept about her the sodden sleep of beasts, herded together in dirty congestion. How, into such a life, could she hope to introduce clean ideals or ambitions?

From present disgust and discouragement the trend of her reflections swept forward into premonitions and sorry prophecies for the future. If to-night was bad what might to-morrow be?

The messenger who had talked low out there in the dark, when the tall stranger had still been to her only a soothing voice, was a native. He looked as if he had been trained to face even the uncertainties of such a life as this. And yet his utterance, too, had been shrill with excitement. "Thar's liable ter be hell ter-night!" What might even now be happening over there, where Milt McBriar designed to give the Haveys "somethin' ter celebrate proper"?

What monstrous things might she have to face at the very inception of her mission? Could it be that the sleeping volcano of violence would select her coming as a cue for eruption, that she, who had seen only the better things of life until to-day, must begin her work by looking on at such a revolting drama?

She had come here only to try to aid and assist, and m welcome the very crags and everything within their sandstone gates were showing her a snarl of bared fangs and evil, burning eyes.

For a seeming of centuries she lay there aching in heart and mind and body. She kept her eyes tight shut and tried to count sheep jumping over a fence. She tried to think of pleasant, inconsequential things and of dances and house parties where she had had a good time.

And finally she fell again into that half bleep which dreams of wakefulness. It may have lasted minutes or hours, but suddenly she roused again with a start from a new nightmare and lay trembling under the oppression of a poignant foreboding. What was it that she had subconsciously heard or imagined? She was painfully wide awake in the slumbering cabin. At last she was sure of a sound, low, but instinct with warning.

Beardog was growling just outside the door.

Then violently and without the preface of gradual approach—precisely as though horsemen had sprung from the earth—there clattered and beat past the front of the cabin a staccato thunder of wildly galloping hoofs and a rattle of scattered rocks. She felt an uncanny freezing of her marrow. Horses travel perilous and broken roads in that fashion only when their riders are in wild haste.

As abruptly as the drum-beat had come it died again into silence and there was no diminuendo of hoof-beats receding into the distance. The thing was weird and ghostly. She had not noticed in the weariness of arrival at the cabin that the road ran deep in sand to the corner of the fence and that after fifty yards of rough and broken rock it fell away again into another sound-muffling stretch. She knew only that she was thoroughly frightened and that whatever the noise was, it bore with it the proclaiming of hot and desperate haste.

Yet even in her terror she had moved only to turn her head, and had opened her eyes cautiously and narrowly.

There was no sound in the cabin now; not even the stertorous breath of a snore. The fire flickered faintly and occasionally sent up from its white bed of ashes a dying spurt, before which the darkness fell back a little, for the moment. She could see that Fletch McNash had half risen in his bed. His head was partly turned in an attitude of intent listening and his pose was as rigid as that of a bird dog frozen on a point. It had all been momentary and as Juanita gazed, she saw other figures stir uneasily, though no one spoke. The boy on the floor had not moved. The missionary lay still, but the woman's figure stirred uneasily beneath the heaped-up quilt.

So for a few moments the strange and tense tableau held, and the girl, watching the house-holder's alert and motionless pose, remembered him as he had hunched drunkenly over his plate a few hours ago. The two pictures were hard to reconcile.

Then at some warning which her less acute ears failed to register, she saw Fletch McNash's right hand sweep outward toward the wall and come up gripping the rifle.

Still there was no word, though the eldest boy's head had risen from the pallet.

Keyed now to concert pitch, the girl held her body rigid and through half-closed lids, looked across the dim room. While she was so staring, and pretending to sleep there drifted from a long way off an insistent, animal-like yell with a peculiar quaver in its final note. She did not know that it was the famous McBriar rallying cry, and that trouble inevitably followed fast in the wake of its sounding. She knew only that it fitted in with her childhood's terrified conception of the Indian's war-whoop. But she did know that in an instant after it had been borne along the wind she had seen a thing happen which she would have disbelieved had she heard it from the lips of a narrator; a thing unreilizable in its swift silence; a thing belonging to the stern legerdemain of self-defence.

She saw, in one breathing space, the half-risen figure of Fletch McNash under the covers of his bed; and that of young Jeb under the quilts of his pallet. She saw in the next breathing space, with no realization of how it had happened, both of them crouched low at the centre of the floor; the father's eyes glued to the front door, and son's to the back. And as they crouched there in the fitful firelight, their long shadows wavered off from them—rising and falling in inky patches. The elder man bent low like a runner on his mark waiting the starting signal. His right hand held the rifle at his front, his left lightly touched the floor with fingers spread to grace his posture, and his face was tensely upturned. So while she counted ten father and son crouched in precisely similar poses, one covering the barred door at the front with a repeating rifle, the other seeming to stare through the massive timbers of that at the back with leveled pistol. No one spoke. No one moved, but the regular swelling breath of sleep had died for every pair of lips in the place was holding its breath bated. Then came a fresh pounding of hoofs and scattering of gravel, and a chorus of angry incoherent voices sounded above the noise of flight—or was it pursuit? Whatever words were being shouted out there in the night were swallowed in the medley, except a wake of oaths that seemed to float behind.

The noise, like the other which had preceded it, died swiftly, but in the instant that it lasted Fletch McNash lifted his left hand and brought his rifle to the "ready" and his son had instinctively thrust forward his cocked revolver.

For a full minute, perhaps, the girl in the bed had the picture of two figures bent low like bronze emblems of motionless preparedness, yet not a syllable had been spoken and when from quite a distance beyond there came the snap of a single shot, followed by the retort of a volley, they still neither spoke nor moved. But at last as if by one impulse they rose and turned to face each other.

Then and then only was there utterance of any sort inside the house. In a voice, so low that Juanita would not have heard it had not every sense been acutely and painfully alert, Fletch spoke to his son, "I reckon ther war's on ag'in."

The boy nodded sullenly and the father commanded in an almost inaudible undertone,

"Lay down."

The boy went back to his pallet and the father to his bed. For a long time there was dead silence and then one by one they took up again their chorus of snores. To-morrow might bring chaos, but to-night offered sleep. Still the girl lay gazing helplessly up at the rafters and wondering what things had transpired out there between the grim uncommunicative silence of the slopes.

A little while ago she had been dreading what might come. Now in an access of terror she thought of what must come. "Ther war's on"; that was enough. Evidently there had been "hell" over there at the dance. She had reached the country just in time to see a new and sanguinary chapter open. Her view of the life had so far consisted only of thumb-nail sketches, but they had been terrible little keyhole pictures, and she trembled as she lay there contemplating what was before her when the door should be fully opened.

She would in all probality see people she actually knew, with whom she had spoken and whose hands she had taken, the victims of this brutal blood-lust. She would have to live day in and day out with murderers and accustom herself to their atrocities. Every delicate fibre in her nature throbbed with repulsion and panic.

How to Have the Best Cough Remedy and Save $2 by Making It at Home

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. Two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, stirred for 2 minutes gives you as good syrup as money can buy.

Then get from your druggist 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth), pour into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with sugar syrup. This gives you, at a cost of only 54 cents, 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50—a clear saving of nearly $2. Full directions with Pinex. It keeps perfectly and tastes good.

It takes hold of the usual cough or chest cold at once and conquers it in 24 hours. Splendid for whooping cough, bronchitis and winter coughs.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals and soothes the inflamed membranes in the case of a raleigh cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiacol, and has been used for generations to heal inflamed membranes of the throat and chest.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Danger Signals Warn You of Approaching Paralysis

Slowly and Surely Exhaustion Goes on Until Collapse of the Nerves is the Natural Result.

You may be restless, nervous, irritable and sleepless, but you think there is nothing to be alarmed at. You have no appetite, digestion is impaired, and there is weakness and irregularity of other bodily organs. You feel tired in body and mind, and find that you lack the energy to attend to the daily task.

MRS. ALLAN.

You may not realise that these are the symptoms of nervous prostration and the danger signals which warn you that some form of paralysis is the next step of development.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the most successful restorative for the nerves that has ever been offered to the public. This has been proven in many thousands of cases similar to the one described in this letter.

Mrs. Thos. Allan, R.F.D., 3, Bombra, Ont., writes:—"Five years ago I suffered a complete breakdown, and frequently had palpitation of the heart. Since that illness I have had dizzy spells, had no power over my limbs (locomotor ataxia) and could not walk straight. At night I would have severe nervous spells, with heart palpitation, and would shake as though I had the ague. I felt improvement after using the first box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after continuing the treatment can now walk, eat and sleep well, have no nervous spells and do not require heart medicine. I have told several of my neighbors of the splendid results obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

GOING HALVES.

The Cranky Man Made Sure the Division Was Perfectly Equal.

"I once had a neighbor," said the retired merchant, "the oddest specimen of humanity I ever met. I had been warned that this man—Blank I will call him—was unreasonable and cantankerous. I certainly found him eccentric, but I am easy to get along with, and we lived side by side nearly seven years without any serious trouble. We each had a few fruit trees and a small vegetable garden.

"In the fall after I first moved there Blank proposed that we buy a ladder together. It would help in fruit picking and be convenient for various other purposes. He could get a good second-hand thirty foot ladder for $5, and I agreed to pay half of it. The ladder proved to be a useful article, and we kept it on top of the picket fence that separated our gardens, where either owner could get it without trouble.

"In the spring of my seventh year in the neighborhood Blank moved and tried to sell me his share in the ladder. He wanted $2.50, which I thought excessive. For six years the ladder had been out of doors, and it was showing signs of wear and tear. I offered to pay him $1.50 or to take that sum for my own interest; but no, he would have no use for a ladder in the flat to which he was moving, and I must buy it at his price. I said it wasn't worth it. He grew sulky, and so the matter rested.

"The Blanks were to leave the 1st of May. Two days before that date I had to go away on business, my wife went to visit her sister and we shut up the house for a week. When we returned the Blanks were gone and I found in our letter box a curt note from him:

"'As you would not come to terms about the ladder, I have settled the matter by dividing it equally. Have taken my half and left yours on the fence.'

"Well, a thirty foot ladder is a little cumbersome, and, although a fifteen foot ladder is rather short, still I thought on the whole I should be satisfied with that solution of the difficulty. From the back doorway I looked over at my half of the ladder as it lay on top of the fence and was surprised to see how long it seemed to be; certainly it was more than fifteen feet. I went out for a closer inspection and made a strange discovery. Blank had fulfilled the neighbor's predictions and had 'broken out in an unexpected spot.' With nice accuracy and an almost inconceivable display of malice, he had sawed every round apart through the middle. He had divided that ladder lengthwise from top to bottom!"

Boiling a Fish.

In boiling any fish you should put enough water in a large pot to enable a fish to swim in it if it were alive. Add to this water half a cupful of vinegar, a tablespoonful of salt, one whole onion, one dozen whole black peppers, one blade of mace. Take any fish and sew it up in a new piece of cheesecloth fitted to the shape of the fish. Put in the water and heat slowly for thirty minutes; then let it boil hard and fast for about ten minutes. Unwarp and serve with drawn butter made from the liquor in which the fish was cooked and add to it the juice of half a lemon.

Iceland Brides.

In Iceland, where various interesting and fantastic superstitions abound, there is an ancient custom that every bride must invite all her friends to a dinner in her home, and every article of food must be prepared by the bride herself. If she succeeds in pleasing her critical guests she achieves not only praise for her own skill, but she helps along her own younger sisters, who are then assumed to be equally well instructed in the intricacies of the culinary art and consequently have their chances of marriage more than doubled.

Origin of Geography.

The Phoenicians were the first people to communicate to other nations a knowledge of distant lands. It is now known that before the time of Homer that enterprising people had passed beyond the limit of the Mediterranean into the great western ocean, and it was by their sailors that the first rough charts of the world as then known were made. But geography as a science originated among the Greeks, its real father being Herodotus of Halicarnassus, about B. C. 484.

Force of an Auto Smash.

If a motorcar is wrecked when going forty miles an hour its occupant is thrown out against a wall, a post or a fence with the same force that he would strike if he fell to the ground from a height of 53.78 feet. To get an idea of what the force of this impact might be stand on a wall or a house 53.78 feet high, look down and contemplate the jump.

If the car is going sixty miles an hour the impact is equivalent to a fall of 121 feet.

SUMMER PLANS.

Get out the time tables, Lucy; surely we're late this spring.
For it's time to plan vacation and the annual summering.
We who have planned together junkets and trips and tours—
Hearken to my plans, Lucy, and I will listen to yours.

First we must go to the mountains, up where it's clear and dry.
"But I don't like the mountains; they're likely to be too high.
Rather for us the seashore, say the Atlantic deep"—
"But I don't like the seashore; its noise never lets one sleep."

"Why not a trip to Europe, where we can have a change?"
"But I'm afraid of Europe, where everything seems so strange."
"Well, let us try the Rockies and travel the boundless west."
"But that would be work, my dearest, and the thing we both need is rest."

"Hazy, then, Nova Scotia, cool as a mountain grot"—
"Cool? Don't you ever think it! Sometimes it's terribly hot."
"Well, let us seek the country, up in the woods of Maine."
"Perish the very notion—miles from a boat or train!"

I could go on forever telling each futile plan,
Reporting each conversation that ends right where it began,
But here's the moral of my ballad, this is the crux of my pome—
That Lucy and I do this year—and end by staying at home.
—Franklin P. Adams in Success Magazine.

Died of Overprosperity.

"Poor Bill's gone."

Tough Job.

The old major had been on an extended trip "up north." Now he was back in the general store of the village telling of his travels.

"And Niagara falls, suh!" he began vividly. "What could be a grander sight? To think of the vast, inconceivable power in those millions of tons of water that dash over the rocks, and then to think that those falls are harnessed by mere man!"

The major paused for breath, and the old colored man who had just come in with a pail of eggs looked interested.

"Majah!"
"Yes, Sam."
"Who was de gen'man det harnessed dem deh falls?"
"Why—er—Sam, I can't just remember his name. But why are you so anxious to know?"
"Ah was just thinkin', majah."
"Thinking of what, old man?"
"Thinkin' what Ah'd give to see dat gen'man try en harness dat ol', ol' mule Ah bought f'um de bankrupt circus last spring. Too bad."—Chicago News.

An Insult.

Nell—Yes; she's broken the engagement, and I don't wonder. He told her to drop novels and read something more substantial — something that would improve her.

Tom—Well?

Nell—Well, the idea of a man intimating that his fiancee could be improved in any way!—Catholic Standard and Times.

The shade stood before St. Peter.

Sounds Startling.

"She began as a chorus girl."
"Well?"
"But recently she has outstripped some of the leading prima donnas."
"Are you referring to her progress or her costumes?"—Washington Herald.

Devotion To Duty.

A typical instance of the Russian soldiers' devotion to duty is reported from Sandomir, Poland. The Russians captured from the Austrians two field guns. Private Vassilyeff was told to guard them. Soon afterwards his company moved farther south, the officer forgetting to leave to Vassilyeff necessary instructions. Five days afterward Vassilyeff was found, half-starved, by a staff officer passing in a motor-car, keeping his solitary watch over the two guns in an open field.

LAGGARD GOLFERS.

There Is Such a Thing as Being Too Deliberate in a Game.

While carelessness is a bad feature for any golfer to allow to creep into his game, it must not be confused with unnecessarily prolonged deliberation over shots. Too much time in studying shots before playing them is, to my mind, worse than not enough. In other words, neither procrastination nor hurrying will bring satisfactory results, but as between the two undue deliberation is worse because it is in the nature of an imposition upon other players. Golf has become so popular a game that the number of players has increased by leaps and bounds; hence a great many clubs have an active playing membership so large that it is a problem how to accommodate all who wish to play, especially on Saturdays and holidays. An unnecessarily slow player can hold back a field and cause more fuming and hard feelings than almost any other factor in play. The same thing applies in open tournaments or championships. Admittedly there are some golfers who are so constituted that they have to go at their play deliberately to do well, but they ought to realise that fact, and, when they see that they are holding others back, courteously let those following "go through."

A great many players who are abnormally deliberate might find by experiment that they could play just as well, if not better, by speeding up a bit. When a golfer spends overmuch time in studying the line of his putt—for example, first viewing it from one side of the hole and then from the other, only to go back and have another look from the first side—he is apt to see undulations or bumps which really would have no influence over the ball's course if utterly disregarded. The imagination gets too much play and the mind has too much time for working up hesitancy and breeding lack of confidence. The best putters, as a rule, size up the situation quickly, then step up and hit the ball.—Francis Ouimet in St. Nicholas.

THE FEMININE ENIGMA.

Queer Incident of the Turkish Revolution of 1908.

In "The Orient Express" Arthur Moore, F. R. G. S., relates a true incident of the Young Turks' revolution of 1908, in which a woman plays a thrilling dramatic part. Herself a revolutionary and the sister of Major Enver Bey, she was the wife of Nazim Bey, the sultan's principal police spy at Salonika, whose assassination the committee of union and progress had decided upon. She did not hesitate to help the murderer. She left the curtains undrawn where she and her husband were dining together and placed a strong light behind him. Then she sat waiting tensely. Soon the shot rang out. But the conspirator had bungled. Nazim was only wounded. Six weeks later the miracle of the revolution was accomplished, and the committee, element in their triumph, condemned Nazim Bey not to death, but to exile, and would have exiled his wife into a heroine. But she, to Enver Bey's astonishment, proposed to go and share her husband's lonely exile at Benghazi.

"But, my sister," said Enver, "it is unthinkable that you should suffer such a terrible fate. Moreover, the man is an infamous spy, who deserves death. Why should you share his public disgrace?"

"He is my husband," she answered, "and I love him."

"You love him! But were you not already a consenting and even abetting party to the death which was intended for him?"

"That is true. I was willing that he should die for the sake of our cause, but as he is to live I shall live with him. Where he goes I shall go."

So together the husband and wife went to Benghazi.

Comparative.

"Is there any truth to the assertion made by scientists," asked a young man recently, "that when a man and a woman have lived together for some time their facial characteristics assume a similarity?"

The man to whom the question was put was supposed to be a scientist, but he chose to regard the question in a humorous light.

"There most certainly is," he replied. "I know a man who married a widow, and she was constantly reminding him of her first husband."—New York Tribune.

Side Interests.

"No, I didn't hire your friend."

"Why didn't you? He's an able man."

"Well, he's a health enthusiast. Has to go out every hour for seventeen inhalations of ozone, does setting up exercises four times a day and—has to have a quart of hot water to drink every fifteen minutes. I fear he would have little time for actual business."—Kansas City Journal.

Wanted Him Guiding.

"Mamma," exclaimed little Elsie, "I know something awful about our minister!"

"Why, what is it, dear?" asked her mother in surprise.

"Why," continued Elsie, "he was talking to a man on the street today, and I heard him laugh right out loud."

They Won't Let You Reform.

A few days after you have quit tobacco a friend in Kentucky ships you enough tobacco to last you a year. And when you make up your mind to quit lying some girl asks you to guess how old she is.

Pathos.

There is nothing too big to the man who advances deliberately and without undue haste. There are no honors too difficult to the man who has proven himself for them with patience.—Ed Breyard.

AFTER SICKNESS A SPLENDID TONIC

All Rundown After a Hard Spell of Bronchitis. Mrs. Horbough Regained Strength by Taking Vinol.

Waynesboro, Pa. — "My system was all run down after a hard spell of bronchitis. It was hard for me to keep about. I had pains in my chest and took cold easily. I learned of Vinol from a friend and tried it. I soon felt better and now it has built me up and I am strong and well, and able to do my house work, which I had not been able to do for about three months before taking Vinol.

"You may publish this statement so others may know about Vinol and get help as I did."—Mrs. Y. R. Horbough, Waynesboro, Pa.

Thousands of other intelligent people are constantly praising Vinol for restoring health and strength.

Vinol is not a secret nostrum, but a delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, which will create an appetite, tone up the digestive organs, make pure blood and create strength.

If you are run-down and not as strong and energetic as you ought to be, try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that we will pay back your money if it fails to help you.

DONKEYS IN EGYPT.

Brutally Used Are These Despised Friends of the Natives.

In Egypt the donkey is the chief beast of burden. Every farmer has at least two or three of them, and when he goes to his fields he rides with his friends on donkeys. He does not use a proper saddle, but has a couple of sacks strapped over the animal's back. No reins are used, and stirrups are never thought of.

The donkeys are sometimes used in a most brutal fashion, for their riders guide them with a stick, hitting them on the left side of the head when they want them to go to the right, and vice versa. If the donkey's are not going fast enough some riders rub the rough end of a stick along the spine or prick them behind the neck with a needle fixed into the stick they use for guiding.

When Egyptian women ride the donkey they sit astride, and the young fellahah, or farmer's daughter, can go at a great speed. Most of the older women, however, are either too poor to afford one or too stout to balance on one.

It is common sight to see a man riding on a donkey and his wife trotting behind, barefooted and carrying an infant in her arms and a large basket on her head. The Egyptian farmer has no idea of women's rights. Besides carrying the farmer to and from his labor, the donkey has to carry bundles of birseem or clover from the fields to the horses and buffaloes in the villages and towns, for grass and hay are almost unknown in Egypt.

When the donkey is not being worked it is roped to a peg in the ground and its two front feet are tied together, so that it cannot move more than two yards. It is the natives' despised friend.

A Joke of Mark Twain's.

The theatrical godfather of William Gillette was Mark Twain, who was a fellow townsman and a friend of his father. Mark Twain in referring to the matter said that when he used his influence to get young Gillette on the stage he thought he was playing a great joke on the management, for he did not think Gillette had the slightest aptitude for acting. But it turned out to be no joke after all. "I don't know," said Mark Twain, "which I like better—having Gillette make a tremendous success or seeing one of my jokes go wrong."

Myrtle Wedding Wreaths.

On her wedding day the Danish peasant girl wears a simple crown of myrtle with her national costume—varying with the district, but always charming—and pots of myrtle are carefully cherished by girlish hands through the long winters in anticipation of the great event.

"Yes, but it's a queer thing that they rarely get to think alike."—Boston Transcript.

CURIOUS DEATH CEREMONY.

It Has Been Observed For Centuries in Austria's Royal Family.

A strange burial ceremony has obtained among the Hapsburgs, the oldest of the royal families of Europe, for several hundred years. Whenever the emperor dies his body is carried by the nearest way from the imperial palace to the monastery of the Capuchin monks on the outskirts of Vienna. Only a few officials form the inconspicuous escort.

Arriving at the door of the crypt of the monastery, which is found locked, the master of ceremonies knocks upon it with his gold staff and demands admittance.

"Who is there?" comes the voice of a monk from behind the bolted door.

"His royal majesty the emperor of Austria, king of Hungary, duke of Styria," reciting the long list of titles borne by the dead monarch.

"We know no such man," curtly replies the voice within.

Again the master of ceremonies knocks and demands admission; again the voice of the guardian monk demands, "Who is there?" Again the master of ceremonies recites the list of honors and titles borne by the dead man—and again the voice from within replies, "We know no such man."

A third time the master of ceremonies knocks, and a third time the monk within asks, "Who is there?"

"Our brother, Joseph Hapsburg" (or whatever was the simple name of the dead king).

At this humble confession of the equality of the dead man with all human flesh the bolts fly back swiftly. "Enter, brother!" cries the monk, standing welcoming in the doorway, and the body is taken within. Later the body is returned to the palace and a funeral with all the pomp of royalty is conducted from the princely mansion. But this first strange ceremony is never omitted.—Washington Star.

Feline Music.

Scarlatti, the Italian composer, owned a cat which loved to walk on the keys of a piano and struck certain notes in preference to others. The composer took those notes as the theme of one of his fugues, which for that reason received the name of "The Cat Fugue."

Girl With the Green Hair.

My sweetheart is a charming girl,
In face a perfect queen.
Her heart is fond, her eyes are bright
Her lips are red, her teeth are white,
But, oh, her hair is green!

Her splendid springtime gift of hair
Effects my summer cure.
Mint juleps, foliage, swimming pools
And every thought that soothes and cools
Vibrates from her coiffure!

And so, though many people shriek
With "Tuts!" and "Boos!" and "Pies!"
At colored wigs, though Grundy raves,
The surging of these Marcel waves
In deep sea peace my spirit laves.
And how it rests the eyes!

FOLLOWING is a letter written by Mr. Whitney Warren to Mrs. Warren describing a recent journey through some of the devastated provinces of Eastern France. The photographs herewith published were taken by Mr. Warren, and are convincing evidence of the havoc wrought by war:—

'PARIS, Saturday, Nov. 14, 1914.

I have just returned from a most interesting trip taken through the liberated devastated provinces of the East with Mr. Jarsy, of the Secours National, the object being of rendering an account of the devastation occasioned and to form an idea of the best way of aid and what was most wanted.

We left Paris late in the afternoon of Saturday, about four o'clock, because of our automobile being badly overloaded and our having to rearrange the packing of it. In consequence we only journeyed as far as Château Thiery, where we arrived at eight o'clock. At the Mairie we presented ourselves for "billets de logements" and were quartered at the house of the Deputy of the district, Mr. Cossenon. We dined at the Hotel du Cygne, where I was surprised to meet Constance, she having run down there in order to see her husband, who had come over from the front on a bicycle. This was strictly against orders, and I imagine that on his return to his post he must have received several days of prison for his escapade.

Leaving Château Thiery at eight o'clock next morning, we crossed the Marne, which had been lowered about two metres by the opening of the dams in order to fish out and repair the various craft which had been sunk by the Germans during their occupation. The saddest of all was the Château Lavoir, where, as is well known, all the gossip of the towns of France is exchanged by the good women of the town or village; where, oh, where! can they congregate now that the good ship Potinière is sunk? It must be somewhere, for even in times such as these reputations must be made and destroyed, there where the tongues of the merciless wag!

Now, what is most important to be remembered in the accounts of the different villages destroyed which I am about to give is whether they were destroyed by bombardment or by incendiary means. Bombardment, of course, is a necessary evil of war and cannot be objected to, but in the majority of the cases which I have seen the villages have been wilfully destroyed by the pouring of petroleum and incendiary powders, with which, everybody agrees, German troops are plentifully supplied. It is quite easy to tell the difference between the villages destroyed by these separate methods, especially where the houses were of stone, for in that case the walls remain when incendiary methods are employed, whereas if bombarded the walls are thrown down. However, in many cases I noticed that the materials had become so incinerated as to be perfectly rotten and to fall under the slightest pressure. Everybody I saw claimed that the pillage was systematic. In older times it was supposed that the Germans had a peculiar fondness for clocks, but in the present case all furniture and linen, of which there is a quantity in the French villages, were picked up and shipped to the rear in the empty automobiles used for ravitaillement of the troops.

We now made directly for Bar-le-Duc, passing through the devastated region of the Marne. The first village we arrived at was Hoills-le-Maurupt. We proceeded [illegible] to the church, which the Germans had as systematically demolished all possible, together with virtually the entire village. Of all the churches I saw—that is, from an archeological point of view, and there were many—this probably was the most interesting. It evidently dated from the twelfth or thirteenth century, and reminded me very much in size, plan and construction of the charming early churches one finds in the towns of Greece.

Temporary Church in Stable.

Father Hugay received us in a temporary church he had established in the stable, and, it being Sunday and about service time, the little chapel, with a congregation of perhaps twenty, was filled with believers. The village itself, as I have said, was almost entirely destroyed. I should say that about four-fifths of the habitations had been absolutely demolished, not by bombardment, but wilfully set on fire by incendiary methods. The abbé told us that he had been taken as a hostage and held for four hours—that is, from four in the morning until eight o'clock. He was then set free, and as he was returning to his village through the woods he met an inhabitant who told him that it was useless for him to return, because as soon as—"Monsieur le Curé, ils brûleront tout."

There was absolutely no reason given for this wanton destruction, however, no hostages were shot in this village, which would indicate that even the supposition of the civilians firing upon the troops had not been made. In other cases which I investigated this reproach was always made, to my firm conviction, unjustifiably.

From here to Fargn), which was in about the same state as Hoills-le-Maurupt, from there through Waudincourt, where not a single house was left standing. The church was gone, as was also the case with Germaine-les-Baine. The only strategical reason that can be imagined for the destruction of these various villages is the one of not allowing the French army, once the Germans had been pushed out, to have places to lodge themselves in.

At Bar-le-Duc we saw the préfect, who was greatly distressed at the thought of the condition in which he would find those sections of his district still occupied by the Germans, in view of what we had already seen in the places they had evacuated.

From Bar-le-Duc we proceeded to Verdun, where we saw the sous-préfect, who had taken admirable care of the ravitaillement. The mayors of the different communes came in weekly to see him and to get what was necessary for their different towns and villages, and he felt that the department would be able to get through the winter, but that in early spring the misery would be appalling. He seemed to have everything most admirably organized. He, like the Préfet, was afraid of the conditions he would find in the districts not already liberated and was also afraid of encouraging reconstruction in the liberated districts because of the condition of the wells, so his policy was to leave those who had fled from their homes on the approach of the enemy in the places where they happened to be for the moment, in spite of the great desire on their part to return to their native hearths, of which, however, as we have seen, absolutely nothing remains.

On Monday we ran over to Clermont-en-Argonne, a charming little village utterly demolished with the exception of the hospital and a very small per cent of the houses.

This was probably the most pitiable sight of all that I saw. The troops had absolutely pillaged and destroyed everything. The weather is becoming very cold and there is terrific need that the women, children and old men have at least a blanket to wrap themselves up in, in order to keep from freezing.

Bacon everywhere also was a precious requirement, inasmuch as with it a most sustaining soup can be made. This necessary item, however, seems to be impossible to procure in spite of the fact that the authorities are willing to pay for it. Cannot Chicago do something in this line?

As I have said before, what is especially necessary is to prevent the people from dying of cold or hunger, especially the little children. Money is not so much needed, because every family that has some one at the front is paid by the government a certain sum—viz., 1.25 francs per day for the wife and fifty centimes for each child, which gives them enough to support life barely.

Checks Typhoid Fever.

Typhoid fever had set in to a certain extent in the district around Verdun, but when I arrived the sous-préfet, through the use of permanganate of potash, had eliminated it; a very simple remedy, but one that had to be thought of. I cannot exaggerate the need for clothing, any kind of clothing, as the weather is now bitterly cold, and it must be remembered that the destruction and flight took place in the latter part of the summer, and that the people took with them nothing but what they had on their backs.

The absolute discouragement of the peasants upon returning to their destroyed houses has been a difficult thing to contend with, but it appears that after the first few days their courage comes back, and in certain districts I remarked that many of them were working like ants, reconstructing and rebuilding their little houses with débris. Great aid has been lent by the army as far as feeding the indigent population is concerned, inasmuch as they have allowed them to use the rations and [illegible] tions, which are made into excellent soup.

The evening of the first day we spent at Verdun. We went to the north of Bras, within easy touch of the trenches, where we left many warm things and some tobacco for the soldiers. Early the next morning we saw automobile buses coming back from the front with men who had passed the night in the Arsenches, many of them wounded in the head; also a funeral typical of the time, consisting merely of the hearse preceded by a priest.

After that we went to Haudricourt, where we saw General X. and Lieutenant Etienne Z.; we left many things for the soldiers, including jackets made of sheep skins, most welcome and most practical. We then returned to Verdun to reach Nancy, but getting lost in the night and spending it at Ligny-en-Barrois.

Little Damage at Nancy.

The next day we passed through Toul, which, like Verdun, was animation itself—nothing but military, and everybody busy doing something. From there we proceeded to Nancy. All these towns are surrounded by the most admirable earthworks, trenches, &c. They seem to be the very perfection of their art as far as planning, construction and comfort are concerned. While I am far from being an authority on such matters, I should say the enemy would have an awful job if ever they attempted to take them.

At Nancy but little damage had been done. Ever since my earliest recollection it had been always a conceded fact that Nancy would fall the third day after the declaration of war, and yet here we are in the fourth month and it has only been approached. The enemy have been driven back, and while it has been up to the present time an unfortified town it is now, as I have said, with the earthworks, trenches, &c., that have been constructed around it, a fortress of the very first order. This is comforting, because of the beauty and art and learning that Nancy represents.

From what I have seen of the acts of the enemy in this war, I feel convinced that if they had attacked and entered Nancy they would have destroyed it, as they have destroyed everything they have been through. As for myself, and from what information I have been able to glean, I can only attribute this desire of devastation to the fact that the troops of the enemy become terrifically drunk the moment they are allowed any leisure. I know that wherever we went no wine existed, it having been all requisitioned and drunk by the Germans.

While at Nancy it was my desire to go to Nomény, a little village situated at about four kilometres from the frontier, and which I had heard had suffered greatly. This we found impossible, as it was still between the firing lines and the military authorities absolutely forbade any attempt at going, so I had the following gentlemen of position and confidence come to my hotel, and interviewed them seriously for an hour:—

I interviewed l'Abbé Lhuiller, curé of the village; Mr. Blevelot, a resident of Nomény, and Mr. Paul Muller, professor at the Institute of Nancy, Faculty of Science, who was at Nomény at the time of the declaration of war with his entire family for their general health.

The Germans entered the village before the declaration of war and captured the gendarmes. They entered at nine o'clock in the morning and war was only declared at five in the afternoon. On August 14 a German officer killed a boy of seventeen, named Charles Michel, after asking him for information concerning the French, which the boy either did not know or refused to give.

On the 24th the French occupied the village, and on the 29th the Germans returned in force. The population had not been evacuated because the authorities, including the curé and the French officers, told them that there was nothing to fear for the civilians in view of what had happened in 1870, and the accepted laws of war. A notice concerning arms had been posted at the Mairie and all the arms of the civilians had been deposited there.

This, the curé assured me, was the case, inasmuch as he had made a round before the Germans came back to convince himself that there were no arms in any of the houses.

Forty Non-Combatants Killed.

When the Germans approached the citizens simply hid themselves in the cellars, but when the rioting commenced they took to flight, and forty of them were killed in their attempt to escape. The curé himself was condemned to death, being accused of having ordered his parishioners to fire on the Germand. He was also accused of having fired himself, but finally convinced them that it was not so. He seemed to think that his conviction to death was intended simply to add to the general terror and that at no time did the German officers believe him capable of having fired on them.

On Thursday we went to Luneville, passing by the famous farm of Leormont. This picturesque and charming little village occupied the top of the hill, which dominates the entire country. It had been taken and retaken three times by the respective armies, and was in a state of absolute disorder, as may be imagined. There were quantities of graves, both French and German, surrounding the outer buildings, and the whole hill had been bombarded to such an extent that the fields appeared to have been systematically ploughed. The holes which these bombs make are about three feet deep and vary from six to ten feet in diameter.

The proper tactics to follow, I am told by the infantry, when a bomb explodes is for the fantassins who dwell themselves in the direct neighborhood to precipitate themselves into the hole, on the theory that no two bombs fall in the same place. Here they are in a protected and improvised trench of no mean value.

At Luneville certain sections have suffered very much in the same way as the villages I have already described. We lunched with the Mayor, who inhabits the very beautiful house in which the peace of Luneville was signed in 1801, when France was the greatest military Power in the world. Our lunch was frugal but delicious, and our hostess had nothing to apologize for, in spite of the hard times she has been through, with the exception of her silver. We had the ordinary kitchen cutlery, to which she drew our attention, making the remark without comment that when the Germans were approaching Luneville she realized that they would have quartered on them the état major of the German army!

Sister's Plea Saves Hospital.

After lunch we proceeded to Gibervillers, which is probably one of the largest villages that have suffered from the present war. In this village we saw "La Soeur Julie" and her four "bonnes soeurs," who were the only inhabitants to remain when the Germans appeared. She became Maire d'office, managing those citizens who returned and the Germans who occupied the town, principally by her wit and unfailing good humor.

The Germans arrived on the morning of September 2, two regiments of them, on the heights back of the town, with mitrailleuses.

The village had seventy-five chasseurs à pied to defend it, and they had orders to fight to the end in order to protect the retreat of the French forces. This is what caused the Germans to claim that civilians had fired on them. Many of the citizens had taken themselves off to their cellars, and after the chasseurs had been driven out the Germans immediately got drunk and forced the people to come out of their hiding places, shooting all the well ones.

When the Germans entered there were thirteen French wounded in Soeur Julie's hospital, it having been impossible to remove them the night before. Four German officers presented themselves before the hospital and accused Soeur Julie of having fired on the troops, or said her wounded soldiers had done so. Upon her assurance that this was not the case and that if they would spare her and her wounded [illegible] and her sisters would take care of the German wounded they did not burn down the hospital, which was about the only house left standing, and the next day 258 wounded Germans passed through that same hospital, after the battle of Rozelieures. On the 25th the French came back, the dragoons arriving at eleven o'clock in the morning. Soeur Julie could not speak too highly of the kindness of the French superior officers, who had been most solicitous of their wounded, paying them continual visits, and thus encouraging them immensely.

The following terrific incident occurred in this unfortunate town:—When the German troops entered, as I have said, they claimed that the civilians fired on them, and besides the shooting of the civilians who dared to show themselves they gathered together fifteen unfortunates of all ages, the eldest being sixty-seven years old, tied them in groups of five and took them out and shot them in a field, where they were afterward found by the soldiers of the Eighty-first regiment of infantry.

We left Nancy and lunched at Mattexey, between Hayon and Buccarat, in the middle of the battle line of Rozelieures. I could not help smiling at the sign of the auberginte where we lunched which read as follows:—"Ortie, auberginte. Assurance contre la soif." This village and church had been virtually destroyed—that is, seventy per cent of it.

We then went through Manières and Saint-Pierremont, where the same pitiable destruction had taken place, also through Domgtal. Here we interviewed Madame Touvenant, whose husband and sixteen others had been taken as hostages by the Germans, without explanation. However, the good lady, although in dire need, had had information that her husband was still alive, and a prisoner at Ulm. Six of the population had been killed. The son of Touvenant, fourteen years of age, had been requisitioned by the Germans to bury the French dead, together with another boy of his age from the village.

From here we passed through Baccarat, where a whole quarter had been badly damaged, and numerous other villages all badly cut up, arriving at Epinal at seven o'clock. This is in the Department of the Vosges, and all the help that has been given in this department has been given in material and not in money, principally in flour, salt, with some shoes and some warm clothing. The inhabitants who have been turned out have found means of lodging themselves with the families that have suffered less material damage. Great camaraderie and help exist among all these poor people, and somehow or other they manage to lodge the whole village in the few houses which remain.

Shelling of St. Dié.

The objects which are most necessary in the Vosges are blankets, clothes and underclothes, shoes and knitting wool. These objects either are bought or sent to the Secours National, and are then shipped by the State to the devastated districts, where they are received by the Central Committee and distributed by automobile trucks to the rural districts.

From here we went to St. Dié, which Americans will remember as being important in their history from the fact that a learned society of that town was the first to publish documents relative to our continent. A large section of it had been destroyed by the enemy, and even at the time we were there bombs were not infrequent in the neighborhood of the station.

On Sunday, the 23d we went through Epinal to Belfort, over the Ballon d'Alsace. At Belfort I had the good fortune to meet the English officers who had made the raid to Friedrichshafen, on Lake Constance, to destroy the Zeppelin sheds.

This second trip of mine under the auspices of the Secours National confirms what I said in my previous letter as to the wisdom and economy with which it is administered. As you know, the organization of the Secours is composed of all elements, as anybody can see by looking over the list of directors, including the different parties in the government, the socialists, the different religions.

The way the money is used by the Secours is as follows:—The Secours collects it, then visits the different provinces, finding out from the prefets which of the communes are in need of ravitaillement and aid. They then proceed to these devastated communes, see the Mayors, verify the needs, buy the merchandise in the cheapest market, forward it from Paris to its destination, where it is distributed. As little in money as possible is given. Also "soupes populaires" are organized. There are, of course, examples of money unwisely spent, for instance, at St. Dié, having 25,000 population and 500 refugees, where they had 12,000f. This was distributed by the authorities in specie. The consequence was that it did very little good.

Had this sum been spent in popular soups, 500 soups per day could have been served for three months to the unfortunates who had been evacuated from their villages on to St. Dié, but mistakes of this kind are rare and will become rarer as time goes on.

Upon my return here to Paris and after consultation with Mr. Hanotaux it was decided to cable you to use what further moneys you may receive for purchasing articles and materials in America at the best conditions possible, of which the following are the most needed—namely, blankets, clothing of all kinds, used and unused for men and women and children; sweaters, worsteds for knitting, shoes and bedding or cradles for very little children. Even it might be wise to make an appeal to this effect. All I can assure our good public is that everything is needed by these people of the liberated provinces who are bearing stoically without murmur the brunt of the war.

War and Winter Turn Belgium Into "Gray Land Splashed with Blood"

Cold in the Trenches Becomes Almost Indescribable and the Needs of the Soldiers Are Great—Field Hospital at Furnes Does Splendid Work Two Miles from the Actual Battle Front.

(Special Dispatch.)

MALO, December 26.

Just two miles from the trenches the Belgian Field Hospital staff are doing magnificent work.

They have converted the college at Furnes into an admirable hospital. There are two wards, and the hospital already contains one hundred beds, but provision has been made to take in any number of wounded. The staff are prepared to meet all emergencies, no patients are to be turned away—the whole of Furnes will be converted into a hospital first.

The wounded are brought in straight from the firing line. An ambulance arrived while we were inspecting the wards. It was a case for immediate operation, and Mr. Sutar, who has done such excellent work in the operating theatre, got to work at once. There was no delay; there never is.

The scene in the operating theatre was strikingly impressive. Except for the lighting there were none—the sole illumination was obtained by small oil lamps, and, save round the operating table, the large room was absolutely in shadow.

Priest Stands Near.

The lamp light shone on the faces of operator and nurses. A young doctor administered the anaesthetic, and a priest, a tall, erect figure, stood by the patient feeling pulse and heart, the crucifix on his breast shining in the lamp light. The patient, a young French soldier, had pressed his lips to that little silver cross before they laid him on the operating table.

We left Mr. Sutar to his work. It was a relief to be shown the hospital kitchen. A blazing fire lit up the kitchen, and a savory smell assailed our nostrils. Any amount of pots seemed to be on the fire, and there was a most cheerful bubbling going on. Dr. Reaken—whose devotion to his work is so very evident—pointed out the chef to us—a big, capable looking man—and explained that the patients were having excellent food, for the big man in the white cap was a famous Belgian chef, who has given his services since the war began to the Belgian Field Hospital, working at his cooking with a will, making the strong soups and broths that put new strength into sick men, offering all his culinary skill to the wounded.

Nuns were working under the chef's direction—gentle, sweet faced nuns who have a convent close to the college. A nun with a pale, beautiful face was busily engaged in sifting breadcrumbs through a colander. It was evident that she took great pleasure in the task.

Nun Fears for Wounded.

A cheery, stout old nun chattered to us briskly as she peeled potatoes and confided her fears that the hospital might get shelled, for shells fall freely around Furnes, though as yet the hospital has been spared; but the old nun knew, just as we knew, that Furnes is the only town left standing. She was not afraid on her own account, though all her fears, all her concern, was for the wounded.

"Imagine the horror," she exclaimed, wringing her plump hands, "if this so greatly needed hospital has to be evacuated suddenly and the poor wounded removed at an hour's notice. They will die, the brave fellows—die, so ill as some of them are, so injured. Our foes have fired and destroyed Nieuport. They are shelling Ypres to-day, and it may be the turn of Furnes to-morrow, but in the meantime I must go on peeling my potatoes. May God preserve Furnes from the flames."

We left the dear old nun to her potatoes and walked through the two bright and cheery hospital wards, where all that life is being done.

The beds looked gay with their coverlets, and the patients who were sufficiently well talked to us about their wounds and tried to describe the battles in which they had taken part, and each man ended his speech the same way—except those brave men who had lost a limb.

Eager to Fight Again.

"When I am better I return at once to my comrades—to the fighting. They need us, every man; the kind doctors must not keep us here an hour too long."

That is the one cry of the wounded—"Cure us and send us back to fight." And these men bear ghastly wounds on their bodies. They know what fighting means. They have indeed had their baptism of blood, and their bravery leaves one spellbound. It is something to wonder over all one's life; to talk of with bated breath.

The wounded smoke incessantly. However ill a man is, his cigarette comforts him, and the doctors are wise. Every soldier in the wards seemed to be smoking, except those who lay under the very shadow of death. The doctors know how soothing the soldier finds his "fag."

A priest makes it his duty to be at the call of the dying, and when the doctors and nurses can do no more for the poor wounded body the priest takes his place by the patient's bedside and comforts and sustains the dying soldier till the end.

We left the field hospital deeply impressed by the great work that is being carried on there, thankful to know that only a few miles from the firing line the wounded have a veritable harbor of refuge.

Bringing in Wounded.

Dr. Hector Munro's Red Cross Ambulance Corps go right down to the trenches and bring back the wounded. The stretcher bearers are under shell fire most of the time. Mr. Secker, one of Dr. Munro's stretcher bearers, has already received the Legion of Honor, having been wounded while carrying a stretcher with three other young Englishmen.

Thanks to the promptness of the Munro Ambulance Corps the wounded are conveyed with remarkable swiftness to Furnes, and their wounds being treated at once often prevents gangrene setting in and renders amputation unnecessary.

Members of the corps distribute socks, mittens, chocolate and cigarettes daily and nightly to the soldiers in the trenches, but they need continual supplies from England, and the Belgian Field Hospital would be exceedingly grateful for gifts of men's clothing, for often the wounded when brought in are literally caked to the stretchers with their dried blood and their clothes have to be cut off them inch by

Needs of the Hospital.

Miss Fyfe, care Dr. Hector Munro's Red Cross Ambulance Corps, Field Post Office, Dunkirk, would gladly collect and distribute to the hospital any clothing sent to her at that address. The hospital also requires linen sheets, blankets and flannel binders. Cases of red wine and brandy would be very welcome, and also beef and chicken essences and patent foods.

Any one who really wants to make a small gift to wounded soldiers could not do better than send cigarettes or tinfuls of chicken or beef to Miss Fyfe, or a few warm shirts.

The need for comforts for the men fighting in the trenches is [illegible]. The cold is almost indescribable. The land has become a gray land suddenly—the sky is gray, the roads are gray, icicles hang from the naked branches of the trees.

Winter has descended and the gray countryside has been splashed with blood. War tramps over Belgium, war and winter have met together.

The Martial Spirit.

London Opinion:—"Why are you moping there, Dick?"

"I've no one to play with."

"Well, go and fetch Freddie next door."

"Oh, I played with him yesterday, and I don't suppose he's well enough to come out yet."

Filial Fondness.

Kansas City Journal:—"What is in the mail from daughter, asked mother eagerly.

"A thousand kisses," answered father grimly, "and stockings, handkerchiefs, two waists and four batches of ribbons for you to wash and mend."

LIGHT AND LIFE.

A Blow at Their Heretofore Supposedly Pleasant Relations.

The part which light plays in the economy of life has been grossly misunderstood, if one is to believe the latest outgiving of science. Accordding to this, the sole function of light in its relation to the life is to break up the mercules of water and carbon oxide gas and deliver the product to the cells for the manufacture of hydrocarbons. Unless an organism has protection against them the rays of the sun are injurious to it. If sufficiently strong they kill it.

The X ray, for instance, and rays from radium kill the skin if suffered to play upon it for any length of time. Long exposure to the sun has an analogous effect, especially if the skin is white. This is the result of the same violet rays that cause what is called sunburn. Heat plays no part in the work.

"Glacier burn" is precisely the same as sunburn. The tubercle bacillus is killed by light long before the incident heat has reached sufficient intensity to so much as impair its activity.

These are the considerations which lead scientists to view the color pigments in living things as being first of all a protection against the malevolent chemical action of light. Plant cells, so it is declared, must work in the dark. Those in the root or under the bark are amply protected. It would not be safe for those in the leaves had not nature provided the proper screens by means of the color pigment.

The endless variety of beautiful greens that delight the eye are but the fortification which life has reared to shield it from the sun rays. The same truth holds with reference to animals and the human race.

Blond people do not thrive in the zones of perpetual sunshine, either physically or morally. They are more subject to disease. In point of fact the blond type is dying out all over the world. The races behind the dark pigment on the contrary thrive in continuous sunlight and seem wonderfully fortified against the diseases that are especially fatal to those of lighter hue.

When a Hedgehog Awakes.

When a hibernating hedgehog awakens it rapidly warms itself up. Whether this is done automatically or whether it is due to the awakening animal "pulling itself together" seems to be a moot point. The fact is that the animal rapidly warms itself up. The chemistry of this is a rapid combustion of glycogen along with a small or moderate quantity of fat. There seems no doubt that the important fuel which so rapidly makes the fire of life burn up is glycogen; the fat is only subsidiary. It must be noticed that in the hedgehog the awakening and the warming up are two distinct though associated processes, for the animal may be awake at a lower temperature.

GOOD HABITS.

Good habits bring a personal freedom that it is impossible to obtain otherwise. The man who has the habit of doing anything that he ought to do with clocklike regularity is saved from a galling bondage of uncertainty, hesitation, energy wasting debate with himself, renewed day after day and growing more of a burden as life advances.

The Deciding Voice.

In a business men's club in a western town there sprang up two factions, one which criticised the steward because he did not provide the members with good meals and one which defended him hotly.

The dispute got fiercer and fiercer. Half the club wanted to fire the steward at once. The other half said he was efficient.

Then without warning the steward himself decided the momentous question.

One day at lunch time a member of the club asked the waiter:

"Where's the steward?"

"He ain't here," replied the waiter. "He said he was going down the street to get something good to eat."—Popular Magazine.

A Progressive Monarch.

Alfred the Great of England has few equals in history, for he was in advance of his times in everything. Born in Wantage, in Berkshire, in 849, he drove the Danes out of the eastern part of England, so after ridding his country of the foreigner he occupied himself in the advancement of learning. After thirty years of wise rule Alfred died in 901 A. D.

IF KIDNEYS ACT BAD TAKE SALTS

Says Backache is Sign You Have Been Eating Too Much Meat

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about two ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

Undeveloped Riches in Galicia.

Vast stores of undeveloped riches await Russia in Galicia. There are not only the world-famed rock-salt mines at Bokhno and Velitchko, but oil lands and mineral wax deposits at Coritiza, iron ore at Plok and Khrjanoff, fire-clay at Menkin, and coal in Lemberg.

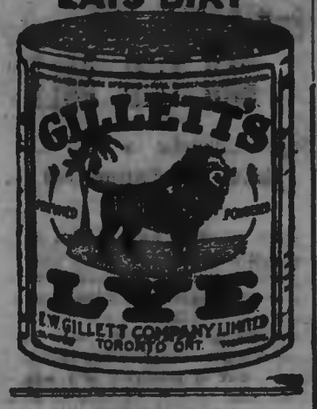
GILLETT'S LYE EATS DIRT



Music of the Chinese.

Chinese music does not entirely lack admirers among occidentals. There are, it appears, trained musicians of our own kind who seriously profess uncertainty whether the Chinese have not really advanced beyond us in music.

One authority has pointed out that the Chinese were the first in the history of music to develop a system of octaves, a circle of fifths and various other harmonical technics, and these in the days when our ancestors had not even evolved the simplest forms of melody. While no one has apparently contended that we shall finally arrive at an understanding of and a liking for something that shall approach the Chinese "harmonious discords," there are not wanting those who claim to have discovered among the musicians and lovers of music a steadily increasing sensitiveness to harmonies the existence of which was formerly unknown. —Washington Star.

"A Sound Box."

Take an ordinary rubber band and stretch it between the thumb and forefinger of your left hand. If you pick it with the fingers of the right hand and let go suddenly it will make a sound which you can hear distinctly enough yourself, but which will not be audible to any one a few feet away. But if you were to fasten the elastic, with a pin at each end, to an empty wooden box, only not so as to touch the wood, and then twang it the sound would be much louder than before. The box is the sound box, or sound board, and all stringed instruments have one in some shape or other.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

The dress pictured is a good example of these very things, the material gingham of a pretty blue and white stripe, the waist tucked and the skirt plaited to throw more fulness where needed, and finally, and most important, the design or construction simple and suitable for the purpose. The pattern, number 6762, can be obtained in sizes from 32 to 42 inches bust measure. Besides gingham, percale could be used, also linen, lawn, madras and rep. Linen is almost always expensive and a little too absorbing up to washing qualifications, to be a good

Cotton fabrics of plain and striped or plain and plaid materials are effective and inexpensive, and take on extra stiff as possible for fullness. Brown and white is a good choice for a "work" dress, because white there is enough white to look well when it is not enough to soil quickly. Too much white will mean too many trips to the laundry. There are shades of blue and green in solid colors that are not fast dyes and yet will stand a good deal before fading. The main consideration in selecting the material should be the purpose of wearing.

Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

North Monaghan Candidates, etc.

with all respect to the auditors, the work was of such a nature that it required skilled men.

Herbert Foster.

As a candidate for the deputy-reeve honours Mr. Foster said the Township roads were worn out and the men had nothing to work with. He had been strongly in favour of securing a stone crusher and he looked for good results henceforth. He asked for support in the coming elections, as in fact all the nominees did.

Poor Road Work.

Mr. Bruce Johnston said that the road work was the biggest leak in the Township. He would like to see all the men get together and adopt a system whereby they could work for real results. He thought that all the pay sheets should come before the Council and that a complete statement of expenditures be made. We never see the pay sheets, he said.

Johnny Williams started an argument as to the relative amount of work done now and formerly when fifty cents was as good as to-day's dollar. He apparently felt that work done was quite satisfactory.

Robert Dobbin.

The urban crowd heckled Robert Dobbin throughout his speech with Johnny Williams, Jack Coombs and an unidentified party as masters of the revel. Mr. Dobbin said his little say without mincing his words. Business has been done in a reckless manner, he contended and it was impossible for the Clerk to do the business to-day as the result of the shape it is in. The Council is to blame and the people seem willing to help it along. We want Monaghan's credit in the banks as good as gold, not Councillors giving their notes and an overdraft every year. I am strictly against this note business, he said. You don't know where they will put the Township. There seems to be some sway in the Council and if you get the majority on your side they'll do everything. We don't want bill like this," he said —ostensibly it was his tax statement.

"Show it to us, till we see how small it is," said J. Coombs.

Mr. Fred Stenson.

Mr. Stenson, market gardener, said he had a clean sheet, for he had not been in the Council during the year. As a candidate for deputy-reeve he said he did not like the method of getting into debt. The Council should pay for everything. In other fields business cannot be run every year without a clean sheet, and it must also apply to municipal business.

Mr. Stenson recalled a piece of the gravel road which Mr. Foster had told him was good work. In dry weather it was so dusty you could not see. In wet weather it was deep in mud.

Mr. Foster—"Two hundred dollars will not keep the Gravel Road, from Scott's Corners to Town, in condition. We did not get the gravel for it

Mr. Stenson—"Did you not know you had no money for it?"

Mr. Foster—"No, not at that time."

Mr. Stenson—"Why didn't you? It was your business."

Mr. Foster made a statement that Mr. Thos. Hunter had described the road as a good one.

Mr. Hunter—"When I saw it it was a good looking road, and had it been planted with buckwheat there would have been a fine crop. I don't thank you for dragging my name into this. Mr. Howden was notified and claimed it was good work, and Mr. Lillico admits it should not have been broken up. Mr. Hunter said he thought Mr. Howden had been extravagant; that it was time for a change and added a few other caustic comments upon the Howden administration.

The Reeve replied that there had not been a matter up for consideration which he had not fully explained and which had not received the attention of the Township's legal adviser

The Councillors.

The Councillors spoke in turn. Wm. Robson is back in the field. Arthur Vass is a young man from the Bystreville district. Harold Rye and William Stevens are also from the district near the City. Mr. Stevens said he had not sought the office. He had lived twenty-five years in the Township and had never sought municipal honours He promised to do the best he could for all the ratepayers and would support the idea of careful accounting.

Mr. Rye said he could not promise what he would do, nor could any man until he knew what situations would confront him, but he would work for the best interests of the people.

Mr. Vass said he was young, and he knew it, but he was willing to learn.

Mr. McIntosh presented figures that showed the Township still owed $733. Against this was some $40, leaving about $700 as the overdraft.

John Coombs said he was a friend of Mr. McIntosh and all that, but the "under the blanket statement" was an offensive insinuation. There was blood in Mr. Coombs' eye as he smoothed his hat and recalled that Mr. McIntosh had said of the financial condition that there seemed to be something unexplained, under a blanket, as it were.

Mr. McIntosh replied that he meant only that the statement was not lucidly explained, and made no suggestion that the money had been misused.

Mr. Coombs was mollified by the reply and laughingly remarked that if there was anything going on under the blanket he wanted to know what it was and would find out.

AMUSING CRICKET.

One-Armed Players Versus One-Legged Men.

Over two thousand people were present a year or two since at Trent Bridge to witness a cricket match between the Indian Mutiny and Crimean veterans of Notts, England, and a team of ladies, the proceeds going towards a girls' orphanage. The sheriff of Nottingham and Mr. A. O. Jones, the Notts captain, officiated as umpires. The veterans, whose collective ages amounted to over eight hundred years, showed their gallantry by sending in the ladies to bat after winning the toss. The old-fashioned lob constituted their bowling. Private Corner, formerly of the Thirty-fourth Foot, took eight wickets for fifty-eight runs. The ladies were all dismissed for 106. Miss Hickling being top-scorer with twenty-four. The veterans lost by twenty-three runs. Private Matthew Holland, Nottingham's sole survivor of the famous Balaclava charge, batted with a bat of his own make fully as wide as the wicket, but Miss Hickling bowled him with a "curly one" for a "duck."

Another curious match of odd sides, which caused a great deal of amusement at the time, was played between the one-armed and one-legged pensioners of Greenwich Hospital. The one-armed cricketers proved the victors in the end. About the same time six unmarried ladies played a match against six married ones, which gave rise to a large number of bets. The single ladies were victorious in this case.

A cricket match played in Samoa some time ago, with one hundred man on each side, lasted three months, but much more remarkable was a match which from first to last covered twenty-three years. The two teams met every June 4th and played until a single wicket had fallen. Stumps were then drawn and the game resumed a year later.

The Prince of Wales' theatrical company played a cricket match in which the famous comedian, Mr. Arthur Roberts, took part. When called upon to conduct his own defence he produced his own special bat, which proved just wide enough to cover the wickets, but was allowed to pass. A straight ball was sent, which Arthur blocked, and to the amazement of his partner proceeded to run, and continued to run until the fielders declared "lost ball." Then "Gentleman Joe" produced the ball from a receptacle in his bat fitted with a trap-door! The Heathen Chinee must look to his laurels when he proposes to play with Arthur Roberts!

To Hold the King's Head When Sick.

There are many strange things in this world of ours, but the most curious is no doubt the duty of the owner of Copeland Manor, who may be called on, if necessary, to hold the King's head should His Maesty be seasick while crossing from Dover to Whitsand.

The curious condition in the tenancy of Bradley Great Wood, near Grimsby—which Lord Heneage has just sold—that a wild boar or its money value must be sent annually to the Mayor of Grimsby, reminds one of even stranger conditions on which some famous estates are held.

The Mayor of Aylesbury pays rental in the form of three geese in the summer, three eels in the winter, and straw for the King's bedroom three times a year if His Majesty passes through or stays in Aylesbury.

A red rose is paid every midsummer by the trustees of St. Olave's and St. Saviour's Grammar School in Southwark as rent for the ground on which the school was founded.

Originally that ground cost $150; now the rent, if it was not a rose, would be about $25,000 a year!

To Tame Nettles.

The novel task of taming stinging nettles is about to be attempted in England. A public company has been formed for cultivating these plants and utilising the fibre for various commercial purposes. Discoveries have recently been made which suggest that the time is not far distant when stinging nettles will be used for the manufacture of incandescent mantles, paper, and even "woollen" underclothing. The nettle possesses a fibre similar to that of ramie, which has long been used for the framework of gas mantles. The difficulty encountered in the case of the nettle has been that of degumming the strength. Now this trouble has been mastered. Recent experiments have shown that 10 per cent. of spinnable fibre and 40 per cent. of papermaking fibre can be obtained from the common nettle. The wild nettle, therefore, is to be cultivated. Botanists are wondering whether the nettle in captivity will cast away its stings.

A Wonderful Drummer.

Probably the most remarkable drummer who ever lived was Jean Heart, the famous tambour major of the Emperor Napoleon. One of his feats was to play on fifteen different toned drums at the same time in so soft and harmonious a manner that instead of the deafening uproar that might have been expected the effect was that of a novel and complete instrument. In playing he passed from one drum to the other with such wonderful quickness that the eyes of the spectators could hardly follow the movement of his hands and body.

Mansfield's Humour.

Richard Mansfield's humor was often misapprehended for conceit.

One night the company was playing under the most upset whilst a sudden downpour of rain caused a terrific clatter. This startled Mansfield into exclaiming, "What's that noise?" "Rain, sir," was the answer. "Tell it to quit!" ordered the actor fiercely.—New York Globe.

The Way Prepared.

"I wish, Miss Tipkin," said the bespectacled employer to his stenographer, "that you have something in reserve for a rainy day."

"Then, sir," said the earnest young woman, "I am going to marry a man named Mackintosh."

A Division of Labor.

Bobby had been unusually quiet for several hours, so quiet indeed that his mother began to worry over the great quantities of stillness that came from the room in which he was sitting. Finally, unable to stand the strain any longer, she rose up from her work and went into the nursery.

"What are you doing, Bobby?" she said as she discovered the little chap curled up in a chair with a very solemn expression on his face.

"Thinkin' and wishin'," replied Bobby.

"What about, dear?" asked his mother.

"I was thinkin' how nice it would be if I was twins," he answered. "Then the other one could do the studyin' at school and I could stay home and play, and then when I did something naughty, why, you could spank him. When I was sick he could take the castor oil, and"—

"And when you had some candy—what then?" asked his mother.

"Oh, I'd eat it," said Bobby. "It wouldn't do for me to let him get sick."—Judge's Library.

A Prodigy.

"So you think your boy is a prodigy? But every man thinks his own son is the most wonderful being that ever breathed."

"I tell you this youngster is remarkable, no matter how you may sneer. I've seen him do a thing that I don't suppose any other boy of his age could possibly do."

"What's his specialty—mathematics?"

"Mathematics! I should say not! He hasn't any more head for figures than I have, and learning the multiplication table was the hardest work I ever did in my life."

"In what branch of science does he seem to be particularly interested?"

"He isn't interested in science at all. But the other day a friend of mine who has a big automobile left the machine standing in front of my house for more than half an hour, and, although the boy was playing around outside all the time, he did not once climb into the automobile or even toot the horn."—Chicago Record-Herald.

MULTIPLE PERSONALITY.

One Englishwoman Who Showed Five Distinct Natures.

Rare cases of true multiple personality are known to have occurred and are of extraordinary interest. The most famous is that of "Miss Beauchamp"—the real name has always most properly been withheld—which was carefully studied by Dr. Morton Prince. By intricate steps he arrived at the conviction that in her case no fewer than five distinct personalities could be traced. The most vivid of all was the one who called herself "Sally."

The normal Miss Beauchamp was a somewhat neurotic woman, the constant prey of slight ailments and without much zest in life. After a nervous shock Sally suddenly became able to take possession of her from time to time, at first with apparent difficulty and then, as it seemed, whenever she pleased. When Sally was dominant Miss Beauchamp's whole nature was changed. She became lively, irresponsible, fond of all the violent exercises which the normal woman disliked, exuberantly healthy and different from Miss Beauchamp in every respect. She could not explain herself, but protested that she had "always been here," but could not get control, and one of the most wonderful and best attested facts in this mysterious case is that she confidently asserted her memory of events which occurred when the real Miss Beauchamp was in her cradle.

For Miss Beauchamp, the co-tenant with her of the same body, Sally had the most intense dislike, never speaking of her except with contempt and doing all she could to cause her harm and annoyance. Miss Beauchamp had a special horror of insects and reptiles, and Sally was accustomed to gratify her spite by collecting frogs, toads and spiders and dispatching them to what the inadequacy of language compels us to call herself.

Miss Beauchamp detested walking, so Sally, when she was dominant, would go for a long tramp after carefully leaving all her money behind, and then, when she was ten miles or more from home, would suddenly disappear and, allowing the original Miss Beauchamp to assume control, leave the unfortunate woman to make her way back as best she could.—London Globe.

Delicately Put.

"I was recently going through the penitentiary there—on a visit, if you please—and overtook a party of Mexican visitors. A young girl among them was questioning a convict through the bars of his cell.

"'And how long, may I ask, before you anticipate returning home, sir?' I heard her ask in the tone she might have used to a chance acquaintance at the seashore. Funny an American talking to a convict that way."—Washington Star.

Color Changes of the Hair.

Accounting for color changes of the hair, it is explained that this change is not due to a destruction of pigment present in the hair or to a bleaching of hairs already formed, but that pigmented hairs fall out and are replaced by unpigmented or white ones. Completely pigmented hairs never turn gray, they fall out. It has also been observed that the process of pigment formation may cease during the development of a hair. In such case the tip of the hair will remain pigmented though the base appears white.—Indianapolis News.

Ether Makes a Fountain.

Pour water into a bottle until it is one-third full. Pour a little ether upon the water. Through the cork pass a glass tube until its lower end is in the water. Put the flask into a double boiler and heat over the gas stove. The ether by suddenly turning to vapor will make the water squirt out of the tube like a miniature fountain. The interior diameter of the tube should be no greater than one-tenth of an inch.

The Grizzly Bear.

Mr. Enos A. Mills, the noted Colorado naturalist, has a good word for the bear. Mr. Mills declares that the grizzly is the most maligned of animals. He minds his own business, except when he is attacked, and lives on nuts, fruit, bark, grass, carrion, garbage and insects, and, as a rule, kills nothing larger than a mouse. Mr. Mills says he is an excellent mouser, patient and thorough in his methods.—Youth's Companion.

Levels of Atlantic and Pacific.

At certain stages of the tide the levels of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans at the isthmus of Panama differ materially. At Colon the difference between high and low water is not much more than twenty-three inches, while at Panama it is generally fifteen feet and at times as much as nineteen feet. The current that would be produced by this condition of things in a sea level canal would seriously interfere with navigation, but under the present arrangement of a locked canal the difficulty is overcome. The three canal locks afford no such difficulty, the difference in tide level at Port Said and Suez being of a trifling nature.—New York American.

A NAVAL BATTLE.

Captain's Diary Gives Some Idea of What Britons May Expect.

At the battle of Tsushima, when the Japanese destroyed the Russian fleet, Captain Semenoff was on the flagship Suvoroff. He had no definite post, and took notes until the sinking of the vessel. Extracts from his story are as follows:

"The first shells flew over us. At this range some of the long ones turned a complete somersault, and could be clearly seen with the naked eye curving like so many sticks thrown in the air. They flew over us, making a sort of wail, different to the ordinary roar.

"After them came others short of us — nearer and nearer. Splinters whistled through the air, jingled against the side and superstructure. Then, quite close and abreast the foremost funnel, rose a gigantic pillar of smoke, water, and flame. I saw stretchers being carried along the fore-bridge.

"Shells seemed to be pouring upon us incessantly, one after another. It seemed as if these were mines, not shells, which were striking the ship's side and falling on the deck. They burst as soon as they touched anything—the moment they encountered the least impediment in their flight. Handrails, funnel-guys, topping lifts of the boats' derricks, were quite sufficient to cause a thoroughly efficient burst.

"The steel plates and superstructures on the upper deck were torn to pieces, and the splinters caused many casualties. Iron ladders were crumpled up into rings, and guns were literally hurled from their mountings.

"In addition to this, there was the unusual high temperature and liquid flame of the explosion, which seemed to spread over everything. I actually watched a steel plate catch fire from a burst. Of course, the steel did not burn, but the paint on it did.

"Such almost non-combustible materials as hammocks, and rows of boxes, drenched with water, flared up in a moment. At times it was impossible to see anything with glasses, owing to everything being so distorted with the quivering, heated air.

"A man reported that the after-turret had been blown up, and almost simultaneously there resounded above us a rumbling noise, accompanied by the sharp clang of falling iron. Something large and heavy fell with a crash; the ship's boats on the spar-deck were smashed to bits; burning debris fell all around us, and we were enveloped in an impenetrable smoke.

"The fore-bridge was struck by numerous projectiles. Splinters of shells, which penetrated in large quantities under the mushroom-shaped roof of the conning-tower, had destroyed all the instruments in it, and had broken the compass, but luckily the telegraph to one engine and the voice-tube to the other were still working."

The Wicked Hadn't Come.

Lady Cardigan is very well known as a teller of good stories. One of them relates to an incident that happened a good many years ago when she was staying with Lord and Lady Wilton at Melton Mowbray. The then Lord Wilton, for various reasons, had gained the title among his tenantry of "The Wicked Earl"—in fact, few of the country people ever called him anything else.

One Sunday Lady Cardigan and Lady Wilton went to church, unaccompanied by his lordship, who usually was a very regular attendant. Lady Cardigan saw the verger look at them curiously as they entered the church, and he evidently noticed that Lord Wilton was not with them, but she was scarcely prepared for what followed.

It was the custom in the church to begin the service only after Lord Wilton and his party had arrived, but a new clergyman who was conducting the service that day was not aware of this, and he duly commenced:—

"When the wicked man"—

"He's not come yet!" the verger promptly interrupted in an agitated whisper.—Pearson's.

A Possible Explanation.

"I can't understand," said the librarian, "why it is that so few women come here. We have a beautiful and comfortable reading room, and I should think the ladies would like to come in, not only to read, but to rest."

"Yes," replied the trustee, "but I notice that you have at the entrance a big placard which says, 'No Talking'."

Friendly Advice.

The British Royal Yacht Squadron is the most exclusive club in the world, and there is a story that relates to an undesirable member who, somehow or other, managed to get elected into the club. The members wanted the election cancelled, and the only way out of the difficulty was to persuade the unpopular member to resign. The secretary, as tactfully as possible, offered him a substantial sum of money if he would withdraw his membership. The member was furious, and bounced off to complain to one of the committee.

"I have been grossly insulted by the secretary of this club," he roared. "He has offered me a sum of money to resign!"

"Oh, well," said the other soothingly, "however much it is, if you sit tight you'll get double!"

A Strange Superstition.

During the hot season in India—April to October—the wives and children of British soldiers are sent to hill stations to escape the terrible heat of the plains. One of these hill stations is Mount Abu, Rajputana—really a small sanitarium. Native superstition has it that the sanitarium is built "on the horns of a cow" and if beef be brought to the station their gods will be insulted and will cause an earthquake. Certain native superstitions must be respected by British authorities, so the inhabitants have to be content with mutton. Mutton for six months! Even beef extract cannot be obtained there.

NOTABLE GAINS MADE BY THE ALLIES

Advance of Over Two Miles In Belgium

A GALLANT CHARGE BY THE BRITISH HAS RESULTED IN A BIG ADVANCE

Following Bombardment by New French Artillery the British Forces Drove Enemy Back Past St. George's---Allies Recapture Trenches Lost to Enemy.

LOSSES ON BOTH SIDES HEAVY

Special Cable:

PARIS, December 29.—A gain of more than two miles in Belgium, the violent bombardment by the Germans of the allied positions along the main road from Reye to Amiens, the recapture of lost trenches by the allies after violent charges and counter charges and substantial gains in the Alsace district, electrified Paris and London to-day. Despite the snow and mud which covers the entire field of conflict, the fighting was renewed to-day with ferocity at many points, according to the afternoon official announcement from the war offices. The most pronounced gain was by the British in the vicinity of Nieuport. There after a series of conflicts in which the German lines were first battered with shells from the new French battery which has just ben placed in service, the British charged the enemy and drove the Germans back beyond St. George's. The battle was participated in by a strong allied force and the losses on both sides were very heavy. The lines of trenches west of Apremont from which the Germans dislodged the French a few days ago, are again in the possession of the allies. They were dearly gained however, it requiring a series of three distinct counter attacks before the Germans were finally forced to withdraw. The fighting was prolonged and of the most sanguinary character. Substantial gains are reported in Upper Alsace.

LONDON, December 29.—That much discussed battleship "Audacious" is still on the strength of the British navy, as indicated by a letter received here this morning from Edward Rigsby, a former Canadian now in the British navy, who states the crew of the "Audacious," now in drydock, has been transferred to the dreadnought "Queen Elizabeth."

LONDON, Dec. 29.—Advices from Petrograd say that the Austrians have again met with a most serious reverse and that the Russians are now in a position to attempt a crushing blow at Gen. Von Hindenburg's main army. Fierce fighting in the snow and mud continues in Belgium and France, with no striking advantage to either side, although the minor successes seem to be chiefly on the side of the allies.

PARIS, France, Dec. 29.—The Government announced this afternoon that French dirigible balloons have bombarded the railway station at Sarrebourg and other points along the railway line to Avricourt. French aeroplanes continue to fly over Metz and to drop bombs on the German hangars at Frascatti and other points in that vicinity.

OTTAWA, Ont., Dec. 29.—Further Canadian casualties at Salisbury Plain include Private George Meads, No. 2 Field Ambulance, dead of influenza at Bullford Manor Hospital and Private Jack Oxnard of the 17th Battalion, seriously ill of indocarditis. Both men are of English birth.

Ald. Duncan Has Opened Two Committee Rooms

With only a week for the Mayoralty contest, Alderman Duncan is determined that the citizens shall know his platform, and also know that he accepted the nomination because he felt capable of giving Peterborough a better administration than that of the past year. He has opened two committee rooms, one at 311 George street, and the other at 481 George street in the premises occupied for the Patriotic Committee's headquarters. He has already begun his campaign in these quarters, and will leave nothing undone to win the support of the citizens for his candidature.

Mayor Beller's assertion in his nomination speech that the newspapers were responsible for the election is far from the truth. Not so long ago it was generally understood that he would not be a candidate this year. Then there was a statement that he had not made up his mind as to what he would do. His appointment to the position of Collector of Revenues during the summer was regarded as tantamount to a passport from public service to the more detailed work in connection with the Department of Inland Revenue. Later, Mr. Burnham, M.P., manifested his interests in Mayor Buller and, by his services, secured from Ottawa assurance that no objection would be made to Mayor Buller's continuing for another year, if elected. Then, at the last moment, the Mayor decides that he might as well remain in office for another year, especially when there was an opinion that the elections would go by acclamation.

But the elections were brought on by the citizens themselves, and Alderman Duncan refused to back down after declaring to the ratepayers for months past that if there were any elections he would contest the Mayoralty.

Alderman Duncan states that it is with the same determination that he is going on to the end of the campaign, and two committee rooms are an indication of the efforts he will make before polling day.

O'BRIEN'S DEATH THE RESULT OF FORCE AT BASE OF THE BRAIN

Post Mortem Revealed a Rupture at the Juncture of the Brain and the Spinal Column--Coroner's Jury Return An Open Verdict--Number of Eye Witnesses Heard --Important Testimony Submitted by the Doctors ---Few Saw the Scuffle That Culminated in O'Brien's Death.

"Death, on the night of December 24, at White House, said death being caused by hemorrhage at the base of the brain, due to violence, but whether said violence was received from the hands of some other person or was caused from anger, excitement or other similar causes on his own part, we are unable to find from the evidence submitted."

The foregoing is the verdict that was rendered last evening by a coroner's jury, empanelled to inquire into the causes surrounding the tragic death of William O'Brien, which took place on Christmas eve, following a scuffle with Edgar Grose. The inquest, which was held in the police court chamber, was conducted by Coroner Dr. Greer. Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton conducted the case for the prosecution, while Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for Edgar Grose, who faces a formal charge of murder.

The case has aroused widespread interest, as evidenced by the crowded conditions of the court room. A long list of witnesses were examined. According to the evidence adduced the scuffle which it is alleged, resulted in O'Brien's death was of short duration. Not one witness could throw any light upon the causes of the fracas or say that a blow had had been struck. From the evidence submitted it would seem that following a brief scuffle with Grose in the hallway adjacent to the bar of the White House, deceased collapsed and died almost instantly. Two doctors testified that O'Brien's death was inevitable, considering the nature of the wound which was located at the base of the skull, or to be more exact, at the juncture of the brain and the spinal column. There were no exterior marks of violence, but the doctors concurred in the opinion that the injury could have been caused by a blow without leaving any exterior marks of violence. The doctors said that in all their experience they never had anything to do with a man's brain tissue that was so soft and friable. This brought out the suggestion from Dr. Greer that the rupture at the base of the brain could be attributed to violence, especially as the brain tissue was predisposed to hemorrhage; and that the effect was very probably due to external violence.

The First Witness.

Mr. John OBrien, father of the deceased, was the first witness called. To Mr. Hatton, witness said that the last time he saw his son alive was about one o'clock on the twenty-fourth day of December. Deceased was in good state of health prior to his death. He underwent an operation for swelling of the glands in the neck. This was about a year and a half ago.

Separated Them.

The next witness called was Christopher Graham. Witness was proprietor of the White House, where the tragedy took place. He remembered seeing the prisoner in the hotel about nine-thirty in the evening. He had no recollection of seeing the deceased. Prisoner was sober so far as he knew. Witness was in the office at the time the scuffle took place. He heard the noise and went out into the corridor, where he saw Grose holding O'Brien against the wall. He separated them and led Grose out. He then went back and found O'Brien in a state of collapse. Deceased made a gurgling sound as though he was choking. His clothes were loosened and restorative applied. He was then carried out into the bar of the hotel. Witness then summoned a doctor and had to call [illegible] before he could get one, in the person of Dr. Greer. The deceased was then carried into the kitchen. His face was [illegible]. He passed away about twenty minutes after the scuffle [illegible]. His son Malcolm struck and did not know of anyone who did. The witness was then examined as to the [illegible] of the scuffle.

Was in the Bar.

Leslie Hourigan said that he was the night [illegible] on the evening of the [illegible] was in the bar room [illegible] Grose. He was in the bar when the trouble commenced. He heard no loud talking or any threats made. Neither did he see any scuffle. He was there when the body was removed. He saw no trouble between the two parties, nor did he hear of any. Grose did not appear to be drinking or reveal any evidence of such.

"You don't know very much about it," remarked Coroner Greer.

Had a Few Drinks.

Bert Stewart wasin the White House on the evening of the 24th. He was well acquainted with the prisoner. Witness was on his way to meet the Belleville train, but stopped at the White House and was there until after the tragedy. Grose had a few drinks possibly three or four, perhaps half a dozen. He did not act like a man that was drunk. Witness did not notice whether he was sober. He wouldn't say that either Grose or his friends were sober. He did not see any of the scrap. He was in another part of the house. He heard a kind of a scuffle. When he arrived on the scene, deceased was lying on the floor. Witness helped to carry O'Brien out into the open. He then walked up street and met Grose, who told him that he was going to a barber shop. He did not know that O'Brien was in the house until he saw him lying on the floor. Stewart did not remember having said anything to Grose about O'Brien's condition, despite the fact that he thought he might be dead by that time.

Missed the Scuffle.

John O'Brien was in one of the stalls with Grose, Stewart, Howden, Kennedy and one or two others on Christmas eve. He did not see anything of the scuffle, having left about five minute before it took place. He would not say that Grose was altogether sober.

"You don't know anything about this scuffle at all," remarked Mr. Hatton.

Witness—"Not very much."

"What do you know?"

"Not very much about this affair."

Drove to Stewart's.

Wallace Kennedy covered practically the same ground as the previous witness. He was one of the party who were drinking in the stall. Jack Patterson was also in the crowd. Witness said that so far as he knew Grose might have had five or six drinks. Witness went through the hall during the evening, where he met Grose and O'Brien. Grose had his hands in an elevated position. He did not see anything of the scuffle. About twelve o'clock witness and another man named Gilgour drove down to Grose's house. Grose was not at home. Witness did not see Grose at all up to last night. They drove out to Stewart's farm, where they stayed until Stewart's man came home. He did not know of Grose's whereabouts that night. He thought he did, but he found out that he didn't. That's what took him out to Stewart's. He did not tell Chief Thompson or Detective Newhall that he was out of town that night. As a matter of fact it was about two o'clock in the morning when he left the city.

Bert Stewart, who was recalled, denied having driven Grose out to the country. He stayed at the Grand Hotel all night.

Another of the Party.

Herbert Gilgour remembered the night of the 24th. Asked where he was at nine o'clock, witness said that he did not know whether he was at Freeman Gray's store or at the White House. He remembered having been in the hotel that night. He was one of the party who drove out to the country. Witness was driving to the farmer Grose might have had four drinks himself. He did not see any of the scuffle. After leaving the farm he was over to the hotel. [illegible]

U. S. PROTEST TO BE CONSIDERED

Complaint From American Government--Will Carefully Investigate the Matter and No Trouble is Anticipated on Either Side of the Atlantic.

Special to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, December 29.—A prompt and generous response is expected, administration officials declared to-day, to the U. S. government's note to Great Britain complaining of British interference with United States commerce. Little danger lurks of a serious breach with Great Britain in the American protest, high officials believe. The expectations of the administration that the exchange of notes will result in British regulations freeing American commerce from British interference to a great extent, are based here principally on the ground that Great Britain is extremely anxious to possess the moral support and the friendship not only of the administration but of the American public.

TORONTO, Ont., Dec. 29.—Sir Allen Aylesworth, Minister of Justice in the late Laurier government, had the following to say this morning regarding the United States' protest to Britain as to the searching of shipping:

"I would be inclined to think that pressure had been brought upon the government at Washington by some of the big, powerful interests like the copper people, and the government has been forced to do something to satisfy their demands. And they have, therefore issued this protest. I dare say that the whole situation was previously discussed with the English government and the whole matter is thoroughly understood between the chiefs on each side of the ocean. The protest as now issued is intended for public consumption.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—Great Britain will give the most careful consideration to the protest of the United States regarding the searching up of American shipping.

This was emphasized at the Foreign Office to-day. It was stated that while officially the Government still has no knowledge of what the United States desires, the text of the communication [illegible] already been communicated to the Foreign Office by Sir Cecil Spring Rice, the British Ambassador at Washington. Arrangements have been made for Ambassador Page to present the note to Sir Edward Grey. It will at once be referred to the Cabinet for consideration.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 29.—Formal representations were made to Great Britain to-day through the British Ambassador regarding the action of the Canadian frontier militia in firing on American duck hunters, near Fort Erie.

These representations will be followed up by others of a more definite character as soon as Secretary of State Bryan receives a full report on the details of the incident.

That Canada will make formal apologies for the incident, denying responsibility for the action of the troopers is thought sure to be certain. She will probably be asked, however, to pay an indemnity to the family of the dead man and to punish those who did the shooting.

BUFFALO, N.Y., Dec. 29.—The funeral of Walter Smith, 21, shot by Canadian soldiers while duck hunting on Niagara river yesterday, will be held to-morrow.

Charles Dorsch, the other American hunter, who was wounded, will probably recover from his wound.

Friends of the bereaved Smith family in Black Rock, to the number of 150, have sent a petition to Washington, D.C., requesting that action be taken on the part of the United States Government.

The investigation into the killing of Smith has been held at Fort Erie until Wednesday after, when Crown Attorney Cowper will attend.

Corporal Kayle, of Bridgeburg, Private P. McIntosh, of Grimsby, and Private L. Kinsman, of Welland, who composed the squad of Canadian militiamen that fired upon the American hunters, are still under arrest.

Port Hope Guide—The chicken thieves are evidently turning their attention in another direction, and if as successful in their new venture we may come down some morning and find the main street carried off.

INTERPRETERS FOLLOW EACH ALLIED ARMY

Havre, Dec. 21. —A new style of French soldier has just appeared in Havre, wearing the regulation English uniform of olive drab, with puttees and a cap of the traditional French [illegible] shape, both of khaki colour.

These soldiers who created much interest at first by reason of their novel uniforms, are detached from the French army to serve in the English as official interpreters. They are mounted and attached to the various headquarters.

English officers with more than a knowledge of [illegible] French are not common, while the enlisted men who have been able to pick up Hindustanee and various dialects in the British colonies, find themselves [illegible] as far as French is concerned. Neither [illegible] speaks English and [illegible] up their work [illegible] only the civilians with [illegible] are interpreted at the front. It was felt necessary at first to have [illegible] for the French army [illegible]

THE OLD STAND-BY FOR 1915.

Regularly as the revolution of the earth or the rising of the sun, the Canadian Almanac makes its appearance to illuminate its Canadian world. The present number is the sixty-eighth yearly issue. The Canadian Almanac, after two generations, has become—a national institution, as much a part of our national life, and as indispensable as the postoffice or the statutes, and much more illuminating. Everybody knows the Canadian Almanac so well that it seems unnecessary to say what it contains. In fact it might be more to the point to specify what it doesn't contain in the way of full authentic information relating to the commercial, statistical, astronomical, departmental, ecclesiastical, educational and financial interests of Canada. In special and general information its contents are so ample, so admirably arranged, so complete and comprehensive, that it is indispensable to the reference library of every class of citizen. A necessarily new feature of this year is a synopsis of the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Act. Toronto:. The Copp Clark Company, Limited. Price, 528 pages, cloth, $1.00.

CONGRATULATIONS.

While The Examiner congratulates Mr. T. F. Matthews on his election by acclamation, to membership of the Utilities Commission, the city itself, in continued assurance of his services, is a more pertinent object of congratulation. Mr. Matthews has given the city exceptionally good service as member and chairman of the Water Commission, for the past thirteen years. The public confidence in his capacity and ability to serve them, and his actual good service, has been shown by his re-election by acclamation, for eleven terms, his return having been unsuccessfully opposed on only two occasions. This city is fortunate in securing his services for another term. His experience, his ability, and his eminent fitness for the work, are especially needed in the matter of organization upon a sound basis of the Hydro-Electric enterprise of the city. If we get this off to as good a start as we experienced in the matter of the Water Commission, we shall be fortunate indeed! We can confidently count on Mr. Matthews and his colleagues giving the city continued good service in their enlarged capacity of responsibility and usefulness to the public.

BORN SENSIBLE.

There is at least, one boy in the city who was born with good sense, and a good principle. Last night a gentleman returning home, northward, about nine o'clock from a meeting of the Charity Board, saw a boy gazing longingly in a shop window, bright with the Christmas display of sweets. He passed him by once, but something in his appearance challenged the gentleman's attention; and he went back and investigated. He found out that the family to which the lad belonged had not too much to eat at home. The little fellow was fairly well clad; but then when the money ceases, the wardrobe lasts longer than the larder. The boy was taken into the shop and asked what he would like to have bought for him. It was naturally expected that he would say "candy," but he said, "If you please, sir, a loaf of bread"—he was a polite boy and said "sir" —showing that he not only was well reared and had good sense, but a big share of the unselfish Christmas spirit still in the air. He didn't think only of himself but more of the hungry at home. He showed his good sense by asking for something useful, something more in keeping with his circumstances than a luxury.

If more people in the world, as a habit, or even occasional practice, afford as sensibly, the world would be better for them and all of us. The man that needs a cooking stove he can afford and pay for, and prefers an automobile he can't afford and can't pay for; the woman who needs a new set of warm under-clothing which she can pay for, and prefers an expensive ball dress she doesn't need and can't pay for; and the hundreds of people who waste their substance on dispensable articles, that can be done without to their advantage, personally and financially, can learn a lesson from the little hungry boy, with his good sense and unselfish principle. Half of the hard-upness in the world comes from half the world, carrying into every detail of the personal and domestic management of their means, a preference for luxuries—things that can be done without and neglect of sensible expenditure. The proverb says "the Lord sends meat and the devil sends cooks," and the spirit and lesson of this might well be extended to the expenditure of means that Providence intrusts to us—for our good, not for our undoing.

THE ELECTORS TO BLAME.

If the people of Peterborough—the ratepayers who grumble at high assessment and high taxes—have their civic affairs badly managed, it is their own fault. They are to blame for not only chosing their representatives badly, but for not, in fact, in some cases, chosing them at all—allowing their candidates and representatives to be pitchforked upon a suffering, and to suffer, civic public. We have, for the past month, had our indifference to the selection of aldermen emphasized by the prominence given to a proposal to have no elections this year in order to save expenses. As a consequence, if not result, we have had little or no attention paid to bringing suitable candidates into the field, to securing as candidates men of ability and substance, in the largest sense, and of some shadow of ability.

In two wards we have no contests, the single candidate in each case, being elected by acclamation, if not by default. In the Centre Ward, the candidate elected by acclamation justifies himself—he is known and his one year's service in the Council, as well as his valuable activities in another capacity, give good warrant for his re-election. In the South Ward the retirement of Alderman Duncan to contest the mayoralty, left a vacancy which was filled by an utterly unknown and inexperienced man being elected by acclamation, because there was no opposing candidate. Whatever the qualifications of the new representative, it is permissible to question whether, without competition or inquiry, the best man to represent the most important ward in the city has been secured. The South Ward contains, within its bounds, at least twelve important industries, many of them our most important industries, and the interests, capitalistic and labouring, associated with them are certainly important enough to warrant at least a little effort to secure adequate civic representation. The South Ward, if any, deserves the best representation in our City Council. It is for the people to say whether this ward has got that representation now. If it has it is due to accident. Under such circumstances it is obvious that no attempt has been made to get good representation; if this has been secured it is due to accident, and not to any activity or display of interest on the part of the ratepayers.

This ward is referred to because it illustrates the general wrong of the principle of electing representatives by default or, rather, allowing representatives to elect themselves. It also illustrates the evil of the ward system which lends itself to mediocrity and assurance determining the quality of a ward's municipal representation. With aldermen elected by general vote, the candidates would have to possess reasonable capacity; be sufficiently identified with the life of the city, to be known beyond the boundaries of a ward or of some little local clique. An alderman elected by general vote would be on a level with the mayor, in that he would be the choice of the whole people, and incidentally possess some small degree of fitness to secure popular approval. The ward system, fosters the lamentable, and resultantly ruinous, indifference of the electors. This indifference is the one cause of the ineffective civic service which the average municipal council gives.

We need a waking up, and a shaking up, in the matter of electing our municipal representatives. We do badly enough when we exercise the greatest care; and we necessarily do worse when we allow them to elect themselves. If any of the dozen industries in the South Ward picked off the street, or accepted the first man that offered, and allowed him to appoint himself superintendent or manager, such an industry would soon go to the wall; and serve it right. Yet the people collectively, comprising the membership of these industries, stand by and by their indifference, approve of the same way of securing civic representatives who have or should have an important relation to the welfare and prosperity of these industries and their employees or shareholders and workmen. If we are badly governed in civic matters we have ourselves, and our lack of public spirit, and our lack of interest in the protection and promotion of our own business, to blame.

Russia's Place and Spirit In The Sextuple Alliance

It is one of the inevitable results of war that we discover all the bad qualities of our enemies and all the good qualities of our allies. The first tendency may easily be carried too far; but the healing influence of time should prevent a war from being followed by a vendetta. The recognition of the good qualities of our allies is altogether beneficial, and may be made to promote the ends of civilization. The present alliance of Great Britain France, Russia, Belgium, Servia, and Japan is the most powerful that the world has ever seen. Important as it is for military ends, it might, if wisely handled, be made to serve a still greater and more enduring purpose. It covers twenty-five million square miles and nearly eight hundred million people. If a real sympathy and understanding could be established among these people, one could look forward very hopefully to the future of the world.

A contribution to a better understanding of Russia is given by the Round Table for December, in an article entitled "Russia and Her Ideals." The mind of Russia, says the writer, is like its land. It is virgin soil. The population capable of reading and writing is only 26 per cent. of 170 millions. The percentage is, or includes, what is known as the intelligentsia." In this class culture has become a cult. It is doctrinaire and revolutionary. It hates and would destroy the past. It worships Kar Marx, Herbert Spencer, Nietzsche, and other modern prophets, and is inclined to be impatient with time-honoured institutions, which are condemned in a book and are not in accordance with reason.

Obviously these nations are in conflict with those of the bureaucracy, while "the Russian people, the illiterate 75 per cent., stands aside, a puzzled but shrewd spectator of this life and death struggle between the bureaucracy and the intelligentsia." Neither has really won its sympathy, since both are lumped together in the popular mind as "boyars," or landlords, the ancient enemies of the peasant class. Apart from the 25 per cent., the bureaucrats and the aristocratic radicals, Russia is "a land of peasants, intensely patriotic, intensely devout; their national patriotism, their devotion to the Czar, and their religion being all aspects of one faith by which they live and die. If one were asked to sum up Russia in a word, one could find the word at once. Russia is a church. There is no line between secular and divine as there is with us. Every room has its icon (image), every undertaking its prayer. The power of ecclesiastical institutions is not great, the parish priest is not reverenced over-much, the Church of Russia is neither influential nor learned; but the country is the most Christian in the world. The peasants can neither read the profound philosophers and sociologists of the West, nor write their thoughts in books and treatises; yet they have a philosophy of their own, as definite and as tenaciously held as that of the intelligentsia. It is the philosophy of simplicity, of brotherliness, or mystery and of miracle. All they know or care about are the two elemental facts of life, God and the land. The country is full of churches, monasteries, and shrines. Thousands of pilgrims find their way to Jerusalem every Easter."

This is a very interesting and instructive picture. Does it occur to any of our readers that an equally attractive picture might be drawn of the French-Canadian peasantry of Quebec? As we are now trying to understand the Russians, it might be well if Canadians would try to understand each other.

The Round Table writer is enthusiastic about the virtues of the peasantry. Here, he says, is the virgin soil which makes Russia so great. Tolstoi is a development of a certain side of the peasant character. "What is bad is borrowed from abroad." There the writer goes too far. It is quite likely that the Russian peasant character is as admirable as he describes it. Then what has kept Russia back, and put it out of sympathy with the liberal tendencies of the world? Not the thinking, radical element, eager for new ideas. They may go too far in their eagerness. But they are not responsible for despotism and for the persecution of the Jews. A combination of intellectual radicalism with peasant simplicity ought to have produced an almost ideal Russia. In bureaucracy, whether domestic or imported, we must look for the source of the evil.

In the royal family of Russia there is an element of idealism. Alexander the Second emancipated the serfs, revolutionized the legal and criminal machinery of the country, and circumscribed the authority of the bureaucracy by setting up representative institutions for local government. Alexander the First submitted to Pitt a scheme for the confederation of Europe, to come into effect after the triumph of the allies over Napoleon the First. He conceived a Europe governed by law and right rather than by force. "On principles such as these one could proceed to general pacification, and give birth to a league of which the stipulations would form, so to speak, a new code of the law of nations, while those who should try to infringe it would risk bringing upon themselves the forces of the new union. Ninety-four years later the present Czar invites the powers of Europe and the Arians are as dear as with a view to general disarmament. Dostoieffsy, a famous Russian novelist, says that to be a real Russian and to be wholly Russian means to be universally human, to be the brother of all men. To the true Russian, Europe and the Aryans are as dear as the affairs of Russia herself. The real aims of Russia are to be attained, not by the sword, but by fraternity and union. It may be for Russia "to utter the great and final word of universal harmony, the fraternity and lasting concord of all peoples according to the Gospel of Christ."

It is worth, while at least, to try to understand the Russians.—Toronto Star.

PLAIN SPEAKING BY A FRIENDLY CRITIC

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, Dec. 28—Some interesting comments on the new Cabinet are made editorially by the Toronto World (Conservative). It says:

"One thing that Mr. Hearst's ministry should keep before it is the necessity of running Ontario affairs for Ontario. There is more than a belief that the Dominion Government has a large finger in the Ontario pie, and Mr. Hearst will have to make it plain that he is clear of this odium before he can get a support as hearty as that which was extended to to his honoured and trusted predecessor. Dundas and Hamilton are reminders, if any be necessary, that friendly hints and warnings are not to be ignored."

In regard to Mr. Lucas' transference to the Department of Attorney-General, the World says:

"The problems that have been untouched and the proceedings that have been hanging fire in the Attorney-General's Department are enough to keep Mr Lucas busy for a long time to come, but his friends expect him to get busy on the more pressing issues at once, and thus maintain his reputation for efficiency. He can make his own choice of what is to be done first, but it will be a grievous disappointment to the Province if, after a long period of stagnation, many things are not done soon."

The World hopes that McGarry and Ferguson, as Provincial Treasurer and Minister of Lands, respectively, will co-operate in regard to the general question of revenue, especially timber limits. The World says:

"It almost seems like a conspiracy of silence at times, when an attempt is made to get at the exact conditions on which timber limits are leased. If the information exists, it is not readily available and when it is available it is usually in a fragmentary and dis-jointed form, useless for comparative purposes. There is reason to believe that many timber limits are not yielding the Province what is justly due from them. Some are lying fallow in part and others are held on terms which it would be profitable to the Province to cancel or to purchase. The whole record should be overhauled and the light let into the dark places.

The Obstacle.

"I don't know what I'm ever going to make of that son of mine," said a prominent citizen of the City of Good Will the other day. The P. C., it may be said, is a self made man, graduate of the university of hard knocks, etc. And it naturally grieves him that his son is not aggressive.

MANY ARE ELECTED

War Year Marked by Large Number of Acclamations

ELECTIONS NEXT MONDAY.

TORONTO, Dec. 29.—Nominations were held yesterday in all the municipalities throughout Ontario except in one or two of the larger cities, where the elections are held on New Year's Day. As will be seen by the lists of mayors and reeves elected by acclamation, elections will not be held in at least three more places. The general opinion in the municipalities where all councils were elected by acclamation was that this was a bad year to go to the expense of an election, and by mutual agreement, the mayors, reeves and councils were returned unopposed. The elections in the places where nominations were held yesterday will take place next Monday.

The following mayors were elected by acclamation:—Acton, Geo. Hinds; Aylmer, F. L. Wagner; Almonte, Harold Jamieson; Brantford, J. H. Spence; Burlington, M. C. Smith; Chatham, Ed. Wantress; Carleton Place, D. Smythe; Campbellford, W. J. Armstrong; Dundas, W. H. C. Fisher; Galt, A. E. Buchanan; Gananoque, D. Darling; Hanover, C. H. Witthun; Kingston, R. D. Sutherland; Mattawa, George L. Lemothe (tenth term); Midland, H. J. Craig; Meaford, F. Kent; Paris, John M. Patterson; Renfrew, W. A. Moore; Ridgetown, P. J. Henry; Simcoe, Geo. Williamson; Seaforth, Wm. Ament; Trout, J. H. Peddar; Thornbury, M. Steisinger; Walkerton, F. W. Lippert.

British Air and Water Craft Which Took Part in Cuxhaven Raid—The sea battle at Cuxhaven on Christmas day was the most spectacular performance as yet recorded in the war. The British seaplanes, were included, being convoyed to the point of attack by ships and then dropped into the water. There were fast oil burning cruisers, only recently launched, submarines and destroyers. An anti-air craft gun which helped to drive off the German Zeppelins is shown. The importance of the fact is great in view of the German threat to destroy the British navy with their Zeppelins.

Roumanian Parliament Gives Government Carte Blanche

LONDON, Dec. 29. — The London Telegraph correspondent at Bucharest (Roumania) telegraphed yesterday as follows:—

To-day, in a debate upon an address in reply to a message from the throne, the Prime Minister asked the majority to waive discussion, and asked the Opposition to leave the Government "full liberty of action to fulfill its great duty."

The Conservative party expressed its willingness to do this. M. Disesco, on behalf of the Conservative Democrats, repeated the declaration made by Take Jonesco in the Chamber, according to which Roumania ought to abandon her neutral position and make an immediate alliance with the Triple Entente. He accused Austria of ingratitude towards Roumania, and concluded by observing that two sections of the Opposition, the Conservatives and the Conservative Democrats, had declared for an abandonment of neutrality and for an alliance with France, Russia and Britain. He expressed the hope that presently this policy would be adopted officially.

The address to the throne was agreed to unanimously.

The population of Roumania numbers over seven millions, the majority of the people belonging to the Orthodox Church.

Military service is compulsory and universal. The peace strength is 170,000 men, and the second line or reserve troops muster 36 battalions, or in all a war strength of nearly half a million men.

WILL BE ABSENT SIX WEEKS

Rev. J. McP. Scott Home From Hospital But Confined to Bed.

TORONTO, Dec. 28.—Not for six weeks at least will the Rev. John McP. Scott, who was shot last week, be able to resume work in his church at the corner of Simpson and Broadview avenues. He has been able to leave the General Hospital. There the bullet was located by the X-rays but not removed. Dr. Charles Sneath, who is attending the clergyman, reports that no physical pain is being experienced by the minister but he is suffering from shock.

At the services at the church Sunday reference was made to the narrow escape of the pastor, and during his absence the services were taken by the Rev. C. M. Wright of Fort George and the Rev. Mr. John Neil of Westminster Church.

After the evening service the managers met and decided to grant the Rev. Mr. Scott six weeks or longer leave of absence till he fully recovers.

TARGET FOR HER HUSBAND

Mrs. Fitzsimmons, Seeking Divorce, Says Pugilist Threw Bottles at Her.

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 28.—Various episodes of their married life, in which she figured as an abused person, were related by Mrs. Julia Fitzsimmons, wife of Robert Fitzsimmons, heavyweight pugilist, in testifying in her action for divorce.

Threats to shoot were related by Mrs. Fitzsimmons, who said that at various times her husband pulled her hair or grabbed a gun and sometimes threw bottles at her.

"I don't want any dinner," she said she told him. "I always worked before we got married, and I have got to since." No defence was offered and a default was entered.

Troops May Go In February

OTTAWA, Dec. 29.—The second division which Canada is to send to the front will from present indications leave some time in February, though on such matters as the movement of troops there is of course no official statement. There is also a prevailing belief that the troops now on Salisbury Plain, after several months of hard tactical training, will before long take their places in the battle front. The change just announced in the plans whereby the six extra battalions in England are not as first arranged to be included in the second contingent, but utilised as reinforcements for the regular division may be interpreted as a further indication that the movement to the front will not be very long delayed.

INCREASE STRENGTH.

It will necessitate the increase from 17,000 to about 22,000, the strength of the second contingent. Recruiting in the various centres is proceeding at a rate which is entirely satisfactory, and at the same time efficient training is being proceeded with according to the well ordered plans of the Government. The despatch of the first division for active service will be followed by its being replaced on Salisbury Plain with a second division from Canada, while a third contingent will be immediately enlisted here to take the place of the second.

OVER 100,000 WILLING.

At the present time Canada has under arms or in process of enlistment a force of over a hundred thousand men. They will be sent off in rotation as order is desired by the War Office. The plans in every detail are being carried forward without the slightest hitch.

Germans in California Reported To Be Looking to B. C.

MONTREAL, Dec. 28.—"The German scare" received Vice-President George M. Bosworth of the C. P. R. in the form of a telegram from The New York Times yesterday afternoon as follows:—

"We are receiving intimations from widely different points in California that there is a movement of Germans in civilian clothing northward, the object being to join Vancouver and Canadian Pacific Railway communications to help Cuxhaven aeroplanes. Have you anything to say?"

Mr. Bosworth had something to say. It is this:

"We [illegible] money all along the [illegible] P. R. and [illegible] feet high [illegible] of any C[illegible] [illegible] national [illegible]." — Geo. M. Bosworth.

TERRIFIC STORM HOLDS THE OPPOSING ARMIES IN LEASH

Many Prisoners and Guns Are Captured in Region of Dukla Passes and Enemy's Retreat is Becoming More Precipitate

PARIS, Dec. 29.—A storm of violent proportions which swept over the battle front from Flanders almost to the German frontier on the allies' right yesterday held the opposing armies in leash. The fall of snow that was driven down in a terrific gale upon almost the entire war area acted as a curtain which effectively obscured the view of the enemy from the gunners, and a truce was enforced practically along the whole front.

However, in the Argonne region, where fiercest fighting has been furious for the past fortnight, the French forces managed to press forward through the storm for material gains.

Reports of the fighting which occurred just preceding the period of enforced inactivity indicate that the allies made decisive gains at the two extremes of the line against Muhlhausen and in front of Nieuport. Both of these movements are of great military importance, as they are preliminary developments of striking manoeuvres which must surely discomfit the invaders when the time comes for the allies to assume definitely their offensive.

During the past four days, according to a despatch to The Paris Temps from its correspondent in Basle, Switzerland, the most terrific fighting has been taking place on the whole front of the Vosges region. The fighting was most violent on Friday and Saturday, when the roar of the guns [illegible] to a furious cannonade was distinctly heard on the Swiss border.

French airmen had previously reconnoitered the German gun positions in a flight over Muhlhausen, only eight miles in advance of the French lines. Upon their return the French gunners, having been given the corrected range by the observers who went aloft with their airmen, opened a most deadly fire upon the German batteries. Many of the German guns are reported to have been silenced.

"During the entire day a violent storm has interfered with the operations along the greater part of the front. It is reported, notwithstanding, that we have made some progress in the Argonne region.

"In Belgium we have continued to advance. To the west of Lombaertzyde we are actually at the foot of the sand dunes on which the enemy has established his line of resistance.

"At a point south of Tpres we have lost a section of trenches near Hollebeke.

"In the region of Lens, near Carency, the enemy yielded, under our attacks, 300 yards of first-line trenches.

"In the valley of the River Aisne and in Champagne there has been intermittent artillery fighting which was particularly severe in the vicinity of Ripont and around Perthes. Here the enemy directed their artillery fire effectually against the positions of the town of Perthes conquered and occupied by us.

"On the heights of the Meuse there has been [illegible] fighting [illegible] front.

"In the Vosges, the enemy bombarded the [illegible] district of St. Die, but the railroad service had not been interrupted.

"In Upper Alsace, to the northeast of Steinbach, a counter-attack of the Germans was repulsed.

[illegible] for Russians.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 27. — The following statement from the General Staff of the Russian commander-in-[illegible] was issued last night:

[illegible] there was no important [illegible] between the Vistula and the Pilica rivers. The German [illegible] offensive [illegible] has suffered heavy losses, especially during a vain attack they made to the southeast of Skierniewice.

"Between the Pilica and the upper Vistula the enemy has now adopted the defensive.

"Our troops stormed the village of Szitniki, which was stubbornly defended by the Austrians. The enemy has definitely evacuated the left bank of the Nida.

"To the south of the upper Vistula on the front of Opatow-Biecz, the fighting continued to develop to our advantage. From the 18th to the 26th we captured there 200 officers and 15,000 soldiers and forty mitrailleuses.

"The enemy's retreat in the region of the Dukla Passes and on the road to Lisko is becoming more and more precipitate and disorganized. On the 26th we captured in this region as many as five thousand prisoners.

"The efforts of the enemy to transport his forces from the direction of Chenstochowa toward the Carpathians was a complete failure owing to our manoeuvres."

Prisoners Well Treated.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29.—Chandler Anderson, who as special attache of the American embassy in London, made an investigation of military prison camps in practically all the European belligerent countries, declared yesterday that there was no substantial difference in the treatment of prisoners of war, and that probably in every case they were cared for as well as their captors could afford, considering their own military necessities.

Card to the Electors

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY OF PETERBOROUGH:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—I desire to respectfully solicit your votes and your influence that I may be elected Mayor of the City of Peterborough for the year 1915. I was born in this City and have lived here all my life, and feel, and have always felt, a deep interest in the City.

I have served you in the City Council for eight years, having been elected several times by the whole City under the general vote system and also since then have represented the South Ward. I have been Chairman of the Board of Works two years and Chairman of the Property Committee four years, and served as a member on all the other Committees, and the experience I have had and the knowledge of the affairs and needs of the City I have obtained during those years will be of advantage in the position of Mayor if you elect me to that office.

I offer myself as a candidate at this time because I have been requested to do so by a large number of electors. One year ago a number of my friends urged me then to be a candidate, but I stood aside upon the statement to me by the present Mayor that he wished the office for one year only, and would not run for a second term, and that my two-year term as Alderman would then have expired, and it would be a more convenient time for me to be a candidate for the office, consequently, I am not violating any custom in being a candidate this year.

My course in the Council is known to you, and, while I do not claim not to have made a mistake in the eight years, I feel that I can ask you to support me upon my record as an Alderman. During the coming year I believe the Council should have two principal aims, namely, to conduct the business of the City with the strictest economy, so as to make the tax rate as low as possible, and to expend the revenue upon necessary works in such a manner as to give as large an amount of employment as possible for the money expended and to produce the best results. If you elect me I will keep these aims in view, that the burden of taxation may be as light as possible and that work may be given to those who need it upon works for the benefit of the City as far as the revenue will permit.

Again soliciting your votes, and wishing you all the compliments of the season,

I am, yours respectfully,

German Comment on the Raid.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 29. — "Cuxhaven was not a sleepy Scarborough. Everybody was on duty and we prepared a worthy reception," is the comment of The Neue Hamburger Zeitung yesterday on the raid of the British upon the German naval base last Thursday.

"The difference was that our airmen and Zeppelins dropped bombs which set the English on fire," the Zeitung continues. "The English dropped missiles, which fell alongside the objects at which they were aimed."

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY YOUNG MEN OPEN THREE DAY CONFERENCE LAST NIGHT

Welcomed to City by His Honour Judge Huycke—Rev. C. W. Bishop Points Out That Elements of Leadership Are Less Born Than Acquired in Inspiring Address to the Young Men of Bay of Quinte Conference.

The Older Boys' and Young Men's Conference being held in the George Street church during Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week was opened last night, the Rev. R. G. Peever presiding. To the opening session the public were invited and besides some 150 young men delegates there were a number of local young men and other people interested in young men present to hear the speakers.

His Honour Judge Huycke, on behalf of the citizens of this city, welcomed the visiting young men, who came from all quarters of the Bay of Quinte conference. In a brief speech in which he heartily endorsed the object of the conference—the development of leadership—Judge Huycke expressed the pleasure which Peterborough citizens had in general in the entertaining of the young men while they were in the city. He said that the greatest work to-day was being done among the young men and young women of Canada. He invited the visitors to make themselves at home while in Peterborough and make full use of whatever recreation and amusement was provided. He was sure they needed no admonition to behave as gentlemen, for from what he had seen of the young men since their arrival their conduct had been splendid.

In response the Rev. S. T. Bartlett, General Secretary of Epworth Leagues and Sunday schools, made a brief but stirring address. He quoted a number of personal experiences to show that under any conditions if the young men determined to work for the other fellow he could be of the utmost service. There was plenty to be done, but too few to undertake the work. He called upon the delegates to remember that they were under the responsibility of representing their various constituencies while in the city, and felt assured that they would leave for home a larger, stronger and truer representative of young manhood. He paid a tribute to the possibilities of the conference and deplored the fact that more of a similar nature were not held.

Mr. Leo Copp of the George Street Epworth League, spoke, welcoming the delegates on behalf of the young men of Peterborough. Mr. J. L. Lane of Oakwood, made an earnest response, taking for his subject, "What we have come for." He was sure that owing to the spirit of cheerfulness and Christian fellowship that prevailed, every one would return home feeling that their attendance had been a blessing to themselves. No doubt, too, they would pass on the blessing to whatever organization they were representing at the conference.

The address of the evening was given by the Rev. C. W. Bishop. It was a most happy occasion at which was assembled many of the representatives of the coming leadership in church work. They stood for the younger element in every branch of the work for the Kingdom of God. Only in the last few years had he been privileged to be associated with conferences of this nature and he regarded them as the most valuable of all the opportunities in connection with his work among young men. Without doubt the greatest need in all phases of religious work to-day was leadership. Leadership stood for the immeasurable opportunity of the individual. Every problem of the Christian church in its final analysis went back to the question of leadership. Every good movement had for the limit of its upward tide the measure of the ability, integrity and vision of the men who were leaders in it. He thought that the importance of this fact could be unmistakably accepted—that leadership was actually, without equal need of the Christian church.

In the body of young men present, in their later years of adolescence the chord of ambition could be easily and powerfully struck, much more so than in the case of men of his own years. He called upon the young men to forget their selfish ambitions and put their whole effort into a work that would result in the benefitting of those around them.

The church of the past, he said, had not laid too much emphasis upon the "change of heart" in the individual but had not emphasized sufficiently the fact that this change of heart should be manifested by and crystalized into consecrated active service. Unless it was, then the actual change of heart in the young man was not complete. He referred to the slogan of the Y.M.C.A. of "help the other fellow," which he thought had to a great extent taken the place of selfish ambition and desires in the youth of a few years ago.

"Therefore," he said, "I would put before you to-night the ambition of service, and would urge you to add yourselves to the number who are allied with the great movements of to-day."

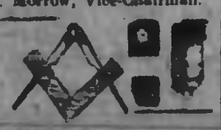
In conclusion he dwelt upon the fact that leadership was less born in a young man than acquired. The elements of leadership were such that could be incorporated in the life of any fellow, no matter with how little capital stock he had commenced life. Hard work, consecration and a moral strength to resist temptation were the constituent qualities of leadership. The young men should cultivate the beauty of symmetry of character, and the beauty of the unfolding of their petals of ability.

'ST. JOHN'S NIGHT IS FITTINGLY CELEBRATED BY LOCAL MASONS

The installation of officers and the observing of the Anniversary of St. John the Evangelist is always looked forward to by local Masonic brethren with enthusiasm, and last night's gathering of the Craft was no exception.

Local members and visiting brethren were in attendance in large numbers and they all did justice to an excellent menu, under the direction of Bro. C. Coleman.

At 5.30 o'clock the installing officer, Rt. Wor. Bro. H. R. H. Kenner, assisted by Rt. Wor. Bro. John Crane and Rt. Wor. Bro. W. H. Walkey performed the duties of installing the newly elected officers of Corinthian and Peterborough Lodges in a most efficient manner. This part of the programme was not concluded until about 8 o'clock, when those present repaired to the Banquet Hall, where the installing officer was the Chairman of the evening, and V. Wor. Bro. R. F. Morrow, Vice-Chairman.



The following is the list of the officers installed:

The installing officer had been prepared with the qualifications of the various brethren whose names were omitted

The toasts were of the very highest order. This may have been to some extent brought about from the fact that the spirit of patriotism to the Empire that pervaded the whole gathering made men feel and talk as they never had before.

Mention must be made of the exceptional address of Rt. Wor. Bro. H. R. H. Kenner in his response to the toast to the Installing Master, which was one of his very best efforts.

The newly installed Masters, Wor. Bro. H. W. Morphet of Corinthian Lodge, and Wor. Bro. W. S. Campbell, accepted the duties of their offices in very thoughtful and earnest remarks.

With the Junior Warden's toast was brought to a conclusion one of the happiest and fruitful of Masonic gatherings in this City.

BAD FOR THE WOUNDED.

Society Nurses Are Incompetent Say Medical Staff.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—"Too sick to be nursed to-day," a placard said to have been placed over the bedstead of a soldier wounded in the South African campaign, is much needed in British hospitals now, according to the National Council of Trained Nurses, which has sent to Lord Kitchener a protest against the employment of incompetent nurses. In acknowledgment of the resolution, the Secretary of War asked the Council to submit evidence in support of its charges, and a report on the matter is expected shortly.

The professional trained nurses are complaining that young women of means and social influence, attracted by the sentimental side of nursing at the front, have stormed the hospitals and have in many cases obtained positions, notwithstanding that they know nothing of the work.

Such being the case, according to the allegation of the Nurses' Council, the rush of amateurs has pushed aside the competent, greatly to the misfortune of the wounded Tommy, who has to submit to "fussing" and petting at the hands of pretty, untrained girls, which, while sentimentally appealing, does not go very far toward ministering to his real needs.

The agitation against the incompetent nurse was raised early in the war, but only just now have the organized nurses, numbering some 6,000, brought the matter officially to the attention of the War Office.

The Horrors Of The War

Are Vividly Portrayed at the Empire Theatre—Have You Seen the Belgium War Pictures?

The patrons of the Empire Theatre were treated to one of the finest picture features shown anywhere in Canada for the price of admission. Not only was the big special feature of the evening a huge success and revelation in filmdom, but the Belgium War Pictures are the real thing right from the firing line. No extra charge was made for this picture, which is alone worth the price of admission, while "Spitfire" is worth double the price. The management are to be congratulated on the high standard of pictures that have crowned their efforts to elevate the standard of pictures heretofore shown, and the public should patronize them.

The educational plays that are being shown are of the best stamp to broaden not only a child's knowledge, but also the adults. This programme will be continued until Wednesday evening only, and every person that can conveniently go should do so.

O'Brien's Death The Result, etc.

and afterwards left him at the Grand Hotel. Later he drove out to Stewart's farm. He could not recall the time he left town. He returned to the city about noon on Christmas Day.

Medical Testimony.

Dr. Galavin recalled the visit that he made to the White House on the evening of the 24th. When he arrived he found deceased lying on the floor. He tried artificial respiration, but to no avail. He made a post mortem examination on the following day in company with Dr. Eastwood. The examination, which was made about sixteen hours after death, revealed a scar about three inches long on the neck. The heart cover was discoloured and the ventricles contained clotted blood. No signs of external violence were found.

The covering of the left lung was adherent to the covering of the heart. He ascribed that condition to a so-called cure of tuberculosis. It might have resulted from a case of pleurisy. He did not think that a blow would produce a clotting of the blood vessels of the heart. He also found a hemorrhage at the juncture of the spinal cord and the brain. This was sufficient to cause death. His conclusion might have resulted by [illegible] being spent at that particular point." The condition was sufficient to cause death in a very short time, as the location of the wound constituted a very important centre. There was a clot of blood in the brain.

To Dr. Greer witness said that a strain or struggle might cause a fatal effusion of blood on the brain. The blood was found at the base of the brain. It was located between the membrane and the brain. There was no evident laceration of the membrane. The brain tissue was very soft. This, he said, might have contributed to the rupture. He thought it was possible to deliver a blow sufficient to cause the hemorrhage without leaving any exterior evidence of violence. Death was practically instantaneous.

To Mr. Gordon, witness was unable to say how long the brain tissue had been in the friable condition that it was found at time of death. The tissue was so soft that it would tear during the course of removal. It was the worst case of its kind that he had ever experienced. A spasm of sudden anger might cause the blood to break through at the point where the tissue was weak. He was of the opinion that the softened condition of the tissue was due to disease. It would require the services of a pathologist to determine this. With the exception of the brain, the body was in a fairly healthy condition.

Some Form of Violence.

Dr. Eastwood, who assisted in the post mortem, corroborated the evidence submitted by Dr. Galavin. There was no external signs of violence. He would not expect a similar blow or pressure to have produced death of a normally healthy man. Witness was satisfied that some undue force produced the rupture immediately preceding death. Undue excitement would have a tendency to produce the result found. He was satisfied that the effect was due to some form of violence. He concurred in the opinion that the soft condition of the brain was predisposed to rupture. Deceased might have been a tubercular subject at some time.

Mr. Gordon—"If O'Brien grappled a man in a struggle, that might cause it?"

Dr. Eastwood—"Possibly."

Witness had never seen a brain tissue so friable. Dr. Eastwood said that the rupture was more liable to take place by reason of the softening of the brain tissue.

Have No Effect.

Coroner Dr. Greer in summing up the case, characterized it as the most serious case coming before him, since his appointment as coroner. The verdict of the jury would have no effect on subsequent proceedings, but might have a profound moral effect. He asked the jury to ascertain when, where and by what means the deceased came to his death. "We have no direct evidence that a blow was struck," said Dr. Greer. "We have evidence that there was a scuffle. You have the testimony of Mr. Graham. The evidence of the other witnesses is not very satisfactory. The absence of wounds or contusions about the head does not prove that a blow was not struck." In conclusion, Dr. Greer referred to the medical testimony.

The jury then retired to consider the evidence. They were out nearly one hour.

The jury was composed of the following: J. Metheral, D. Devins, Cunningham, Tom Cooley, Patrick Quinlan, F. Brownscombe, Bruce Robertson, I. G. Noble, Albert Weatherhead, Sid Middleton, Sam Baker, D. H. Kerneghan.

United States Protest The Interference With Commerce

Statement Intended for the Triple Entente But Applies Particularly to Great Britain--Feeling in U. S. Has Been Strongly Aroused.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—The United States Government to-day despatched a long note to Great Britain upon an early improvement in the treatment of American commerce by the British fleet. It intimated that much feeling had been aroused in this country, and that public criticism was general over unwarranted interference with the legitimate foreign trade of the United States.

The document, constituting the strongest representations on this subject made by the United States to any of the belligerents since the outbreak of the war, was called to Ambassador Page to be formally presented Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary. President Wilson himself revised its phraseology with minute care.

As the detailed point of view of the United States, in numerous specific cases of detentions and seizures of cargoes, had been set forth in a series of protests, most of which have gone unheeded, to-day's communication was couched in general terms covering the entire subject of the relations between the United States and Great Britain as affected by the latter's naval policy, considered highly objectionable by this Government.

Friendly But Frank.

The note declares at the outset that the representations are made in a friendly spirit, but that the United States considers it best to speak in terms of frankness, lest silence be construed as an acquiescence in a policy on the part of Great Britain which infringed the rights of American citizens under the laws of nations.

Applies to All Three Nations.

Since France has adopted practically the same decrees on contraband as has Great Britain, to-day's note is virtually a statement intended for all the members of the Triple Entente.

Feeling has been aroused on the subject to such an extent, the communication adds, that the American Government feels compelled to ask for definite information as to Great Britain's attitude, in order that it may take such measures as will protect American citizens in their rights.

Reference is made in the note to the high principles of equity which have actuated Great Britain in her championship in the past of the freedoom of the seas to neutral commerce, and the hope is expressed that even though a belligerent herself, she will realise the seriousness to the neutral of continued interference.

The position of the United States as expressed in to-day's note is a consequence of several steps by Great Britain, France and Germany on the subject of contraband.

EACH SOLDIER CARRIES A LITTLE FLASK OF ANTISEPTIC

Sir Frederick Treves' New Life for the British Forces, by Providing Saving Cartridges.

SOLDIERS' FIRST AID

LONDON, Dec. 28.—Every soldier in the allied armies, as well as those of Germany and Austria, carries some kind of field dressing in his pack. It was at one time said laughingly that each French infantryman had in his knapsack a triangular bandage and a field-mashal's baton. Until the beginning of this war his medical equipment was limited to the bandage, but when "the real thing" came along every man was supplied with a little glass flask of one of the most powerful antiseptics known—namely, tincture of iodine. Our own men were not. The value of immediate application of some such solution has been so apparent that Sir Frederick Treves and other surgeons expressed a desire that wounded English soldiers should also have the benefit of it.

Have Donors.

Iodine is not one of the drugs for which we are dependent on Germany. It is primarily a gift of the sea. It was first found in sea water, and later—in much greater concentration—in the ashes of seaweed, so Britain can command an unlimited supply, but the manufacture and purification are by no means cheap; the making of accurate solutions and storage in hundreds of thousands of ampullae (ampoules the French call them) need time and money.

It is therefore good to hear that Sir Frederick Treves, thanks to the generosity of two donors who desire to remain anonymous, has been able to provide all that is required. The War Office has given its full approval, and the British Red Cross and the St. John Ambulance Society have offered their services in distributing these miniature flasks, which may truly be described as life-saving cartridges. It is marvellous that the British army has been so free from tentanus (lockjaw). Perhaps in a little while they will be free from it altogether. Iodine is easy to carry, the "cartridges" neat, and a wounded man can instantly apply the fluid to his wound, or his neighbour can do it for him, then he will be safe, for a while at least, from the gangrene and the other horrors that kill men whose flesh is torn.

German Dressings Scarce.

Seeing the scientific skill that Germany has brought to bear on the war, it might have been expected that some such means would have been provided for our enemies' men. The German medical papers are naturally full of information, given by their army surgeons, and it is astonishing to find how prevalent tetanus has been. The Lancet published a digest of many German medical publications in its last week's issue, but they are for the most part too technical to be repeated or even summarized here. It may, however, be said that they are using anti-toxin and salvarsan in large quantities.

To economise dressings, which must be running short, in the German field hospitals, a substance called mastisol is being used instead of bandages. It is thick, gummy substance, and forms a film over a flesh wound just as collodion does on the small scale over a cut finger. Cotton-wool is getting as scarce as bandages, so roasted sawdust and peat moss are helping it out in the German base hospitals.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Complete quiet has been restored in the Philippine Islands, and no further outbreak is expected.

The total German losses in the war to date are two million dead, wounded and missing, according to a Berlin despatch to The Telegraaf, Amsterdam.

There are between 350 and 400 depositors in the Dominion Trust Co. in Winnipeg, and a movement is on foot to organize to protect their interests in the liquidation proceedings.

CONSULS MUST GET OUT.

Only Pro-German Representatives From U. S. Wanted In Belgium.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29—The German Government has formally notified the State Department that American consuls in Belgium must be acceptable to the German military authorities, and that it is desirable that some of the consuls be withdrawn for the present at least.

Secretary Bryan declined to make public the text of the German communication, or to comment upon it until he had had full opportunity to consider it. The understanding in official circles, however, is that the notice is similar to the one sent Argentina and other neutral countries, and that while the German Government does not insist that consuls in Belgium take out new exquatures from German officials, it announces that such consuls must exercise their functions only by permission from the military authorities in control of the territory in which the consulate is situated.

SHOULD TAKE TO COVER.

Londoners Warned To Keep Out of Danger If Airships Arrive.

LONDON, Dec. 29. — The London official bureau yesterday afternoon made the following announcement:

"The naval and military authorities call the attention of persons using the streets to the danger from fragments of shells from bullets from the guns used against hostile aircraft attempting to raid London.

"The civil population are warned to keep under cover preferably in basements on hearing the sound of firing by guns or of explosives."

From German Headquarters.

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 29. — (Via London.)—Comparative quiet reigned in Flanders on Christmas Day, but gunfire could be heard Saturday, beginning in the early morning, according to the Ghent correspondent of the Telegraaf. He says that the Germans have received further reinforcements, especially at Knesbe and Hoyst.

To Give Pay To Officers.

PETROGRAD, Dec. 29.—The Russian Government has decided to make extra allowances to engineer officers at the following rate: Generals, 2250 a year; staff officers, 2450; all other officers, 1200.

SANTA CLAUS AT ST. GEORGE'S

Christmas Entertainment to the Sunday School Scholars of the South Peterborough Anglican Church

If sounds of joyous merriment and laughter—real laughter, mind ye!—are to be taken as a criterion of happiness, then commend me to the superlatively happy gathering that it was this scribe's pleasure to visit last evening.

There was pure, real, undiluted joy in the gathering in the Sunday school of St. George's church in South Peterborough—which had been prettily decorated for the occasion, where upwards of seventy children—to say nothing of their parents, friends, well wishers and officials were congregated, the occasion being the distribution of gifts from a big Christmas tree, which distribution was made by Santa Claus himself, or at least by a colourable imitation of the presiding deity of Christmas gifts.

The proceedings commenced somewhere around seven o'clock by the singing of the National Anthem, "God Save the King," which was chorussed by away over a hundred voices, each putting the whole of his or her heart and soul into the words. For the sons and daughters of St. George (of England) are remarkably patriotic.

The programme was impromptu, the various performers either responding to calls or volunteering. Among other items, Miss Gladys Jay gave a recitation in very good style. This little lady, who is quite young, should with practice, become a good elocutionist. Willis Cutts, quite a small boy—in character—made a hit as "Poor Blind Joe." Little Blanche Cole, a fair-haired tot, sang a little song very prettily. Rena Howarth sang and recited well. The Misses Cole shone in a piano-forte duet, evoking much applause. Willis Cutts also sang the time-honoured "Who Killed Cock Robin?" (in which the audience joined as regarded the chorus) "cum multis aliis quae nunc perscribere longum est," as the Latin writer says, and which being freely rendered into English would mean that the mention of all would nearly fill a column of "The Examiner."

Then came Father Christmas, or Santa Claus, whichever the name of the respectable old gentleman may be. He was represented by Mr. A. Jubb, and very well the welcome visitor acquitted himself. He, assisted by Mrs. and Miss Price, distributed gifts all round; and joy, delight, happiness, were depicted on the faces of the recipients. For the pretty girls, too, his reverence had a kiss—even without the mistletoe.

Mr. Price, the Rector, kept the pot of fun bubbling by his numerous anecdotes. He has a big stock at command, suitable for all and every occasion.

Towards the end of the proceedings, Mr. Price called on Mr. F. Russell, as a staunch supporter of St. Georges', to make a speech. He accordingly made a few suitable, seasonable remarks. Then agnes, such as ring-a-ring of roses, tug-of-war, and various other sports took their place until the time for the saying of farewells and the homeward plodding of the weary way on a bright, pleasant winter's night.

Such were the contagious effects of joy that the Examiner representative, who went to the meeting feeling somewhat heavy at heart—as middle-aged bachelors are at times apt to be—came away feeling a wiser and a happier man.

RUSSIANS HAVE 13 DAYS TO DO XMAS SHOPPING

PETROGRAD, Dec. 29, via London.—While all the western world was celebrating Christmas, the Russian went blandly about his business, still having 13 days in which to do his Christmas shopping. This is due to the Julian calendar, which sets back Russia three nearly a fortnight behind the rest of Christendom. The Christmas feasting of former years, the animated street and cafe life which customarily turned the holiday season into a carnival lasting well on toward the new year, will be lacking. It was Petrograd's first Christmas without vodka.

Families broken up by the fortunes of war are unable to re-unite on the one occasion which usually brought homeward the absent members.

Most foreigners who have resided for a long time in this country, have fallen into the custom of observing the Russian holiday. Hence for them the Christmas season is just getting under way.

Among the few celebrations was the dinner given to the Russian wounded at the new American hospital by Mrs. George T. Marye, Jr., wife of the American ambassador. Most of the patients are only slightly wounded and consequently were able to gather at the table to partake of the good cheer provided by the Americans.

The only official observance of the day was a staff dinner by the British ambassador, Sir George Buchanan.

There was a suggestion of Christmas in the air which was keen, and most of those who could afford it [illegible] the traditional Russian winter in the unfrozen river Neva and the comparatively mild weather.

The rather feeble Christmas spirit which did prevail was overshadowed by the spectre of war. In very large open space were gathered detachments of the new army levies. The recruits, clad in heavy fur caps and long sand coloured overcoats practiced war manoeuvres.

1915 Issue of Auto Licenses

The Ontario automobile license plates for 1915 are a light gray with royal blue figures and make a very pleasant change from the sombre pinkish-brown plates which have decorated the cars this year. Twenty-five thousand of these plates are now in stock at the provincial secretary's department, and all is ready for the rush for licenses immediately after the New Year. If the attractiveness of the license plates counts for anything there should be a great run for the new blue and gray. A motorist could hardly be blamed for delay in securing his 1914 plates. Their colour spoiled the appearance of many a car. Motorists have received no official notification of an increase in the license fee, and The Canadian Motorist says it will remain at $4 for 1915.

First Methodist Boys' Conference In Canada

Now In Progress At The George Street Church—Two Hundred Delegates And Prominent Speakers —This Mornings Session

LIST OF DELEGATES

The first Methodist Boys' Conference in Canada was opened in the George Street church last night, and the session will continue to-day and to-morrow. In the neighbourhood of two hundred young men from every quarter of the Bay of Quinte conference are in the city to-day, taking part in the convention.

The homes of the Methodists of Peterborough have been thrown open to the young visitors, the great majority of whom are between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five, and the task of the billeting committee, while a large and exacting one, was in a sense a pleasant duty owing to the desire of the people of this city to accommodate the young men for the few days they will be in the city.

Yesterday morning, afternoon and evening the trains to the city were met by local young Methodists and the visiting delegates were directed to the church. At the George Street church they were assigned to their billets and were guided in parties to their temporary homes.

Yesterday evening the young men were banqueted in the school room of the church. Last night the sessions were opened with a public meeting at which His Honour Judge Huycke, Rev. S. T. Bartlett, and the Rev. C. W. Bishop were the speakers. This morning the programme was switched, and the subjects set aside for to-morrow morning were discussed, so that to-morrow morning addresses will be given by Mr. Taylor Statten and the Rev. F. L. Farewell. This morning the question of organized Bible classes was discussed and a demonstration given by a local class. The programme this afternoon included a visit to Peterborough institutions. Some local factories will receive the young men and they will be shown as well, some of the other points of interest in the city. To-night at eight o'clock an address will be given by the Rev. J. H. Arnup, B.A., Assistant Secretary of Foreign Missions.

This Morning.

At this morning's session Mr. Carson's organized Bible class of the George Street Sunday school gave a demonstration of an ordinary session of his class. The took up a regular Sunday school lesson and proceeded with [illegible] as an example of how an organized class is conducted.

The Rev. F. L. Farewell, B.A., Associate Secretary of Epworth Leagues and Sunday schools, was the first speaker this morning.

In opening he said that the "life line" of a person might be divided into two general parts. From one to twenty-five years of age was the period of preparation, and from twenty-five years of age on was a space of achievement. Up till twelve years of age the boy was not much of a problem to himself, to the house or to the community. Then followed a period of two or three years which might be called the upheaval period, and then the "reconstruction period" from 16 to 17 years of age, when reason begins to hold sway, instead of impulse and emotion in a young man's life. From 20 to 25 years was a "getting away" period, and from 25 years on his powers and potentialities were at the maximum. After that point a man should be living his best and largest four-fold life. The question was how to develop and train the great power and possibilities of the young man. Up till twelve years of age the young boy lived a largely selfish life, which was only natural, and not in any way sinful or deplorable. But although a fellow at 12 years of age thinks largely of himself, when he becomes 25 years of age the normal boy thinks very little of himself and very much about others. At twelve the young fellows commenced to group and form "gangs," but they soon grew out of the gang spirit, until at twenty or twenty-two years of age they get the world vision and are ready to serve Christ in any part of the earth. And with every extending relationship there comes a corresponding increase in obligation. To meet this obligation organization was necessary, and first of all a fellow must organize himself. Everybody who is doing work is organized.

So to-day there is the challenge to every young fellow over 12 years of age to organize Bible classes and make his life count for good in the Sunday school and the community.

In the organization of a Bible class entered the principal of self government. The officers included a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, and of course a teacher. The more an organized class could look out upon the need of other bodies and individuals and tried to help them, the more effective would be their work. Then there were the various committees—social, membership, athletic, Belgian Fund, etc. It was advisable for the class to have a Sunday session and a mid-week session. The speaker suggested the following programme for the Sunday session of the organized classes:

1. Opening exercises.
2. Study period (at least 30 minutes.)
3. Special feature.
4. Announcements and business.
5. Closing exercises.

At the monthly business meeting, forming a third session, the classes' business should be attended to as a form of programme presented.

Mr. Taylor Statten said that these are the times when successful businessmen study efficiency methods. Efficiency experts were in demand all over the country. We all wish to be strong, efficient men, men of power and personality, who can do things and are worth while. As a fellow grows older his character becomes stiffer and the impressions he gets are lasting impressions.

The boys were in the city for the business of building and developing character. The man in the business of building anything whatsoever, first must have a father to go by and copy from. The raising of boys to become the biggest, strongest and most useful man had been died and was being reduced to a business.

So in looking for a pattern we must go away back through the ages to God's revelation of Christ, as the perfect man. It had been said that little of Christ's boyhood life had been recorded, but in the speaker's opinion the record of Christ's boyhood was one of the most marvelous things of the Bible. It made a complete pattern quite sufficient to build the boy of the 20th century upon. The words were, "And Jesus increased in wisdom and in stature and in favour with God and man."

As a boy he increased in stature. He was not a giant, over-developed with muscle, but had a well set-up body. He had the physical strength to think for days over a problem without eating, and that he was adequate physically was shown by the manner in which he drove the "church grafters" from the synagogue.

But a young man must not only have complete control of his body, but must seek to know and do the will of God. So a fellow might spend a lot of time in growing "lopsided"—developing one side of his life which had been already fully developed, and neglecting other phases of his existence which needed very much attention. And it was the duty of the young man of the Sunday school not only to develop in favour with God, but to see that the other fellows also measured up to the four-fold standard of wisdom, stature and favour with God and man.

The delegates to the conference are as follows:

Stanley Spofford, Trenton, J. M. Carl, Archie Greatrix, Rev. Mr. Robeson, Harry Sine, Shannonville, Frank Jeffery, Edward Bashall, Belleville, Thos. Armistead, Mountain View, E. F. Brenton, Chas. E. CANDIDATES WHO HAVE QUALIFIED

Municipal candidates who had qualified up until 2.30 this afternoon were Mayor Buller, Ald. F. H. Dobbin, Ald. G. W. Green, Ald. Wm. Langford, George Evans, John Edgar and T. F. Matthews. It will be noted that one candidate qualified in each ward. The remaining candidates have until 9 o'clock this evening in which to file a declaration of their intention to stand for election and also to produce evidence of the required property and other qualifications. If half a dozen candidates troop into the City Clerk's Office at a few minutes to 9, there is bound to be some disappointments, as it is next to impossible to file all the declarations at the last minute.

The candidates for the Board of Education have up until the same hour to resign. There are seven candidates nominated and four to be elected.

Petes Open The Season With A Win Over Bowmanville Team

Defeated Visitors Last Night by 10 to 8 in a Rugged Game in Which Both Teams Showed Lack of Practice—The Homesters Were Ahead Nearly All the Way.

THE PUNCH LACKING

The Peterborough Intermediates opened the season auspiciously last night when they defeated Bowmanville by 10 to 8, in the initial O. H. A. game, leading at the end of the first period by 4 to 2, and at the second 9 to . A good crowd saw an exciting, but loosely played game. The teams showed lack of practice as far as team work was concerned, but they hit a pretty rapid clip for so early in the season and the play did not lag much.

Going on last year's showing the fans looked for an easy win over Bowmanville. In one sense it was an easy win as the Petes were always ahead after the first few minutes of play, but the visitors stuck to their guns manfully and gave the home brigade little chance to stop and admire the new lights.

The chief weakness in the work of the Petes last night was that they lacked the final punch when in close o nthe nets. This may sound strange in view of the big score they annexed, but they lost at least that many more by weak or wild shooting and careless passing when a score seemed certain. They had the speed and stick handling and showed a tendency towards combination that was lacking last year A few practices to round off the rough corners of the attack will make them look like a different team. They showed enough last night to indicate the material is there, and while many golden opportunities were thrown away they slammed in enough to nail the bacon and open the season with a win.

Janes made some nice stops in the nets for the Petes, but was unusually slow in clearing, lack of practice being undoubtedly responsible. Hunter and Pethick both checked and rushed well. On the forward line, Kelly was probably the most effective, his shooting being splendid. The switching of Park to rover and Halpin to centre seemed to bother both players. For Bowmanville, Higginbotham was the pick, doing some fine work on the attack. Spry played a nice game in the flags, and both Williams were good.

Bowmanville		Peterborough
	Goal
Spry		Janes
	Right Defence
Jones		Hunter
	Left Defence
F. Williams		Pethick
	Rover
B. Williams		Park
	Centre
Greenfield		Halpin
	Right Wing
Higginbotham		Kenneally
	Left Wing
Hooper		Kelly

The Petes lost a couple of chances right off the reel. Just after play opened Hunter walked inside on a nice rush, but shot over the top of the nets. Then Halpin had a chance but lost it, and Pethick missed the net altogether when he got through on a combination rush. Higginbotham drew a penalty, but with the odd-man advantage the Petes could not score. Bowmanville began to come on and gave Janes a couple of long-distance shots to handle. One of these from Hooper struck the goal post and before Janes could clear B. Williams swiped it into the nets and the canary shirts were ahead.

The one-goal lead did not last long for one minute after Kelly scooped a neat goal from the side, past Spry, and honours were even.

Three minutes after Pethick pushed one into the net in a scrimmage following a combined rush and the Petes were out in front. Park made it 3 to 1 in thirty seconds, after a passing rush, and Halpin notched another on a dash with Park. Hunter drew a penalty for holding, and while he was off Higginbotham banged in a counter from a scrimmage. The score remained unchanged to the end of the period.

Bowmanville closed the gap early in the second period when the puck drifted out to Hooper from a mix-up and the Bowmanville left wing lobbed an easy shot past Janes. Kelly got his mate in 2 minutes on a beautiful shot from the side, the puck catching the top corner of the nets from a difficult angle. F. Williams slashed Hunter as the latter was tearing in with the puck, and Lou Marsh gave him a five-minute penalty. While he was off Pethick started a side rush and passed to Kelly who circled the visitors' rear guard and scooped a neat counter into the twine, making it 4 to 3. Greenfield got one back in two minutes, from a mix-up, but the Petes came through with another, Park scoring with a neat shot. Pethick and Hooper drew three minutes for mixing it and were almost immediately followed by Hunter for checking, and Higginbotham for hooking, leaving the teams five a side. No scoring resulted while the penalty box was occupied. Kenneally was sick and had to retire until the end of the period. Bowmanville dropping Greenfield. F. Williams made the figures 7 to 5 when he scored on a neat rush. A long shot by Hunter from outside the defence drifted by Spry and the score was 8 to 5. Jones was hit with the puck and had to retire for repairs, but resumed after a delay. There was only a short time left to play in the period but it was long enough for the Petes to score again, Halpin slamming in a rebound on a shot by Park.

Kenneally and Greenfield were back when the third period opened. Shortly after play was commenced Hooper had his arm hurt by a fall into the fence, but declined to quit the game. A little while later F. Williams was accidentally hooked in the face by Keneally and retired for the balance of the game, Park being dropped with him. Kenneally got five minutes, but the affair was clearly an accident. The Petes were the first to score in the priod, Kelly finding the nets on a pass from Hunter. Higginbotham tore off one of the best individual plays of the night when he went the length of the rink, single handed, for a goal in two minutes.

Bowmanville were showing flashes of combination at this stage and scored two pretty goals in succession. Jones goth the first after a passing run and then Hooper and Williams combined neatly, the former scoring.

Only two goals ahead the Petes woke up and gave Spry a busy five minutes to wind up with. He made a lot of pretty stops and the score remained unaltered until the finish. The homesters found the nets twice but both times Referee Marsh called the play off-side, and the figures remained the same.

HOCKEY GOSSIP

The new magnetite lights in Brock St. Rink last night made a hit with the fans and players.

The Peters' new uniforms did not arrive in time for the game and the homesters turned out with a nondescript array of blue and white sweaters.

The Bowmanville team had a canary-coloured sweater that was novel to say the least.

Higginbotham, the visitors' right wing, was one of the fastest men on the ice, doing some fine rushing.

Spry, the Bowmanville goaler, lived up to his name. He made a lot of fine stops at close quarters.

The only objection to the three periods of play is the wait between. It is up to the referees to get the players out on time.

There will be no junior practice tonight, as the rink is engaged, but the juniors will be out to-morrow night at 7 o'clock, and every player should be out sharp on time.

Leo Derocher, of Ottawa, will play goal for the Old Boys against the Juniors on Thursday night.

Last night's game was not a rough one, but at that the game was stopped several times for repairs to players.

Hooper, the Bowmanville life wing, is the best inside home player seen here in a long time. However, he got away with his loafing all night, and it is a grand old game when you get by with it.

'Lou Marsh is not Irvin Cobb when it comes to seeing things. If Lou had been with the German army instead of Cobb, the world would have missed a lot of the details of the German system. At that the well-known sporting writer preserved his neutrality in last night's game.

It looked funny to see Leo Derocher behind the nets instead of in front last night. The former local goalkeeper acted as umpire.

The next intermediate O.H.A. game is at Picton on Tuesday night. The Canners tied a can to Belleville in the Bay of Quinte capital last night which makes them look quite some team. Beating Belleville at home is about as hard as the road to Calais.

The Juniors play their first O.H.A. game here on Monday night with Port Hope. The Ontarios' have a speedy little team this year as their victory in Bowmanville a night or two ago in an exhibition game will demonstrate,

Morrow, of the local Juniors, is visiting friends in Toronto until after New Years, and will be an absentee from this week's practices.

The Petes showed good combination last night. The attack needs some brushing up, however, the work when in close being very ragged.

Hunter and Pethick are a steady and reliable defence, who will show a good deal better when they get some assistance from the forward line. The back-checking last night was very spasmodic. The last two goals Bowmanville scored, they came down three abreast with not a blue shirt forward back with them.

Kenneally, in addition to the handicap of being on his wrong wing, had a sore hand to contend with, while he has had practically no practice. Kelly, too, has been under the doctor's care all week. Kelly's shooting last night was a feature. Several of his goals were on beautiful shots.

With Derocher, Cavanah and Matthews as a defence, the Old Boys will have some rear guard against the Juniors on Thursday night.

No Junior player should miss a practice this week. All the squad will get a chance in Thursday's game, after which the line-up will be selected for Monday's battle with Port Hope.

The following letter is self-explanatory:

December 28th, 1914.

Sporting Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—We would like to see you push the City League all you can, as it picks out any good players for years to come. Try and get the City League going if you can, and it will give some of your juniors plenty of practice also.

P.C.C. RUGBY CLUB ANNUAL DANCE

Enjoyable Social Affair at Conservatory Hall Last Evening

The annual dance of the Collegiate Rugby Club was held last evening in the Conservatory Hall, a large number of young people being present. The hall looked exceedingly attractive, the walls being profusely decorated with pennants and flags. Splendid music was provided by Mr. Asa Huycke's orchestra, and at midnight dainty refreshments were served, Hooper catering. The patronesses were Mesdames E. C. Huycke, C. E. Jamieson, V. Eastwood, R. Gliddon, W. H. Hill, A. H. Stratton, D. Hall and W. R. Morris.

Mr. Harold Knapman was honorary secretary, and the committee who ably carried to a successful conclusion the various arrangements for the affair, consisted of Messrs A. Austin, J. Common, H. Dixon, V. Eastwood, F. Hooper and H. Knapman.

HOCKEY GOSSIP.

All members of St. John's senior and junior hockey teams are requested to attend practice this evening at 7 o'clock at Parker's Rink, Charlotte Street. It is imperative that all players be on hand as the teams will be picked after this work-out.

BIG TEMPERANCE MOVE IN FRENCH CHAMBER

Cafe Owners Promising not to Sell Liquors Will be Free From Taxation.

PARIS, Dec. 28. — Proprietors of cafes who give an undertaking to sell no spirituous liquors will be exempted from license dues after January 1st.

The Chamber of Deputies to-day voted to exempt all cafes, despite the opposition of the Government and the Budget Committee of the Chamber, who consider the measure constituted a bounty to liquor sellers, whose excessive numbers the Government is striving to decrease, and a direct encouragement to drunkenness. The exemption, in addition, it is pointed out, will represent a loss to the Treasury of 37,000,000 francs ($7,400,000).

The Senate took the Government's view and refused to ratify the measure. Finally a compromise was reached by the two Houses, whereby only the sellers of beer, wine, cider [illegible] beverages continue under the exemption clause.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—Heavy profit-taking by large holders, including a widely known speculator, gave the wheat market today a sharp setback after a decided advance. The selling was influenced to some extent by fear that Argentine offerings would cut considerable figure in the near future. The market closed unsettled at a decline of 1¼c to 1⅝c net. Corn finished ⅛c to ⅜c off, oats down ⅛c to ⅜c, and provisions unchanged to a drop of 2½c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 28.—A lack of demand caused a sharp break in grain prices today, following a strong opening. In the south there was considerable unloading, and few were inclined to take up, and values dropped, Winnipeg following in sympathy. Early buyers were sellers later. There were few offerings of cash and few buyers.

Export enquiry continues good. Total inspections on Saturday were 813 cars, as against 474 last year, and in sight on Monday were 350 cars.

Winnipeg wheat futures closed ⅛c to ⅜c lower, cash closed ⅜c lower for contract grades, oats closed ⅛c lower, and flax 4⅛c to 4⅝c lower.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Dec. 28.—There was no improvement in the demand from over the cable for Manitoba spring wheat today and business in consequence was quiet, but the demand from local buyers for car lots was better than it has been of late.

The foreign demand for spring wheat flour was fair at a further advance in prices of 2d per sack in some cases, but owing to the limited amount of ocean space available only a few orders could be accepted by millers. The local trade continues quiet, but the undertone of the market is strong and higher prices are expected soon. Demand for millfeed is fairly good.

A fair trade was done in butter, and the feeling is strong. Cheese is quiet. Eggs fairly active and firm.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 28.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.26⅛; No. 1 northern, $1.23⅝ to $1.25⅝; No. 2 do., $1.19⅝ to $1.23⅝; Dec., $1.21⅝.

Corn—No. 2 yellow, 63¼c to 64c.

Oats—No. 3 white, 47c to 47½c.

Flour—Fancy patents, $5.40; first clears, $5.10; second clears, $4.25.

Bran—Unchanged.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Dec. 28.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 237 cattle and 423 hogs.

Trade in cattle was about steady at last Thursday's quotations.

The bulk of the hogs were from the northwest and were for feeding purposes, selling around $6.50 per cwt.

Rice & Whaley sold 5 carloads on Monday; Four carloads of canners at $4 to $4.15; 1 load of butchers' heifers at $7.35.

Dunn & Levack sold:

Canners—27, 910 lbs., at $4.15; 14, 640 lbs., at $4.05; 21, 910 lbs., at $4.10.

Bulls—1, 1340 lbs., at $6.25.

Cows—9, 830 lbs., at $6; 2, 850 lbs., at $5.75; 2, 1360 lbs., at $6.

Lambs sold at $7.90 to $8.35.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Dec. 28.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, prices were slightly lower owing to the fact that butchers bought sparingly as they carried over considerable stock from the holidays. Packers bought freely of canning stock and a fair trade was done in this line at steady prices with sales of cows at $4 to $4.25, and bulls at $4.75 to $5 per cwt.

The excitement which prevailed in the market for lambs last week on account of the keen competition between local buyers has abated considerably, and in consequence the market today was quieter with an easier undertone and prices declined 25c per cwt. There was some demand for small lots and sales of Ontario stock were made at $8 to $8.25, and Quebec at $7.50 to $7.75 per cwt.

Sheep were unchanged with demand limited. Hogs were firmer, there being a good demand for supplies, which were small and sales of selected lots were made at $8, fows at $6 and stags at $4 per hundred pounds weighed off cars. A few loads of northwest hogs were on the market, and sold at $7.75 per cwt. as compared with $7 to $7.50 last week.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.50 to $7.75; do., medium, $6.50 to $7; do., common, $5 to $6; canners, $4 to $5; butchers' cattle, choice cows, $6.25 to $6.50; do., medium, $5.50 to $6; do., bulls, $5.25 to $6.50; milkers, choice, each, $70 to $75; do., common and medium, each, $40 to $60; springers, $50 to $65.

Sheep, ewes, $5 to $6.25; bucks and culls, $4.50 to $4.75. Lambs, $7.50 to $8.35.

JUNIORS VS. INTERMEDIATES

The local Intermediates and Juniors will play a practice game to-morrow, Wednesday night, at 7 o'clock. All players on both squads are expected out sharp on time.

APPEAL TO SOCIALISTS.

German Humanity League Condemns Prussian Militarism.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—The Morning Post has received from, Herr Karl Bernstein who writes from Rotterdam, a translation of a New Year's appeal to be issued to the Socialists in Europe and America by the committee of German Humanity League.

After reciting German outrages the appeal concludes:—

"We knew from authentic intelligence which reaches us that the restless indignant and deceived democracy now undergoing privations and nursing its grief cannot be restrained by force from making an active protest and we most earnestly appeal to every comrade who cares for maintenance of international obligations to strive his utmost to crush and sweep away forever the domination of Prussian militarism within Germany, which by its conspiracy against humanity has disgraced and humiliated our nation in the eyes of the civilized world."

The appeal is signed by Karl Bernstein, Jacob Hanseladorf, Emil Gott, Conrad Schwahn, Gustave Oebse, Ernest Schuster, Franz Gaussen, Albrecht Setter and is dated at Rotterdam, Dec. 29, 1914.

Courage of Wounded.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 29.—"This is entirely a shell and shrapnel war—bullet and bayonet wounds are rare," writes Lieut. Dr. J. Cameron Wilson, of this city, who is attached to the headquarters of the British Red Cross at Boulogne. Dr. Wilson adds that a surprising number of his patients have frozen feet, and that the grit and courage of the wounded is wonderful. The writer speaks of a 15-year-old bugler whose feet was frozen and who was "chock full of shrapnel."

FAMOUS FOOTBALL PLAYER LOSES LEGS

DUNKIRK, Dec. 28.—Jean Caujolle, famous French international football player and track athlete, who was mentioned early in the year for a charge which won him the military medal, is in a field hospital with both legs amputated. The bones were shattered by a shell.

When Caujolle recovered consciousness and learned the extent of his wounds he dictated a letter to his superior officer, asking that he be sent back to the front as a typist.

Caujolle was adjudged last year by several English critics to be the finest football back in Europe.

TURKS ARE SEDITIOUS.

Strong Movement in Under Way to Rise Against Germans.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29.—A London Daily Express despatch from Athens to The Herald says:

There is every indication that a storm is gathering in the interior of Turkey. The police have seized thousands of proclamations in the barracks in Constantinople, calling on all true Turks to rise against the Germans and the committee of union and progress, in order to save Turkey, "because the enemy is at her gates."

Consternation is widespread in the governing circles in Turkey, and there is general dissatisfaction over the lack of military successes. It is feared the Sultan cannot be trusted and Enver Pasha and Field Marshal Von der Goltz have prepared the way for drastic changes. Talaat Bey's party is working in the direction of proposing peace on the basis of maintaining the status quo. This neutrality is not acceptable to many of the Turkish people.

Sunk By Mines.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—Several disasters, the result of striking mines in the North Sea, are reported. Among those sunk were the steamer Linaria, whose crew was rescued, and a Glasgow steamer. The Linaria, which belonged to the Stag Line of North Shields. She was built in 1911.

Hangar and Aircraft Destroyed.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—The Times declares that there is excellent reason, despite German denials, for believing that Farman shed and aircraft was destroyed in the British raid on Cuxhaven. It adds that serious damage also was inflicted on the Zeppelin wheels.

HEWLETT PICKED UP?

British Aviator Now Reported to Have Been Captured by Germans.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—The British aerial raid on Cuxhaven may prove to have been without loss of life to the British.

According to a despatch published by The Daily Sketch, Flight Commander Francis Hawkeh, whose aeroplane was wrecked, the commander himself being reported missing when the Zepts and their convoy returned, is now reported to have been saved.

It is believed that the daring naval flyer was picked up by a German warship, and that he is now a prisoner of war.

The only damage the British expedition sustained was the loss of several hydroplanes, costing $15,000, and the loss of life was Commander Hewlett.

The Press Gang.

The press gang was an institution which flourished in Great Britain in the olden times when impressment was the mode resorted to for manning the navy. The practice, which had not only the sanction of custom, but the force of law, consisted in seizing by force, for service in the royal navy, sailors, river watermen, and at time landsmen. The press gang, an armed party of reliable men commanded by officers, usually preceded to such towns as were supposed to be the resort of the sea-faring population, laid violent hands on all eligible men, and conveyed them forcibly to the ships of war in the harbor. Mitigations of the harsh laws on the subject were frequently introduced. As early as 1662 the naval authorities had to secure the sanction of the local justices of the peace; in 1835 the term of an impressed man's service was limited to five years save in urgent national necessity. By that time the system was becoming obsolete, and now the navy is manned by voluntary service. But the laws sanctioning impressment are in abeyance, without being repealed.

Valuable Sporadic.

In the matter of swords it is said that the Chelsea of Shanda possesses the most precious blade in existence. Its hilt and belt are encrusted with diamonds, rubies, sapphires, and emeralds and its value has been put at $3,000,000.

There are many costly swords in the treasure-rooms of Eastern and European rulers, notably those of the Czar of Russia, the Sultan of Turkey, and the King of Spain, but the sword of the Shahpur outshines them all. The most valuable sword in Europe is that presented by Napoleon to Lord Wellesley. The hilt is set with brilliants and the scabbard is said to be encased in 50 worth diamonds.

Few Changes Have Occurred In Standing of the Clubs

At the end of the Christmas holiday period scarcely any perceptible change has taken place in the standing of the leading clubs. The most notable incident of any one club performing anything out of the ordinary, however, has been supplied by Birmingham on the Second Division of the English League, who now stand a very creditable third to Huddersfield with a total of 24 points for 19 games. Derby County are the leaders with 29 points and Huddersfield second with 26 points, all three clubs having played the same number of games. In the role of leaders the merry footed men of the peak shire have shown an admirable consistency, which, if they can only keep up should make them a very formidable foe in the cup ties later on, as the men of the Midland Railway centre possess quite a distinguished record in the national cup competitions. Thrice have they appeared in the role of finalists, and as many times been vanquished. Two years in succession, 1897-8, 1898-9, they battled in the grand final at the Crystal Palace, and on the first occasion were vanquished by the Foresters of Notts by 3-1, while the year following the United blades of Sheffield defeated them 4-1, which occurred at a period when the great and only Stephen Bloomer was in his youth, who, singular to say, never gained a winner's medal. Mention of his name at this period reminds one that he is one of a number of Britishers interned in Germany, who, when all is over, should have an inexhaustible fund of good reading matter for publication. In reverting back to Derby's performances in the cup tourney they appeared in the role of finalists was in 1902-3, when Bury swamped them by six clear goals. On several other occasions they worked so far as the semi-final stage, so that it will be seen they have at one time or another been a big force to reckon with in the competition which supplies one with the knowledge that in case they keep up their present form they may easily become a very pronounced quantity once again in this year's tournament.

The Trotters of Bolton were accredited with seven goals at the expense of Aston Villa on the latter's own enclosure, and for a team of the Villa's calibre, who only made reply with one single tally to be beaten so decisively on their own pitch, supplies one of those inexplicable reversals of holiday form—unless the ranks of the famous Birmingham contingent has been thinned by some of its players enlisting—that makes it hard to understand. But results of a like nature are continually cropping up, and in reality are the very salt and flavour of the game.

Partick Thistle were the highest scorers, who with five connts to their credit, prevented Queen's from finding the net.

Morton were again in the ascendant and in giving Ayr United their quietus with a margin of three clear goals, can be accounted as a combination who might be capable yet of wrecking many fond hopes and cherished ambitions. Though they be only a poor third to Hearts and Celtic, they have the satisfaction of being above the Rangers, and can be always labelled as dangerous.

Constantinople To Be Attacked By The Franco-British

ATHENS, Dec. 29. — France and England have made preparations to occupy Constantinople, it was learned here to-day.

A fleet of transports bearing a big allied army has been assembled with the fleet off the western entrance of the Dardeneas.

The French and British warships are preparing to launch another severe attack upon the Turkish forts in a supreme effort to force a passage.

The chief reason for this great attack, it is said, is the necessity to supply fresh arms and ammunition to Russia.

Fourteen Warships Assembled.

Constantinople, Dec. 29. — There are at least fourteen British and French warships in the allied fleet off the western entrance of the Dardanelles.

Apprehension was caused here today by reports that the allied fleet is preparing for another terrific attack against the Turkish forts defending the waterway.

A statement was issued by Turkish headquarters urging the people to remain calm and giving assurances that there is no chance of the Dardanelles being forced on account of the strength of the Turkish forts.

Transports Crowded.

It is reported that a fleet of French and British transports has joined the warships, and that all are crowded with troops for the invasion of Turkish soil as soon as a landing can be effected.

THE RUSSIANS DEFEAT EVERY ATTACK

RUSSIANS PREPARING FOR ANOTHER GENERAL ADVANCE

Expect to Have Germans Back on Their Own Line of Defences Before the Russian New Year---Turks Are Maintaining a Stubborn Resistance and Russians Have to Use Bayonets Repeatedly.

ARTILLERY DUELS IN FRONT OF WARSAW

Special Cable:

PETROGRAD, Dec. 30.—Renewed successes in Caucasus in the Oltinik region and important movements in Warsaw which presage the driving back of the Austro-German forces beyond the frontier are reported here to-day.

The fighting in the Caucasus has resulted in the Russian occupancy of Merdenek near Sarykamysh where the Turkish trenches were carried after a series of bayonet charges in which the defending forces lost very heavily. Russian cavalry divisions are operating in the direction of Khorasan.

The Turkish defensive is stated to be very strongly maintained and there have been many encounters at close quarters in which Russian bayonets have been used to gain the advantage. The Turks are declared to be committing outrages against the native population of the villages in the territory through which they have moved, to have massacred thousands of men and women, and outraged and tortured all young girls.

To the north, in the territory to the west of Warsaw, where the Germans have been operating, the fighting is for the present chiefly in the nature of artillery duels at long range. The Germans have retired to the left bank of the Bzura, wher they are entrenching.

In general the situation is considered improving. The Russian forces are being prepared for another general advance which it is believed here will throw the enemy back on his own frontier line of defences, not later than the Russian new year, "January 13." ... ...

PETROGRAD, Dec. 29.—The following statement received from the Russian General Headquarters was issued this evening:

"To-day between the lower Vistula and the Pilica only fighting of small importance took place. The Germans left their trenches on the right bank of the Bzura, near the village of Mistrsevice, and fell back on the left bank of the Bzura.

"On the River Rawka our heavy artillery is fighting efficaciously a large number of German batteries of heavy guns.

"In the region of Bolimova our attacks have alternated with those of the Germans.

"We have dislodged the enemy from a trench near the village of Sumino, which they had taken from us previously, by a counter-attack, in which we captured machine-guns and prisoners.

"On the centre, between the Pilica and the upper Vistula, only cannonading was heard.

"During an attack on a German redoubt to the south of Inow Lodz we captured three machine-guns.

"Our troops met with success while crossing the lower Nida in taking by storm the villages of Barakowcele and Bodzechowice, which were well fortified. During the fighting we captured fifty Austrian officers and over 1,700 soldiers and three machine-guns.

"In western Galicia we have made progress in spite of the almost impassable condition of the country, due to mud. We have driven the enemy from the front of Stromnik-Sorlice, Jaslisko, taking guns and a large number of machine-guns.

"During the first half of December (old style calendar) we captured 50,000 Austrians."

BERLIN CLAIMS GAINS

Sayville Wireless Takes Issue With French Claims

Special to the Examiner:

BERLIN, Dec. 30, via wireless through Sayville—The official German War Office report dealing with the situation in the west and covering events up to yesterday, takes direct issue with the French claims of sweeping successes.. On the contrary it is claimed that the Germans were able to gain some ground both to the southeast of Ypres and around Nieuport before the weather conditions compelled the cessation of fighting.

Discussing the events on the eastern front, the War Office states that there has been no change in the situation along the Rawka-Bzura front. The Germans are making progress south of Lodz, but in general the situation is unchanged.

According to the official Press Bureau the talk of peace at the present time is without sanction of the Foreign Office, although it is pointed out that all neutrals are entitled by The Hague convention to make suggestions at any time.

WAR DEVELOPS PRINCESS MARY

Attends to Much Routine and is Ambitious to Qualify as Nurse

LONDON, Dec. 29—Not the least interesting of the events for which the war is directly responsible is the sudden development of Princess Mary from a school-girl little known outside the royal circle into a calm and dignified young woman. In the words of a prominent member of the household, "She has grown up in three months."

Though she has not yet made her formal debut at court—an event fixed provisionally for May next—the princess is now seen about quite frequently, usually accompanied by her governess, Mlle. Dussau. She has also travelled with the King and Queen to the various hospitals, where the wounded are lying, charming the sufferers therein by her unaffected manner and keen sympathy.

In Mourning for Prince.

To see her sitting at her writing table in Buckingham Palace in her simple dress of mourning for the late Prince Maurice of Battenberg, going through all the pile of papers in front of her, and writing countless letters, makes it almost impossible to realize that one is in the presence of the daughter of a king. She resembles rather a keen young woman of business who deals carefully and methodically with all that is placed before her.

Princess Mary now handles a considerable part of what may be termed the private correspondence of her royal mamma, though E. W. Wallingford, the Queen's private secretary, deals with the official correspondence.

Ambition to be Nurse.

It is also the princess' desire to qualify as a nurse and she has been taking lessons in the subject lately, her instructor having been enlisted by Queen Alexandra, who is the head of the military nursing service of this country. The princess takes the greatest interest in this work, and has made surprising progress since she began her course of instruction.

Before her formal debut at court, the Princess, it is planned, will go about a great deal with the Queen, and she is expected to be present at several of the more important social functions that may take place. For many years she has been her mother's almost constant companion. The likeness between them also seems to be increasing, and there are both at Buckingham Palace and York Cottage photographs of the Queen at 18 that would easily pass for her daughter to-day.

Prizes amounting to over $50,000 will be awarded.

Germans Suffer Enormous Losses On Russian Front

Sustained Attacks on Russian Offence Have Witnessed Awful Carnage But Every Assault Has Been Hurled Back--Austrians Get Blame of Failure.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Dec. 29.—The Morning Post correspondent at Petrograd telegraphs: The Grand Duke's report received at midnight was awaited with more than usual eagerness, but the main fact of the situation on the Russian front was not in the Grand Duke's report, for his Imperial Highness does not attempt any totalling of figures until he has completed his strategic plans. From another source, however, I learn that the main feature of the German-Austrian second invasion of Russia's cockpit, Poland, is the appalling losses which they incurred.

Reckoning the whole of the strategic front from the Baltic to the Carpathians, as far as the frontiers of Roumania, the losses sustained by the Germans and Austrians together have surpassed anything ever heard of in history. During the past three weeks the enemy's forces have suffered heavily in vain attempts to break through Russia's defence. The fighting on both sides has been of a most unprecedented character.

AWFUL CARNAGE.

For a fortnight there has been no rest, no intermission, but one hideous nightmare of wholesale slaughter that has terribly strained the nerves of even the most hardened trops. For seven days and nights consecutively the German waves have poured like a mighty tide upon the rock of Russian defence in a ceaseless sequence of attacks. For that week, and a week before, the guns never ceased their roar day and night. How the Germans kept it up we know in part. Their men were regularly doped with alcohol or drugs, and yet more horribly intoxicated with the lie that this was their last fight, that Warsaw was to be taken for comfortable winter quarters, and that the reserves would be dismissed to their homes. It has been their last fight in another sense, and the Russian rock still stands where it did. The German waves in their tireless sequence crashed on the rock immediately before them. Warsaw was yet very far off, though only a couple of marches away, for other rocks as stout were already in position if the first should crumble. Far out of reach of the sound of cannon, even beyond the ken of German aviators, behind Warsaw yet others still await their turn, near enough if needed, but not yet called into action.

SECOND INVASION A FAILURE.

The Germans have probably found their death in this second grandiose invasion of Poland, for one-eighth of their total forces are said to have perished in the past three weeks without effecting any part of their purpose, a loss more than even German militarism can long endure.

For forty-eight hours past there has been no serious fighting on the left bank of the Vistula front, but partial attacks have been made by the Germans and everywhere repulsed.

South-east of Skierniewice was the most serious attack, for here the Germans abandoned the attempts made at many points to force the passage across the rivers, and are now trying to drive their way through the region between the upper reaches of the Rawka and Pilica Rivers.

ENEMY LOSES HEAVILY.

They have had no approach to success and have lost more heavily there during the past forty-eight hours than in their other partial attacks. Between the Pilica and the upper reaches of the Vistula all attacks have ceased from the enemy's side, and it is now the Russians who have assumed an active offensive in this region. They have entirely cleared the left or eastern bank of the Nida River by the capture of the obstinately defended Austrian position at the village of Sultaiki, which was taken by storm. The process of brushing along the Austrians before them has, in fact, already begun on this section of the front. South of the Vistula, or astride it on the front from Opatow, across the Biala River to Biecz, the sweeping process has likewise begun in this region. Between December 19 and 26 the Russians took prisoners 200 officers and 16,000 men, and also 40 Maxims. Further south and east the condition of the Austrians is still more hopeless. The retirement of the forces covering the Dukla and adjacent passes, reported some days ago as begun, and again as having become a disorderly fight, has now spread as far east as the roads leading to Lisko, thirty miles away. The fight is assuming there and more a hasty and disorderly character. Of the 200th the Russians took here about 5,000 prisoners.

RUSSIAN PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

The concluding paragraph of the Grand Duke's report contains all important information. From the German point of view, which has gained an unaccountably ready acceptance in England, the invasion of Poland is the main feature of the Russian campaign. From the Russian point of view the second invasion, like the first, as a mere incident in the main strategic scheme, and is nothing more than a disagreeable interruption of a movement as inevitable as fate. Whatever the Germans and their friends may say, Galicia, Cracow and the line of the Odor defences still remain now, as three months ago, the principal feature of the Russian plan. It is therefore of supreme importance to note now that the enemy's scheme, which called for the transfer of troops from the Czestochowa front to the Carpathians, and was met by a counter-movement by the Russians, had by the 28th finally resulted in a decisive failure for the enemy.

GERMAN ADMISSIONS.

BERLIN, Dec. 29.—(Wireless via Sayville).—The following comment on the military situation was issued tonight by the Official Press Bureau:

"In view of the fact that previous reports from headquarters that operations were proceeding favourably generally have been followed eventually by reports of victories, one is justified in considering the situation in the east as promising a successful outcome for the Germans.

"It was reported some days ago that the Germans had occupied some points on the eastern bank of the Bzura, and inasmuch as no word has come of the abandonment of these positions the conclusion seems justified that all have been held, and that it is probable that other positions have been gained.

"The Russians have strengthened their forces opposing the Austrians in Galicia, and the latter, it is understood, will be compelled to make new dispositions, which will require some time. Local military experts are making attempts to picture Russia's occupation of the line of Krosno-Jaslo as being no real gain for the Russians, but, on the contrary, as weakening their position. This view, however, is considered too optimistic, and the fact must be faced that the extreme left wing of the Russians is proving itself superior to its opponents. The prompt action of the Russians in strengthening their forces there is due to their realisation of what an encircling of their flank in Galicia would signify."

HEARING OF SOLDIERS RUINED BY CANNON

LONDON, Dec. 29.—The announcement that the British Government is to appoint an emergency committee to consider measures for the prevention of gun-deafness among soldiers and sailors, calls attention to an added terror of war which has been much discussed recently in military and medical circles.

"The enemy may not deprive you of life or limb," writes a medical correspondent, "but it is fairly certain that your own artillery will slowly but surely make you deaf."

Several officers who recently returned on furlough from the French front, were called upon for examination and found to have suffered more than a fifty per cent. impairment in hearing, owing to the incessant ear-splitting reports of their own guns. The exact physiological reason was usually found in a rupture of the drum membrane, with occasionally a shattering or concussion of the aural labyrinth.

Both the French and American navies have made special provision for the prevention of gun deafness. The French have several ingenious artificial contrivances, while the Americans are said to use a blinker-like bandage of vulcanite rubber, with celluloid stoppers for the ear holes. The Japanese are also reported to have adopted mechanical contrivances which lessen the shock on the ear drum.

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

The horror of the whole system danced a grisly rigadoon of death across her throbbing eyeballs.

Through her head ran hideously lines of verse:

". . . But never came the day;
And crooked shapes of terror crouched,
In the corners where we lay:
And each evil sprite that walks by night
Before us seemed to play."

And in the face of such things these human beasts could sleep!

But one was not sleeping, and after a while among the snoring slumberers Good Anse Talbott rose and fell upon his knees before the hearth. There were still a few glowing embers there and as he bent and at last took the knotted hands away from his seamed face, a feeble light fell upon his features and upon the bare feet that twisted convulsively as he prayed.

It was a tortured face, and as the girl watched him she realized for the first time the significance of the words "to wrestle in prayer." It suddenly came to her that she had never before seen a man really pray, and for an hour the backwoods missionary knelt there pleading with his God for his unrepentant people.

Often his voice was only a groaning murmur out of which came no coherence, unless as it might be, that God could understand. But now and then she caught words and her own hands lying on the quilt folded themselves reverently.

". . . Oh, Lord I hev sought ter carry Thy gawspel ter these folk, but I reckon I hain't hardly no worthy vessel . . . my own hands hev been red with blood, but, Lord, I've done sought ter wash 'em clean an' dedicate them ter Thy sarvice . . . Lord Gawd, look down an' command me. . . . Show me . . . ther way ter tench 'em an' ter lead 'em up outen these shadders. . . . Lord Gawd, show me ther way!"

Outside a single whippoorwill wailed plaintively: "These poor hills! These poor hills!"

CHAPTER VIII.

In the lowlands morning announces itself with the rosy glow of dawn and upflung shafts of light, but here in the hills of Appalachia even the sun comes stealing with surreptitious caution and veiled face as if fearful of ambuscade.

When Juanita opened her eyes, to find the tumbled beds empty save for herself, she thought with a dismal heart that a day of rain and sodden skies lay ahead of her.

The dim room reeked with wet mists and an inquisitive young rooster stalked jauntily over the puncheon floor, where his footfalls sounded in tiny clicks. It was a few minutes after five o'clock and Juanita shivered a little with the clammy chill as she went over to the door and looked out.

The mountains were vague apparitions, though the sun should have risen an hour ago. The whole landscape was a dreary monotone, shrouded in wet streamers of mist that cut off the view and left only a grey void as if the world had dissolved over night.

Among piled up boulders where the thicket came down to the yard's edge stood a single tulip poplar. Its gnarled roots broke from the earth in smooth-worn elbows, and between them gushed the clear tongue of a mountain spring, breaking from underground and spilling into a basin of rock.

Bending over it in the unconscious grace of perfect naturalness, with her sleeves rolled back and her dark hair tumbling, knelt the girl, Dawn.

Juanita crossed the yard and as she came near, the younger girl raised a face still glistening with the cold water into which it had been plunged and glowing with shyness.

The older woman nodded with a smile as she, too, knelt to thrust her face into the sparkle of the natural fountain. "Good-morning," she said. "I think you and I are going to be great friends. I know we are if you will try to like me as much as I do you."

The wild, Dryad-like little creature stood with the bare toes of one foot twisting in the wet earth and the fingers of both hands nervously clutching at the calico of her skirt. She was gazing with artless worship on the fuller beauty of the "furrin" visitor who was, save for the swelling of more womanly curves, as slender as herself.

"What makes ye like me?" she suddenly demanded in a half-challenging voice, while her eyes held the direct questioning of one who will establish no friendship on a basis of denied frankness.

"You make me like you," laughed Juanita, as she raised a dripping countenance.

The mountain girl held her eyes still in the unwavering steadiness of her race, then she said in a voice that carried an undernote of defiance:

"Ye hain't nuver seed me afore an'—" she broke off, then added doggedly — "an' besides I don't know nuthin'."

"I mean to see you often, after this," announced the woman from Down-below, "and the things you don't know can all be learned."

A swift eagerness flashed into the younger face and a sudden torrent of questioning seemed to hover on her lips, but it did not find utterance. She only turned and led the way silently back toward the house. When they were almost at the door Dawn hesitated and Juanita encouraged her with a smile. It was clear that the mountain girl found whatever she meant to say difficult for she stood indecisive and her cheeks were hotly suffused with colour, so that at last Juanita prompted, "What is it, dear?"

"Ye said—" began Dawn hastily and awkwardly, "ye said suthin' 'bout me a-tryin' ter like ye. I—I don't hafter try—I does hit." Then having made a confession as difficult to her shy taciturnity as a callow boy's first declaration of love, she fled abruptly around the corner of the house.

Juanita stood looking after her with a puzzled brow. This hard mountain reserve which is so strong that friends rarely shake hands; that fathers seldom embrace their children, and that the kiss is known only to courtship, was new to her; and strange.

At breakfast she did not see Dawn.

Last night, until heaviness overtook him, Fletch McNash had been voluble and full of loud jest. This morning his face with its high cheekbones and bushy beard, was unreadable and mute. No allusion was made to the happenings of last night.

But the girl noticed that inside the door leaned the householder's "rifle-gun" and under Young Jeb's left armpit the partly masked shape of a pistol butt.

Young Jeb's face yesterday had been that of a boy, this morning it was the sullen face of a man confronting grim realities. Had Juanita been more familiar with the contemporary affairs of the community she might have known that many visages along Tribulation that morning brooded with the same scowl from the same cause. The McBriar yell had been raised last night in the heart of the Havey country, and this morning brought the shame of a hand invaded and dishonoured.

Dawn did not reappear until Juanita had mounted and turned her mule's head forward. Then as she was passing the dilapidated barn the slim calico-clad figure slipped from its door and intercepted her in the road, holding up a handful of queer-shaped roots.

"I 'lowed ye mout need these hyar," she whispered still diffidently.

Juanita smiled as she bent in her saddle to take the gift.

"Thank you, dear. What are they?"

"Hit's ginsapp," Dawn assured her; "Hit grows back thar in ther woods an' hits got a powerful heap of virtue. Hit frisks ther sperret an' drives away torment. Ef ye starts ter swoon argin, jest chaw hit."

Juanita repressed her amusement.

"You see, dear," she declared. "There's one very wonderful thing you know, that I didn't know. And don't forget when we meet again we are old friends."

Then, looking back over her shoulder as she rode on, Juanita saw the figures of both Fletch and Jeb cross the fence at the far side of the yard, and turn into the mountain thicket. Each carried a rifle cradled in his bent elbow.

When just before sunset yesterday afternoon, a verdict of acquittal for Col Douglas had come from the jury room, the town of Peril had easily won its breath and shoes had closed on the senses that cleared of such as wished to remain non-combatants. But with no comment or criticism, Milt McBriar mounted his horse and rode out of town, shaping his course over the hills toward his own house. Following his example with equal quiet, his kinsmen mounted, too, and disappeared.

As for Cal Douglas, he reserved any enthusiasm his vindication may have brought to his heart until he was back again in the depths of the hills. He and his kinsmen turned their horses by a shorter and steeper trail to the house where the dance was going forward with shuffling and fiddling and passing of the jug.

When Milt McBriar and his fellows started home an informer or two from the Havey ranks kept them in view, themselves unseen, until they passed through the gap and started down the other side of the ridge into their own domain.

That they were being so watched was either known to the McBriars or assumed by them. But a picked squad on fresh mounts was waiting over there in a place where the road ran deep through forest and laurel, and this squad was equipped with repeating rifles. Milt McBriar himself did not go back with them. He had made all his arrangements in advance, and it was not seemly that the chief himself should take a personal part in an execution which he had decreed.

"Let me hear the news, boys," he had said with a wave of his hand, and then he had ridden on, still reflective and calm of mein toward his own house from which the smoke rose in the distance.

The house where the dance was being held stood between the knees of two hills and before the pocket in which it had been built ran the road, following the twistings of Tribulation. It was a larger house than most hereabouts, and had in the same enclosure another building which had beforetimes been a wayside store. It was in this store that the floor had been cleared for dancing. It was there that the fiddles sang and the broganed feet shuffled to the ancient hoe-down and jig of the hills, which have never known a round dance.

In the three rooms of the house proper and about its tight-trodden yard stood such men as had wearied of dancing, and here the jig was passed.

Near midnight a half-dozen men, who had not been invited, rode carefully over an almost obliterated trail which wound blindly through the hills at the back of the place and hitched their horses in a rock-surrounded hollow a half-mile from the house. Other horses and mules were hitched all along the county road, but these belonged to the legitimate guests.

As the half-dozen men whose arrival had been so cautiously accomplished began slipping down, each holding his own course in the cover of the laurel, there was nothing to indicate that any warning had gone ahead of them. The shadows fell deep and impenetrable in patches of cobalt. The ridges stood up boldly against a sky in which innumerable stars and the band of the Milky Way were pallid ghosts of light undone by the moon's magnificence.

From the houses with their yellow windows and their open doors came no note of apprehension—no intimation of suspicion. A medley of voices, a din of scraping feet, and the whine and boom of fiddles gave out a careless chorus to the night.

Slowly with an adept craft that hardly broke a twig underfoot, three of the new arrivals hitched their way forward to a point of vantage down near the road.

Then went crouched low, holding to the shadows with rifles thrust out ahead, and faces almost smiling in their grim foretaste of sure success. In a few moments they would have before them the doors and windows as lighted targets. Then whoever saw Cal Douglas in his front would crook forefinger on trigger and the error of the Jury would be rectified. The others would send a volley at random for good measure.

It was almost too easy. It seemed a shame to snatch a full and red revenge with such scant effort. To be sure a moment later there would be a wrathful flood of men rushing out of the pandemonium to rake and search the hillsides, but there would first come the panic-ridden instant of utter surprise—and that would be enough.

Then as the foremost figure, crouching in easy range of a window, braced himself on one knee and peered forward under his upturned hat brim, there came the reports of several rifles—but they were not the rifles of the McBriar squad, and they came not from the hills in front, but from the laurel at the back. They broke from directly between the carefully picked squad and its horses.

The man who had braced his knee and cocked his rifle gave a brief gurgling sound as an oath was stifled off in a hemorrhage of the throat, and pitched forward on his face. After that the figure lay without stirring, its own blood blackening the rifle whose trigger guard pressed against its forehead.

The doors vomited men. There was a trailing and ragged outburst of firearms, and many dark figures plunged here and there across the silvered spaces where the shadows did not fall.

HATE FOR OUR TONGUE

Leading German Paper Says English Language Must be Swept Away

The things that the German papers say about the war have no counterpart in British journalism. They breathe an absolutely ferocious hatred, but in many cases the writers have overshot the mark, and the effect is distinctly ludicrous. For example, here is a passage from the Deutsche Tagesszeitung:

"It is a crying necessity that German should replace English as the world-language. Should the English language be victorious and become the world language, the culture of mankind will stand before a closed door and the death-knell will sound for civilisation. Since the beginning of this war the moral decay of Britain has been in evidence to a terrible degree. What do we find on every hand in the island Empire? Nothing but lies, brutality, violence, and unctuousness combined with an utter absence of manliness, dignity, and sense of justice. It is indeed a melancholy spectacle. And if we turn our eyes towards its immense colonial empire, towards every land where the English language prevails, we encounter the same conditions, the same fearful, brutalising influences, the complete animalisation of the human species. Here we have the reason why it is necessary for the German, and with him the German language, to conquer. And the victory came was, be it now or be it a hundred years hence, there remains a task for the German, than which none is more important: that of forcing the German tongue on the world. On all men, not those belonging to the more cultured races only, but on men of all colors and nationalities, the German language acts as a blessing—a blessing which, coming direct from the hand of God, sinks into the heart like a precious balm and ennobles it. English the bastard tongue of the canting island pirates, must be swept from the place it has usurped and forced back into the remotest corners of Britain until it has returned to its original elements, those of an insignificant pirate dialect."

THE GREAT KRUPP WORKS

Could They be Crippled the War Would End

Were Krupps' works to be crippled more than half the battle would be won. That the Allies are quite alive to the importance of this fact is revealed in the report that aviators have dropped bombs on or very near the works.

A colossal enterprise, the works dominate the whole of Essen and something like 70,000 workmen are employed. Situated in the centre of Essen, close to the railway, they, together with their attendant institutions, cover an area of 500 acres. The tentacle arms of the vast establishment stretch out, octopus-like, on all sides. Two thousand trucks and over fifty locomotives rush along these tracks daily conveying Germany's guns armor-plates, ammunition and shells to German garrisons, forts, ports and harbors.

Six thousand tons of coal, coke and briquettes are poured into the huge creature's rapacious jaws. One and a quarter million tons of fuel are required annually to appease its insatiable appetite.

Perilous Aerial Job

Some of the Zeppelin airships carry a basket suspended below the car at a distance of 500 feet or so, and this basket contains a man and a magazine of bombs, the object of the device being to put the bomb marksman nearer the target than the airship itself, which can thus keep at a safer distance from the enemy below.

OPEN NOSTRILS! END A COLD OR CATARRH

How To Get Relief When Head and Nose are Stuffed Up.

Count fifty! Your cold in head or catarrh disappears. Your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more snuffling, hawking, mucous discharge, dryness or headache; no struggling for breath at night.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist and apply a little of this fragrant antiseptic cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothing and healing the swollen or inflamed mucous membrane, giving you instant relief. Head colds and catarrh yield like magic. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable. Relief is sure.

MILITARY BODIES OF CURIOUS TYPE

Throughout the world there are some romantic and picturesque military bodies; but there are quasi-military organisations in Great Britain which are not included in the army list, and are probably quite unknown to many people.

How many have heard of the corps of local Highlanders which springs into existence to guard the ruling Sovereign whenever he visits Balmoral? It is a corps entirely apart from all military conventions, yet the members are strictly disciplined, dressed, and equipped.

Many British firms have formed special Territorial companies or semi-military bodies; but one London manufacturing firm has a complete corps, with band, drums, and fifes, ambulances, etc., and every member of it is an army officer or ex-soldier, and wears a distinctive uniform.

It is not usual for cavalry regiments to sit two men on one horse. The idea hardly strikes one as military. Yet, some twenty-five years ago, the Servians, when battling with the Bulgarians, were astonished at the arrival of a regiment of the latter with two men on each animal.

But they might have been even more astonished if they had met a band of cavalry to be found on the island of Madagascar. These soldiers go about their military operations on oxen. The animals are very lean creatures, and it is said that they move with surprising rapidity—which reminds one of the Camel Corps which Britain formed during the operations in Egypt some years ago.

Among romantic foreign regiments, none is more famous than the French Foreign Legion, the most cosmopolitan corps in existence, containing many ruined aristocrats, aliens, and adventurers of every nation under the sun.

The regiments are firmly disciplined and are employed on every desperate and hazardous expedition. Adventures are to be found galore by this Legion.

On the far Indian frontiers Britain employs tribesmen — "Chowkidars" they are called—to protect the British troops at night against the daring and merciless Pathan rifle thieves who infest those parts.

Turning to Germany, we find distinctive regiments there also. Take the 1st Prussian Regiment of Guards, for instance. Every member is a picked giant.

The King of Siam has a very imposing bodyguard of 400 high-born ladies, the pick of his kingdom. Essentially a peace organisation, one would imagine.

EMERGENCY RATIONS

British Army Depends on Compressed Pea Soup and Biscuits

As long as it is possible soldiers on active service eat about the same sort of food as they eat at home, but in larger quantities, due, of course, to keener appetites. They have fresh meat, of all kinds, vegetables, even fruit, bread and butter and jam, tea, coffee, candy, and even beer, to say nothing of an occasional "tot" of rum or some other spirit. But few of them are so lucky as to be long at the front before having to fall back upon the specially prepared concentrated feeds that each army provides in tremendous quantities. The concentrated rations supplied to the various armies in Europe differ quite as much as do the bore and length of their rifles. In fact, each nation pins its faith on a different sort of food, or a different combination of the same foods. The problem of feeding the Japanese is the simplest of all, for the Japanese can live for months and fight like demons on rice alone. It is cooked and then the moisture is taken out of it. The rice is subjected to tremendous pressure, and turned out in the shape of little balls. One of these balls dropped into a pot of hot water will provide a nourishing meal of soup for half a dozen men. By way of variety the balls are sometimes cut into little strips and toasted.

The British emergency ration, that is to say, a ration that each man carries in his knapsack and is supposed only to be eaten if he becomes detached from his comrades and is in danger of starvation, consists of a compressed pea soup.

The British army also uses a sort of "dog-biscuit," four-inches square and weighing three ounces, and cakes of compressed vegetables.

THE KAISER'S HEIR EVER A FIREBRAND

Glorified Fighting in Print and Declared Germany Must Look to its Soldiers to Keep Its Position

For years the Crown Prince of Germany was a leading advocate of a warlike policy for Germany. He identified himself entirely with the army. He accepted anything that bore the faintest resemblance to a slur upon it, enthusiastically commended utterances of a militaristic tendency, and became at times so outrageously belligerent that his imperial father was compelled to curb his ardor. An instance of this was his "banishment" to Danzic a few years ago.

Dr. Liman paints an attractive portrait of the Kaiser's heir. In spite of all his vagaries, we learn that he is popular throughout Germany, totally devoid of "side," and the keenest sort of a sportsman. Moreover, we hear of him as a diligent reader of books, especially on history, and as a warm admirer of Napoleon, despite the fact that the great Corsican humbled Germany to the dust in his campaigns. In Napoleon, says Dr. Liman, the Crown Prince sees not a "parvenu," but a genuinely great man—and he makes this interesting comment:

"Strange indeed is it that from a man who attributes all merit in history to princes, who goes in Richelieu and Bismarck 'mad,' [illegible] able counsellors who have the honor of carrying out the ideas of their masters,' a son should have sprung who looks with a clear eye through the mists of romanticism and finds in the lordling of the lawyer's son of Corsica something to be regarded with wondering reverence."

In his endeavor to show the Crown Prince as he really is, Dr. Liman did not forget the book on his hunting experiences which the Kaiser's heir published a couple of years ago.

In this hunting book the Crown Prince wrote: "Really dangerous fighting, such as was known to our ancestors—fighting at close quarters with a beast—is, unfortunately, becoming almost unknown, owing to our constantly growing culture. Therefore, that inborn joy of fighting that lies in the true hunter's nature must find substitutes in the physical exertion of stalking, in the braving of bad weather, in outwitting the animal that is being stalked, and, finally, in the joy of a good shot."

In another piece of writing by the Crown Prince his essentially soldierly characteristics come to the fore. This is the preface written by him for "Germany in Arms," a book dealing with the German Army and Navy, in which he gave forth these warning words:

"Our fatherland, more than other lands, is compelled to look to its defences. Badly protected by its unfavorable geographical position, lying in the centre of Europe, not looked upon by all nations with affection, the German Empire more than all other nations of this old earth has the holy duty before it of keeping its army and navy always up to the highest point of readiness for war. In that way alone leaning on our good sword, can we win our place in the sun, which, though our due, is not willingly allowed to us."

And further along in the same article the Crown Prince has this to say: "We are living in a time when men proudly point to their culture; a time which is but too willing to plume itself on its cosmopolitanism and takes pleasure in dreaming idle dreams of the possibility of eternal peace.

"Such a conception of life is unGerman. It is not for us. The German who loves the vastness, who believes in its greatness and future, and does not wish to see any lessening of its prestige will not close his eyes in such dreams, nor allow himself to be lulled to sleep by the peace lullaby of the Utopians. . . .

"If the German people decide to risk life and property in a war, then let the world to fall of devils and rise against us in arms, we can handle it, no matter how great the peril of the hour."

A Russian soldier brought to the field hospital at Drushgnik had twenty-three bullets in his legs.

TURKISH CAPITULATIONS

Unusual Custom Which Prevailed Whereby Foreigner Had Own Courts

Shortly before Turkey plunged into the war it was announced that the Turkish Government had abolished the capitulations—news which probably conveyed little or nothing to the average reader.

We talk of the capitulation of a fort or an army, meaning its surrender on certain conditions; but the capitulations of the Sublime Porte are treaties or agreements with the foreign colonies in Turkey.

These capitulations are of great antiquity, and date from the rise of the ancient Greek Empire.

The Greek Empire of old permitted foreigners to reside on Greek territory, but insisted that they should retain their nationality, and be governed by their own magistrates and laws.

When the Greeks established themselves at Constantinople, they continued this system, and so when the Turks took Constantinople they found the Genoese living there under a capitulation by which they were subjects of the Duke of Milan, had their own podesta, or mayor, and their own laws.

The Turks confirmed the Genoese capitulations, and entered into similar agreements with other nations, the first one with Britain being made about the end of Queen Elizabeth's reign.

Under the capitulations all legal actions between foreigners were settled by a foreign court sitting in Constantinople. If the disputants were of the same nationality, they appeared before judges of their own country, but if of different races, then the matter was settled in a court of the defendant's country.

The capitulations, however, did not apply to legal questions involved by the ownership of land in Turkey by foreigners. These were decided by Turkish courts and Turkish law.

One has heard of "the most favored nation" clause in treaties, especially commercial treaties, but perhaps without understanding just what it meant. We owe the expression to the Turkish capitulations, and it is simply a clause which declares that one nation is not to be favored over and above another, thus placing all foreign colonies in Turkey on the same footing and under the same treaty laws and privileges.

DEPEND ON ARTILLERY

German Infantry Not Trained to Shoot Accurately With Rifle

The ineffectiveness of the German rifle fire seems to be borne out by the hospital records.

"This was to be a war of the laboratory and the machine shop on the German part," said a high British officer. "They seem to have paid little attention to the rifle shooting by their men, but to have depended upon their artillery. The infantry was then to be used to tear a hole by sheer weight through the enemy's line."

The immensely heavy siege guns of which so much has been heard were to reduce fortifications. The field guns have been extraordinarily well handled, although the shells are said to be deficient. The infantry arm is the weakest—not excepting the rifle. No army in the world has ever carried so many machine guns—they are of the Maxim type. Montreal with that used by Great Britain—in proportion to the number of troops employed.

INDIANS ON WARPATH

Northern Band of Redmen Wanted to Massacre German Settlers

An interesting story was told by Rev. John Marshall at the Methodist Church at Islington, Ont.

Rev. John Marshall is a missionary at Jack River, the farthest north charge in the Anglican Church in Canada, located in the Hudson Bay territory.

One evening while taking a short walk, Mr. Marshall was stopped by the chief of one of the neighboring Indian tribes and asked if it was true that the Motherland was fighting with Germany. On being assured that such was the case, the chief walked away, apparently in a deeply thoughtful mood.

Next morning, before his usual rising hour, Mr. Marshall was awakened by the sound of numerous horses' hoofs approaching his house. Such an unusual occurrence aroused Mr. Marshall's curiosity, who as soon as possible rushed out to the street, where he came face to face with the sheriff of Jack River, who was on a similar errand. Looking up the street they saw a whole tribe approaching under the leadership of the Indian chief to whom Mr. Marshall had spoken the evening before. The Indians were mounted and supplied with everything to carry on modern warfare. As the Indians drew nearer Mr. Marshall and the sheriff stopped the chief to find out the reasons for the mobilization. As the event unfolded it was apparent that the Indians were intent upon taking vengeance upon a German settlement situated only a few miles from Jack River. Mr. Marshall and the sheriff had their hands full dissuading the chief from carrying on warlike operations against the Germans.

FIGHTING IN MASS

German Soldier Not Trained to Use His Brains—Has no Initiative

The German soldier fights in close order because he is not able to fight in any other way, declares a man who has soldiered with Germans, writing in an English periodical.

Why is this so? he asks. Is the ordinary German not as quick-witted and as intelligent as the ordinary Briton or the average Frenchman?

The German is obliged to fight shoulder to shoulder because he has not the initiative and the self-reliance necessary to enable him to fight well in extended order. Originally the average German may be as quick-witted and intelligent as the average Briton or Frenchman; but those Germans with whom I came in contact while serving in the French Foreign Legion—and there were hundreds of them—certainly did not compare favorably with either French or British soldiers in the quality of their intelligence or their capacity for independent action.

The fact is that initiative is killed and intelligence is stunted by the German system of training. A German soldier is taught to do as he is told, and nothing but what he is told. He is just a machine and quite incapable of displaying the initiative and self-reliance that is necessary to the making of a good open-order soldier.

The close formation would be the best method of attack if there were an unlimited supply of men, and it didn't matter to any of the German generals how many of other people's relations are killed.

TORTURED BY CONSTIPATION

"Fruit-a-tives" Cured Paralysed Bowels and Digestion

Dr. BOMFACE DE SHAWINIGAN, QUE. Feb. 3rd, 1914.

"It is a pleasure to me to inform you that after suffering from Chronic Constipation for 2½ years, I have been cured by "Fruit-a-tives". While I was a student at Berthier College, I became so ill I was forced to leave the the college. Severe pains across the intestines continually tortured me and it came to a point when I could not sleep down of all, and my Digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take "Fruit-a-tives" and at once I felt a great improvement. After I had taken four or five boxes, I realized that I was completely cured and what made me glad, also, was that they were acting gently, causing no pain whatever to the bowels. All those who suffer with Chronic Constipation should follow my example and take "Fruit-a-tives" for they are the medicine that cures".

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Praise From a General

General Sir Douglas Haig believes in the British Tommy as firmly as the British Tommy believes in him. He sent a letter from the front to a personal friend in which he eulogized the fighting qualities of T. Atkins, Esq.

"We have had hardish times," he wrote, "but nothing in our history has surpassed the fine soldierly qualities displayed by our troops. They have marched and fought, and supported hardship in the trenches—first great heat, and then wet and frost—in a manner beyond all praise."

According to a notice issued at Lowestoft by the captain in charge of the naval base, a reward not exceeding $5,000 will be paid to fishermen for information which leads to the actual capture or destruction of an enemy's vessel down to and including a mine-layer or submarine.

"Now I can die in peace, for I have discharged the three duties of a true Sikh. I have lived according to the precepts of the Gurus, I have aided the State with my sword, and here I have paid personal homage to my sovereign."
—The Raja of Nabha at the British Durbar.

CONQUERED loyalty fiercely fighting in defence of its conqueror is a spectacle to make grim visaged Mars relax his war-god features into a puzzled smile. Tens of thousands of Sikhs, Senegalese, Punjabi, Algerians, Bengalese and Turcos are now battling in Europe under the banners of Great Britain and France, eager to lay down their lives for the countries whose armies invaded and subdued their native lands. It is not exactly comprehensible from the "give-me-liberty-or-give-me-death" viewpoint of American citizenship.

Purse-lipped Britons and take-it-for-granted Gauls will tell you that it is no more than what the dark-skinned battler should do, and that he is rightly "true to his salt." Look how nicely we have treated these conquered patriots—eh, what? But the more you find just reason to praise these magnificent adopted fighters the more you must wonder that men so capable of everything that goes to make a perfect soldier should have transferred their vigorous valor and loyalty from their annihilated nationhood to that of their subjugators.

How comes it that the man or people under the heel of another man or people can be of the hero breed in battle? A man fit to fight and die for a principle of loyalty surely should be fit to give his life for an ancient glory and a renowned freedom. And the Indian and African soldier fighting for England and France has a past to be proud of. Not constantly glorious, of course, but for that matter neither has any European nation an undeviating pedigree of merit.

The conquering countries say that their dark-hued warriors are loyal through love and not fear or respect of superior prowess. And the battle record of the colonial troops seems to prove the truth of the contention. The way they [illegible] to a man in fight places, both [illegible] and the tribesmen of the mountain [illegible] with hatred on their lips, doesn't savor of fear or mere respect.

It must be that patriotism may be transferred without the loss of a single asset of value in the transplanting. But it is not quite understandable in this country. The United States has never attempted to make a soldier of its despised Indian. A few may get into the service, but conscription of the native along the lines of Sepoy magnitude has not been deemed wise in the past. And the North American Indian has not the hundredth part of the good history the East Indian possesses.

During Great Britain's war against the Afghans the famous night attack on the Sherpur Kotki, December 2, 1878, showed the native soldier at the apex of his valor. The scene of the battle was the precipitous side of a great height or mountain which had to be scaled in order to command the roads of high altitude traversing that region.

Lord Roberts, the renowned British field marshal who died suddenly following a recent visit to the trenches of the Allies, was in command of the English forces. His attacking column was made up principally of the Seventy-second Highlanders, the Fifth Gurkhas and the Second and Twenty-ninth Punjab Infantry. Between the Highlanders and the Gurkhas there always has existed a keen martial rivalry—the rivalry of courageous men without the slightest hint of jealously.

It was a moonlight night and the advancing column picked its way silently through the gorges and along the cliffs. The enemy was unexpectedly reached and stirred to action just before dawn. At the command to charge up the shot swept height the native Gurkhas determinedly sprang ahead of their Scotch comrades and with fixed bayonets fiercely swarmed into the first Afghan intrenchment. They killed all who stood before them and bounded onward as the men of the Seventy-second, eager for a share of the glory, entered the battle circle.

To the second intrenchment hurried the Gurkhas, guided by the flash of the Afghan rifles. The Englishmen's second troops came up with them, and shoulder to shoulder they raced to death and to victory, the Briton and the Indian being mowed down together as they advanced. The two regiments gained the second intrenchment, 200 yards higher up the steep side, almost neck and neck. The Gurkhas declared afterward they were bayoneting the defenders a second or two ahead of their Scotch comrades, and the claim was generally allowed. Together the two commands then rushed the third position, commanding the head of the pass.

When the battle was won the dark skinned and the light skinned soldier paused pantingly and shook hands. At the close of the war, two years later, the Scotch soldiers were surprised one night to find hung in their quarters a shield of remembrance, the inscription thereon stating that it was from the men of the Fifth Gurkhas to the men of the Seventy-second Highlanders, as a token of appreciation of comradeship during trying times. The Scotchmen returned the compliment in a suitable way later, and if you want to know how a native soldier can fight ask a mustered out Highlander some day as he is smoking his pipe near the Trafalgar Monument.

In fact, for over half a century since the Indian mutiny the Sikh soldier has served England in Afghanistan, Afghanistan, Chitral and Africa. They bore the brunt of a British campaign in Somaliland, in one instance a detachment of 200 fighting to the last man [illegible] overwhelming numbers. During the Tirah campaign of 1899 the fall of the picket post of Saragurhi on the Samana ridge, garrisoned by twenty-one Sikhs, saw a tragic piece of fighting fully equal to deeds of the ancient demigods. Cut off by a force of Afridis numbering thousands, this little band for six hours repulsed the enemy magnificently, killing their assailants by scores. They were finally reduced by Afridi bullets to just one splendid Sikh, who defended the guard-room door alone as the walls fell. The guardroom was set on fire behind him, and he continued to face and fire at his foes until the flames enveloped his devoted, battling body. His one rifle had shot down twenty, and the enemy admitted 200 killed and many more wounded by the Sikhs who had perished.

There have been other classes of valorous Sepoys additional to the Gurkhas and Sikhs that have obtained credit upon the Anglo-Indian army. It was the French who first made use of the dark skinned battler in India, the name for the native soldier being Sipahi, from which the word Sepoy was evolved by the English. As early as the seventeenth century these troops were drilled and incorporated with the European contingents of France battling for a foothold in the strange land. They helped the French defend Pondicherry from the combined army and fleet attack of the English in 1748. When the celebrated Clive went against Calcutta in 1756 he took 1,200 Sipahis to the attack. This first batch of Sepoys raised by England in 1759 when her own English officers and troops mutinied. They formed the nucleus of the army that later helped win Bengal and Bihar, to annex Benares and the delta of the Ganges, to invade Afghanistan and to acquire the Punjab.

The so-called Turcos of the French colonial army in Africa are its principal native soldiers. As far back as the Crimean War they had a reputation as fighters of the desperate, reckless kind. Some of them battled brilliantly under the celebrated Arab chieftain Abd-el-Kader, who was proclaimed Sultan of Algeria November 21, 1832. For more than forty years France sent troops into North Africa striving to secure a firmer foothold there and bring about peace, with [illegible] men acknowledging her protectorate or [illegible] and out possession. During all these years she was fought [illegible] the [illegible] acknowledging [illegible] last fall, whenever a conflict [illegible] came she sought to incorporate [illegible] with her own [illegible] capital, Mas[illegible] tribes of [illegible] French had be[illegible] The Alge[illegible] was kept a [illegible] 1900 to 1908, [illegible] pipe had be[illegible] hundreds, and [illegible] and disciplined thoroughly.

The last trouble occurred while France was at war with Prussia, it being deemed a propitious time by the rebels because a large number of troops had been withdrawn from Africa to aid the cause of Napoleon III. in Europe.

Among the troops thus brought over from Africa were a large number of Algerian Turcos. They came heralded as fierce fighters, asking and giving no quarter. They met the German allies on several hard fought fields and fully justified their reputations. Several of their tricks of war were decidedly Scythian. Prussia soon began to complain of their unnatural ferocity. It was stated at the time of the war that a favorite ruse was to ask for quarter, as if the plea were genuine, and then destroy the enemy who was weak enough to listen to their prayer.

At the battle of Sedan a regiment of Turcos held a pivotal point of the field for an hour after three of the European regiments of the army had successively become demoralized under fire and retreated. Just eighteen of the Turcos survived the fearful cannon fire on the point they defended. When ordered to retire they withdrew sullenly, turning a look of scorn on the French officer who gave them the command. Some of the descendants of these battlers again face the Prussian in France as their fathers did. They have not the reputation for maltreating that was theirs [illegible] years ago, but the Turco of 1914 has not deteriorated as a fierce fighter.

Additional to the Turcos proper there are engaged in the French-African army twelve squadrons of Senegal Tirailleurs, three squadrons of Conflns Saharians, three battalions of West African nations and six battalions of French Congo troops. These are natives, the European soldiers, however, being also blended with them in large numbers. There are ten battalions of Zouaves, six squadrons of Chasseurs d'Afrique and three battalions of the Foreign Legion as a territorial reserve. All of these bodies are represented in the French armies in the trenches with their English allies.

Both England and France have brought from their native climes thousands of these soldiers of the nations they have conquered. How many have been called to the colors a strict censorship prevents an inquiring. But they have been seen in great numbers in France en route to the firing line, genuine skinned, dark eyed, determined visaged, with an odd smile now and then for the greeting hussas, showing between the firm lips the gleaming white teeth.

Their conquerors say they will be loyal to the death, although not even a modicum of the meed of a soldier of fortune will be theirs. Can you picture a Briton or a Yankee being subjugated and then giving his life for his subjugators? If you can suppose the United States conquered can you suppose it remained very long? And yet these conquered loyal ones are mighty battlers.

The Sikhs have a title for the more martial of their people, a title originated nearly five hundred years ago by Nanak, the founder of their sect. This title is "Singh," meaning "Lion of His Race." The native rulers—under the British domination—still carry this distinctive Singh in their titles, but they are lions of the Anglo-Saxon race these days.

Will there ever come again a Singh who will be a Singh for the Sikh? Who can tell? Little Servia "came back" after five hundred years of slavery under the heel of the Turk. History's scroll is not yet rolled or unrolled for the last time. In the meantime Sikh and Turco are fierce fighters for their masters.

Loyal as their native troops are to England and France, both countries have found fierce fighters in the past among the soldiers of the other darker races of the earth who have disputed their advancing dominion. Kipling has immortalized the "Fuzzy-wuzzy," or battling Arab of the Soudan, who at El Tab and Tamai in the early months of 1883 fought in close grapple, desperately and courageously, against the Highlanders of General Sir Gerald Graham. He got his name from the fuzzied way he wore his long hair, bleached with lime to a dirty hay color. Under Osman Digna, the celebrated Mahdi's chief aide, he gave way but slowly before the British discipline, finally taking possession of the intrenched camp of Tamanieb and holding the invaders to the narrow strip of Suakim for years.

From 1881 to 1885 Mohammed Mahdi, the famous Mahdi, led his [illegible] of thousands of desperate dervishes—that being the name of his sworn followers—against Egyptian and British troops, taking province after province until he had conquered the entire Soudan. These Mahdi soldiers proved veritable devils. November 23, 1882, they utterly routed Hicks Pacha, near El Obeid, the commander and his officers dying sword in hand. Khartoum was taken and General Gordon ordered to death the early part of 1885. Kassala surrendered and subsequently the garrison of Sennaar. All of the Soudan was the dervishes' spoil. And then the Mahdi died. But he had shown England and Egypt what the sons of the desert could do in the way of fighting.

Lord Kitchener had a taste of dogrish fighting again in April, 1898, at Nakheila. His artillery won the opening and consequently the hardest part of the battle. The dervishes dashed pell mell across the Atbara River, and although mowed down they kept coming on. In August of the same year the battle of Omdurman was fought. The dervishes [illegible] not a man of them [illegible] to avoid death. As at Nakheila, they were beaten, but they did their share of killing ere they died.

King Menelek of Abyssinia gave a very [illegible] of African native fighting at the battle of Magdala in 1868. The British force under Lord Napier contained Sikhs and other Sepoy soldiers. They clashed hand to hand with the fiercely fighting warriors whose main dependence was shield and spear. But the Abyssinian, who had conquered all adjacent countries, stood up and fought until the last man dropped. No mercy was given or received. The British naval brigade proved great battlers in this fight, they having been landed as part of the expedition.

Great Britain found the Ashantees under King Coffee no mean antagonists in the march on Coomassie, 1873. These native soldiers were executed if they showed the least strain of cowardice. The refrain of the Ashantee war song going into battle was:—"If I go forward I die. If I go backward I die. Better go forward and die!"

When England first annexed the Transvaal in 1878 it had to take up a quarrel the Boers had had with the Zulus. This brought on the famous battle of Isandhlwana. The Zulus under King Cetywayo attacked a British command in broad daylight and exterminated it, the loss being 700 British soldiers and 130 colonists. This was in January, 1879. At this battle Adjutant Melvill and Lieutenant Coghill, the former with the colors wrapped about his body, were pursued by a band of Zulus for more than a mile. The colors and their dead bodies were found together. Prince Louis Napoleon later was killed by Zulus.

The French have felt the valiant spear of the soldier of King Behanzin of Dahomey, who received some of his military training in France. In 1892 he attacked the French post at Porto Novo, using his famous Amazons as shield women to great advantage. After desperate fighting he fell back to a jungle and his capital, Abotomey, was finally taken.

England has had a further taste of native fighting in her battles with the Matabele warriors. In 1893, after a hard tussle, King Lobengula of that nation was defeated and subdued. It was not done easily. The great explorer Stanley has told of how he was attacked going through the Congo forests by the pygmies, with their poisoned arrows. A number of his party were killed by these darts. The little men fought most courageously.

The native bushmen of Australia gave England all it wanted in the fighting line for a number of years. The whirling of the strange boomerang caused no end of havoc among troops that fought in the open. At the battle of Adowa, March, 1896, an Abyssinian force inflicted a severe defeat upon an Italian army, showing no end of courage and swirling rushing qualities.

The United States has had its hands full with the Filipino fighters, intrenched and hand hewers. In the past the North American Indian has battled against Uncle Sam's armies most strenuously. In colonial days King Philip proved that the red man could fight and endure. Osceola, Tecumseh, Red Jacket, Sitting Bull and Geronimo gave all the settlers against the [illegible] of the United States they could, but they were not to be [illegible].

WHISKER CULTURE.

A Critic Who Does Not Like the Hanging Garden Effect.

In the American Magazine James Montgomery Flagg, writing a piece on "Whiskerculture," contributes the following permit to cultivate hanging gardens on the face:

"This is to certify that the beaver, —— ——, has permission to stand on the grass in any part of Central park, or other city parks, during May and June and pretend he is a spiraea bush.

"If by any chance he should begin to bear currants or marrons glacee he must allow the commissioner of parks first pickings.

"He is required also to permit any uniformed official of the Long Island railroad lost and found department to enter his beard at will, without a written order, and search for lost purses, umbrellas or packages of pressed beef or coins of any denomination.

"On the 2d of February he agrees to step out from his cocoon and, if he sees his own shadow, report it immediately to the board of health and crawl back again.

"In going over his privet hedge in the fall, before putting it in camphor, he must destroy all nests he comes across.

"On national and state holidays he is permitted to string Japanese lanterns in any part of the shrubbery above Forty-second street, but he is forbidden to set off any Roman candles or red light in it.

"During the open season for grouse or caribou he must have his entire beard adequately patrolled. He agrees to report to Washington if any careless tourists start fires in any portion of this tract, especially near any ranches. He agrees to see before retiring that no lighted cigar butts are left smoldering in the underbrush.

"If all these regulations are faithfully carried out his beard will be set aside as a national park in January of the following year."

Dogs In Warfare.

Belgium, France and Germany lead in using dogs for purposes of war. Considering how well fitted dogs are by nature for certain sorts of police work indispensable in wartime, it is curious that more of them are not in use.

Hand to hand fighting has, of course, been virtually done away with in modern warfare, and, therefore, dogs are not so formidable as of old, but for sentry duty or the seeking out of wounded on battlefields dogs are invaluable. This was shown clearly during the Russo-Japanese war.

Far back in the time of the ancients dogs served as sentries. Emperor Charles V. and Philip, King of Spain, employed them in this way, and Napoleon counseled Marmont to fasten dogs to stakes around the walls of Alexandria to watch and guard.

It is well known that dogs' senses are far more acute than those of humans, especially the senses of scent and hearing, so invaluable in police work.

Shaw of the Guards.

In these days, when such great ex-army boxers as Gunner Moir, Bandsman Blake, and Bombardier Wells are so prominently in the public eye in Britain, it may be interesting to recall the feats of that great army boxing giant of 100 years ago, John Shaw, of the Life Guards. He stood 6 feet 4 inches in height, weighed 210 pounds, and was broad in proportion. In a few months after enlistment he was the regimental champion at boxing, wrestling, and swordsmanship; and then he embarked on a series of great boxing encounters.

He first overcame the formidable Capt. Barclay, one of the cleverest amateur boxers of that day, two of the captains' ribs being broken by Shaw in the contest. Then it took the latter only seventeen minutes to triumph over the powerful Burrows, the West-Countryman, whom it had previously taken the famous Molineaux an hour to beat. Yet at that time Shaw was without science or experience, and had nothing to rely on but his prodigious strength.

TOUCHING THE HIGH SPOTS

Thomas Tells Teacher That Edgar's Answer to a Question Is In Error.

"What is the highest form of animal life?" asked the teacher in the nature study class.

The son of a prominent local humorist put up his hand.

"Well, Edgar," encouraged the teacher, "what do you consider the highest animal?"

Edgar looked around till he was assured that everybody was listening, then he answered:

"The high-cena!"

The children didn't get it—there's something the matter with our school system. Only one little boy—evidently a child whose parents took him to vaudeville performances—laughed.

"Thomas, please can the hilarity," said the teacher in classic terms. "It was a funny answer, but there is no occasion for all this merriment. If you think the answer was wrong you may tell us the right one yourself. What is the highest form of animal life, Thomas?"

"The giraffe," answered Thomas promptly.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I know it," she replied serenely, "but as long as I didn't have anything else to do I thought I'd just see for myself how much you railroad men really know about your business."—Washington Star.

BUSINESS.

No man ever manages a legitimate business in this life who is not doing a thousandfold more for other men than he is trying to do even for himself, for in the economy of God's providence every right and well organized business is a beneficence and not a selfishness, and not the less so because the merchant thinks mostly of his own profit.—Henry Ward Beecher.

GRANDEUR IN GLACIERS.

The Alpine-like Scenery in Mount Rainier National Park.

Mount Rainier National park is situated in western Washington, about fifty-six miles southeast of the city of Tacoma. It has an area of 207,360 acres and comprises Mount Rainier and all its approaches, including one of the largest glacier systems in the world radiating from any single peak.

Surrounding the mountain are beautiful forests of fir and cedar, and in the natural parks below the snow line are luxuriant fields of wild flowers of all colors and descriptions. The lower altitudes of the park are densely timbered with fir, cedar, hemlock, maple, alder, cottonwood and spruce. The forested areas, extending to an altitude of about 6,500 feet, gradually decrease in density of growth after an altitude of 4,000 feet is reached, and the high, broad plateaus between the glacial canyons present incomparable scenes of diversified beauties, seemingly arranged to suit every taste.

These "parks," as they are called, are studded here and there with lakes and streams bordered with clumps of picturesque Alpine firs and gorgeous beds of wild flowers, and in numerous instances apparently tender blossoms will be found pushing their heads out from under the snow.

The general elevation of the glacial valleys at the boundary lines of the park is about 2,000 feet above sea level. These valleys afford a comparatively easy grade to the lower ends, or "snouts," of the various glaciers, approximately an average additional elevation of 2,000 feet. At these glacier snouts the real Alpine nature of Mount Rainier National park territory is thrust upon the traveler, and from, over, around and alongside the glaciers trails have been constructed with a view to making the wonders of nature within the park easily accessible as well as to provide patrol routes for the protection of the forests and game.

Clearing Themselves.

Among the many means adopted for expressing grief upon the death of a relative perhaps as interesting a one as any is that met with in the neighborhood of the Tully river, in Queensland. Here two, three or four of the deceased friends or relatives will squat close together, with hands on each other's shoulders, bewailing for hours at a time the loss of the dear departed. It is not the virtues of the latter that are in any way extolled, however. What these mourners are really taking care to do is to show that they and the deceased were always good friends. Their object in all this is to prove to the outside public that they have had nothing to do with the encompassing of the death.—Wide World Magazine.

An Excellent Reason.

One of the stories about the late Sir Douglas Straight, the veteran journalist, relates to one of the early papers he was connected with.

He was crossing Waterloo bridge one day with a friend when he suddenly marched up to a couple of newsboys and soundly boxed their ears.

His friend, amazed at this proceeding, naturally asked him what he meant by it. "They were selling our paper," he pointed out.

"Yes, I know they were," was the reply, "but they weren't shouting it loud enough!"—London Globe.

There's ice in the furnace

Where once was combustion
The flames we discerned
Are motionless standing.
To icicles turned.
The water pipes burst,
It's a tale sad to tell,
And the Fountain of Truth—
Thatels frozen as well.

THE HILL OF TARA.

Where in Ancient Times the Kings of Ireland Were Crowned.

In the county of Meath is supposed to have stood the hall of Tara, celebrated as being the palace of the ancient Irish kings. There seems to be no doubt that on the hill of Tara the national assemblies met once a year to consult on the affairs of the kingdom and to make laws. The lawgivers were a class of druids called Brehons, who acted as magistrates and judges. They did not hold their courts of justice in any hall, but seated themselves on the top of a hill in the open air, where they heard all complaints that were brought before them and decided every cause according to their own ideas of right and wrong.

The hill of Tara is also famous in Irish history as the spot on which the kings were crowned. The throne, or seat of inauguration, was a black stone, which was called Lea Fail, or the fatal stone, said to have been brought in the early ages from Spain, and it was therefore held in high veneration. It was either borrowed by Fergus the Great, an Irish chief, or else it was carried away, among other spoils, by the Scots in one of their invasions of Ireland and was ever afterward used as a coronation seat of the kings of Scotland at the abbey of Scone until it was conveyed away by force of arms, together with the crown and scepter, by Edward I. to England, who placed it in Westminster abbey, where it still exists and forms the basis of the coronation chair to this day.—Argonaut.

Roosevelt as a Woodchopper.

When he owned a ranch in the west Theodore Roosevelt, as he says in his autobiography, "could chop fairly well for an amateur," but he admits that he could not do one-third of the work that his men did.

"One day," he writes, "when we were cutting down the cottonwood trees to begin our building operations, I heard some one ask Dow what the total cut had been, and Dow, not realizing that I was within hearing, answered, 'Well, Bill cut down fifty-three, I cut forty-nine, and the boss, he beavered down seventeen.' Those who have seen the stump of a tree that has been gnawed down by a beaver," adds Mr. Roosevelt, "will understand the exact force of the comparison."

For the Collection Box.

Jimmy, aged four, had been sent upstairs by his mother to get 10 cents, which she intended to use for the purchase of postage stamps.

Not knowing exactly what a ten cent piece looked like, Jimmy called downstairs, "Mother, is 10 cents a little piece of money?"

"Yes, Jimmy, the smallest piece of money in my purse."

"Oh, I know now, mother! Church money."

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Grey, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural colour and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or grey; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the grey hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

Hamel's Fate.

A discovery which may throw some light upon the disappearance of the airman Gustav Hamel, while flying the channel, was made at Littlehampton recently. Two excursionists on the beach found an ordinary medicine bottle containing a single sheet of paper, on which was written, "Help; I am floating off coast of France. Quickly.—G. Hamel." The note was dated May 19, written in copying ink pencil, and well preserved. The bottle was opened by Capt. Fred Phipps.

Chapel In a Bell.

The largest bell ever made was cast in Moscow, Russia, in 1733. Its weight was 220 tons. It was a great deal too heavy to be used as a bell, so a hole was made in it to serve as a door and the interior was used as a chapel.

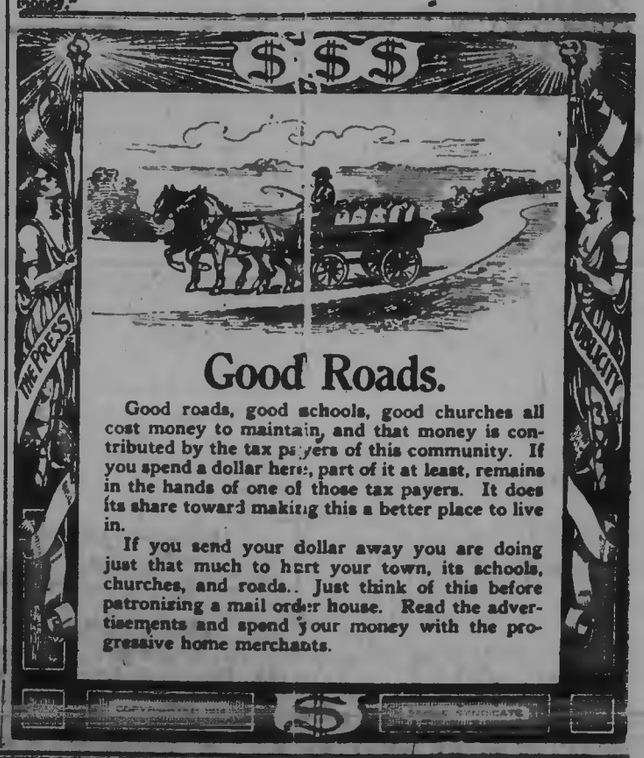
Buttonless.

"I've been reading an article on electricity, John," said a gossiping woman to her husband as she laid down a copy of a technical newspaper she had been perusing and looked over her glasses at her better half. "And it appears that before long we'll be able to get pretty well everything we want just by touching a button."

"It will never pay here," growled the husband. "You would never be able to get anything in that way."

"Why not, John?"

"Because nothing on earth would ever make you touch a button. Look at my shirt!"



Good Roads.

Good roads, good schools, good churches all cost money to maintain, and that money is contributed by the tax payers of this community. If you spend a dollar here, part of it at least, remains in the hands of one of those tax payers. It does its share toward making this a better place to live in.

If you send your dollar away you are doing just that much to hurt your town, its schools, churches, and roads. Just think of this before patronizing a mail order house. Read the advertisements and spend your money with the progressive home merchants.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

A conservative pleated skirt has a colonial yoke. Who the coat illustrated, fine cuffs at the side front. These are only suggestions, but they are deep enough to give the skirt just the amount of fullness for the new style without quite relinquishing the straighter lines of the immediate past. The pattern, which comes in sizes from 34 to 44 bust measure, is No. 8200. Any wool dress material would be suitable, or wool mixed with silk or cotton if all wool be too warm. For the trimming might be satin or velvet.

The cloth across the front of the collar is one of the conspicuous new touches. When the collar is of one shade it often is of white. In the fashionable shades and combinations a three-inched collar and cuffs white, the cloth being black, or this shade with brown, tan and a contrast, either white or black is handled to be rich and tasteful and, in fact, quite original on that account.

Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

TYPE OF ZEPPELIN WHICH HAS BEEN FIGURING PROMINENTLY RECENTLY—A few days ago, after a long period of uselessness, the German Zeppelins again came to life, when, carrying out the well-known traditions of the German militarists, they shelled undefended cities and citizens in the French city of Nancy, and a Russian town in Poland. This is also the type of aircraft which was driven off by the British anti-air craft guns in the recent raid on Cuxhaven, which has served to convince British people that danger of a Zeppelin raid on England is very far distant.

Scandal In Austria Threatens Prosecutions

VIENNA, Nov. 30 (by mail to New York).—A scandal has just been unearthed in Austrian commercial circles that for the moment is threatening to result in prosecutions for high treason.

Practically since the beginning of the war, it has developed, Austrian business houses have been indirectly but certainly consciously supplying Servia with many of the necessities which has enabled her to put up the war she has against the dual monarchy.

Austria's sudden declaration of war against Servia found the latter, especially after her two previous Balkan wars, utterly unprepared both as to provisions and as to equipment for her troops. Entirely cut off from all commercial connection with the rest of the world, except through the port of Salonika, which she won through her last war with Bulgaria, Servia at once placed immense orders with all of the importing houses in that city.

She offered the highest possible prices and the Salonika concerns rapidly emptied their warehouses. The Servian orders continuing, the importers began shipping in goods from Austria, all of which, it now develops, have found their way into the Austrian commissariat. Some of the largest commercial houses of Austria are involved.

The "Iron ring" of Austria is becoming rapidly more diffused throughout the dual monarchy and is coming rapidly to be more highly prized and coveted than the famous "Iron cross" of the Kaiser. Already the little iron band is to be seen to the exclusion of all other jewellery, on the hands of people in every walk of Vienna life. It is as common on the finger of the washer woman as it is on the dainty hands of the members of the highest aristocracy, nobility and even of the royal house itself. There is not an archduchess of the House of Hapsburg who has not already won one and is proud to wear it.

The "Iron ring of Austria" was established by the Society of the Silver Cross, organised for the purpose of raising funds for the care of families whose fathers, brothers and husbands have been killed in the war. Up to the present time over one million and a half of crowns have already been raised. Of this small amount only a small per cent. was given in ready money, the great bulk being contributed by those, even from the usually wealthy circles, who were obliged to give, instead, their rings, royal decorations, diamonds, watches, chains and jewellery of every description. It is to those who contributed in this manner that the Society of the Silver Cross gives its "ring of iron."

On the little iron band, which the contributors never fail to wear are inscribed the six words:

"I have given gold for iron."

On an average, 2,000 rings are finding wearers daily.

Comment on French Officer's "Tub" Led To Capture of German Trench

NEAR VERDUN, via London, Dec. 16.—Few official communiques are issued in which the Argonne is not mentioned. A few personally conducted war correspondents have had a glimpse of the battlefields on its tragic slopes, where soldiers constantly spoke of the rival trenches being so near that French and Germans not only hurled interjections at one another but threw specially constructed bombs about the size of cricket balls. In some cases the lines were not a dozen yards apart, and burrowing had made such headway that a French mitrailleuse poked its nose into a German trench, and in that subterranean fashion the enemy was made to beat a frantic retreat.

One morning last week an officer, Lieutenant Plantin, was having his morning bath. His section of the trenches was quite up to date, a small sunken and enclosed square covered with zinc and provided with cleverly contrived drains forming an admirable pool. A comrade anxious to follow him called out, "Aren't you through with your tub, Plantin?" He had a somewhat high-pitched voice, and the whole neighbourhood heard it. For eight succeeding mornings, as regularly as cock's crow in the piping times of peace, the Germans adopted the comrade's call as a sort of leit motif, and sang in chaffing chorus: "As-tu fini de prendre ton tub, Plantin?"

On the eighth day the lieutenant got an angry be called out, "Come on, boys. Let's go for them!" His company bounded across the intervening space and bayonetted every German—they were Saxons—in the enemy's lair. Thus a frivolous exclamation was the means of recovering ten metres of conquered country.

Things are going very well in the Argonne and the Woevre. Whenever any progress is being made it is the French who are making it. There are signs that the Germans are withdrawing last ten days, and as soon as the western front from Rheims to Arras and Dixmude falls back in earnest the Germans holding Southern Argonne and Southern Woevre will follow suit.

It was a curious sight—the shifting of troops and the reoccupation of the trenches by fresh companies. The men who came out were glad enough to be driven toward the base, but those who took their places seemed even more delighted.

In moving about the camps one constantly heard a soldier say, "I've been a couple of weeks here and haven't had a pot at a Boche yet!"

What a hurry the trench worn fellows are in to change their clothes and to get into the hands of the regimental barber! Imposing beards fall across the scissors, none too deftly applied, and the men all laugh and long for their wives and sweethearts to see them.

After the shave and the "tub" they smoke, and some fall fast asleep, while others stroll to hear the band play. The music is an amazing comfort to the troops and seems to speak of peace and home and loved ones. You hardly expect to find sentiment among men who have just been running their bayonets through German bodies, but you do find it, and many an eye has a tear in it as the familiar airs are heard, calling up pacific memories of the past and triumphant hopes of the future.

"Hullo, there! Why don't you go and wash? Look at your hands!" exclaims a colonel to a struggler who is drinking in the "Sambre et Meuse."

"Yes, colonel. I've just been polishing my boots and I thought I'd wash afterward," said the pioupiou.

"Next time," retorted the colonel, who is a great favourite with his regiment, "suppose you put a little more blacking on your boots and a little less on your hands."

Nobody is downhearted in the Argonne.

Some Style Still, Only Worse.

Westminster Gazette.

The surprise that has been expressed in various quarters here at the harsh measures meted out by the Germans to the Mayors of occupied Belgian and French towns is far from shared by those who have studied the latest war lessons modes of warfare.

Fifty years ago, during the Danish struggle, and according to the impeccable Kreuz Zeitung of Berlin, the Prussian general in command ordered that the Mayors of towns which did not promptly comply with the requisitions of the military authorities should be imprisoned and kept on bread and water.

At Metz, when the Mayor of Versailles was thought by the Prussians to promise to prove troublesome, it was suggested "with all calmness to headquarters that he should be hanged; but this fate was averted because the King—afterward the first German Emperor—objected to such sanctions of that kind in the case whereas he was temporarily residing

Austria Making Preparations For Fight to Finish

No Prospect for Early Settlement of War is Seen in Dual Monarchy

VIENNA, Dec. 2.—An early peace is not looked for by the Austro-Hungarian Government. While no official statement to this effect has been made, pending war measures indicate that a cessation of hostilities in the near future is most unlikely.

Military preparations continue to be made throughout the dual empire, as The Associated Press correspondent was able to observe on a recent trip over a considerable part of Austria and Hungary. Along many of the principal lines in eastern and northern Hungary military field works are being laid out on a large scale, and Vienna and Budapest are being prepared for defence in a like manner. To the north and east of Vienna no fewer than nine lines of defence may be observed, and the field works of Budapest are even more extensive.

The trackage of many railroad yards is being enlarged, and supplies are being stored in such a manner that they may be used either for local purposes or easily sent to a front further out, the various bases supplying one another.

ESTABLISH CHOLERA CAMP.

The establishment of a large cholera camp at Zsolna is further proof that the Austro-Hungarian Government does not count upon the early termination of the war. The coming of winter has virtually eradicated cholera, and it is altogether unlikely that this dread disease will reappear until the ground is thawed. Nevertheless, the Austro-Hungarian Government is spending about $500,000 on the Zsolna cholera camp, in order that it may meet a possible general epidemic next spring.

Arrangements have been made for doubling the capacity of the ammunition plants in the country. The largest of these, that of the Manfred Weiss concern at Budapest, has heretofore produced more than 2,500,000 rounds of small arms ammunition daily. This output has been increased considerably during the last three weeks, and is expected to reach the enormous total of 5,000,000 rounds per day. The same plant is extending its production of artillery ammunition. Meanwhile additional batteries of various types of guns are being made by the Skodo works at Pilsen, Bohemia.

Near all the larger Austro-Hungarian cities large drill camps have been established. Near Budapest some 300,000 men are either being trained or given a chance to recuperate from the hardships of extended service at the front. Near Vienna about 90,000 men are being trained. It is said that all the encampments contain at present more than 800,000 men, many of whom would have been called to the colours by conscription this fall and during 1915. Among these reserves is also a large number of volunteers and levies of older landwehr.

Though the government has seen fit to keep this news from the foreign and even the home press, it is a fact that recently a monitor of a more powerful type than the "Bodrog" class has been put in commission and that another of these vessels is now being finished in the Budapest government yard. It is understood that two other monitors of this type are nearing completion and that the keels for a number of others have been laid. Work on them is being rushed.

NEW MONITORS ARE POWERFUL

The new monitors have double the armament of the "Bodrog" and "Temes" class. They are armed with three instead of two long-range guns and these are of a slightly larger calibre than those installed on the "Bodrog." Moreover the thickness of the turret armour has been materially increased. Instead of carrying one high-angle piece, as do the monitors of the older class, the new vessels will be armed with two in half-turrets aft, while the quick-fire pieces on the upper deck will be increased from two to four, and the machine guns from one to six. It is believed that this fleet will be an important factor in the defence of the Danube and Save rivers.

The decision of the German Government that if Austria-Hungary has taken every measure necessary to conserve the military resources of the country. The most important feature of this is reduction of the area formerly given to the growing of sugar beets. Much lands have been sown with wheat, wheat and rye.

These seems to be no shortage in the chemical and metal supplies needed in the war. The correspondence of The Associated Press was afforded an opportunity to see the supplies of metal. In every building there are huge vats for lead, and here stored

Egotism of Genius.

When Wordsworth, Southey and Coleridge were walking together and Coleridge remarked that the day was so fine "it might have been ordered for three poets" the gentle Wordsworth promptly exclaimed: "Three poets! Who are the other two?"

Disraeli when a mere youth wrote to his sister that he had heard Macaulay, Shell and Grant speak, "but between ourselves I could floor them all." And again he said, "When I want to read a book I write one."

A Peculiarity of Dreams.

As to dreams, there was a discussion at the club lunch, and one man remarked that no man dreamed of himself as braver than he is. When the dream came the dreamer was always the under dog. He was in horrible danger and never did anything picturesque to face it. There may be men who are brave in their sleep, but it would be interesting to find one man outside of the dozen sleeping cowards who is a hero to himself in a dream.—London Chronicle.

The Pun.

The golden age of the pun in Britain was the reign of King James I., the "Stuart Solomon." That learned sovereign was himself a passable punster and made few privy councillors or bishops who were not reputed to be good at a quip. It was therefore in his day that the pun appeared with pomp and dignity. It had been before admitted into merry speeches and indifferous compositions, but was now delivered with great gravity from the pulpit or pronounced in the most solemn manner at the council table. The greatest authors in their most serious works made frequent use of puns.—London Globe.

The Piano Virtuoso's Hands.

Contrary to popular belief, the piano virtuoso, as a rule, has extremely unattractive hands. "The artistic hand" is a phrase peculiar to the hysterical young woman who laments musical recitals, but in reality the hand of the pianist is not at all artistic or beautiful when judged by the usual standards of the artist, the painter or the sculptor.

Constant, vigorous pounding overdevelops the hand and makes it scarcely ill shaped. The fingers do not taper, but are blunt and, round, ending often in what appears to be a cushion of liquid flesh.—New York World.

Norway's Many Meals.

Among the well to do in Norway the frequency of meals and lighter refreshments is something startling, at least to the average American—breakfast at 8, dinner at 2, coffee at 5:30, supper ten, with many cheese, in Norwegian style, at 9:30, supper at 7, and at 11 nature is finally fortified with further nutriment for the long, radiant night. These long, radiant nights, by the way are a constant peril to Christiania. They encourage many abuses of dissipation and inebriety. Small as the corresponding darkness of the long winter hours of its brief day is a certain sense depression, both mental and physical.—Century.

Could Prove It.

A few days ago an alderman was standing over the railway at one of the local halts to see if a friend of his was registered there. Near him stood a man, who was holding on to the flank for dear life in a semi-conscious attempt to maintain his immediate balance.

"I suppose you think I'm drunk?" said the stranger, turning belligerently on the alderman.

"No; why do you think?" replied the alderman, anxious to avoid any possibility of a row.

"Well, you've been following me about for this last half-hour, and—hiccup—I'm not drunk."

The Value of Old Rome.

At the end of the third century after Christ there were in Rome eleven large public baths and 926 smaller ones. The baths of Caracalla could accommodate at one time 1,600 people; those of Diocletian, 3,600. Taking 1,800 as the average of each of the public baths and fifty as that of each of the private baths, it appears that at any minute bathing accommodations were possible for 62,000 people in ancient Rome. Counting on a population of 2,000,000, the figure generally given as the correct one, it would thus seem that ample privileges were afforded every day for every inhabitant of the imperial city.—New York American.

THE WORD "NO."

There is one powerful word of two letters that is not used as often as it should be. On the cornerstone of that fabric which we entitle manhood is engraved the monosyllable "No." He who early learns the use of that invaluable word has already learned the way to peace and comfort and safety. An easy complaisance defeats everything. Respect for others need not degenerate into servitude, but respect for oneself. That is the very alpha and omega of all onward command.

The Eel Mystery.

The life history of the eel is mysterious, but a great deal has been added to our knowledge through recent researches. Its breeding grounds are the mid-Atlantic, at what depth nobody knows; and while the larval eel remains a year at sea it never eats, and grows constantly smaller in swimming a thousand miles to the mouth of some fresh-water stream.

It then changes from the thinness of a visiting card, and a transparency that permits only its glistening black eyes to be seen, to the pigmented snakelike fish that is caught in rivers.

They all die after the first spawning of 15,000,000 or 20,000,000 ova—nobody knows how. No adults ever come in from the sea, no adults remain in the streams.

Here, says an authority, is a vertebrate animal, emerging from an egg less than one-twenty-fifth of an inch in diameter, growing to a length of three inches in perhaps a year, buffeted about on the high seas, drifting over a distance of 1,000 miles or more.

Modern Requirements.

The real estate man was showing apartments to the young married pair.

"There are," he said, "seven rooms and two baths; large, spacious kitchen; hot and cold water, southern exposure, elevator service, steam heat, gas, electricity and no charge for janitor's jobs. The price is especially low—only $1,500 a year. We will do all the papering necessary, repair floors and ceilings and make any alterations you desire." The young bride turned to her mate.

"James," she said coldly, "it won't do at all. The place is simply barbarous. I've studied the plans very carefully, and I don't see one single room where we could take up the rugs and dance!"

Hint to Churchgoers.

The following notice appeared in a recent issue of the parish magazine of St. John's, West Hendon: "Lost!—On Sundays, by the churchwardens of St. John's, somewhere between Queen's Road and the Welsh Harp, Hendon, £5 a week out of the church collections. If any of this should be found in the pockets of those who have for any reason omitted the Christian duty of contributing honestly to the maintenance of the church, they will be rewarded with a good conscience if they make up the present deficit on the Church Expenses Fund."

Prayers For Crops.

Thousands of church people at Bexhill, Eng., recently attended a service in the fields, at which prayers were offered for the crops and fruits of the earth. Hymns were sung, and there were supplications for King, country, and church. There was a long procession of men and women to the field, led by surpliced clergy and choirs chanting the litany.

A YEAR INDOORS.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart bad and smothering feelings came on till I thought I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me, so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have a family of ten."

The Right Time.

The right time to reach the members of the family is when they are at home; and the right way to reach them is through the advertising columns of the paper that goes into the homes. There are other methods of advertising that enjoy a certain transitory popularity, because they are new or novel, but the oldest, wisest and most successful advertisers tie their faith to the home newspaper. When people are away from their homes, there are a thousand things to divert their attention, but an advertisement read in the quiet of the family circle will be read and remembered.

HOME DEMAND FOR ALSIKE

Is Benefitted by Reduced Demand From European Sources

Ontario alsike seed is usually sold in large quantities to the European market. The demand from this source is now greatly reduced because of war conditions. Ontario growers should note that the present stability in prices is due to the much smaller production in the province this season. A big crop next year with continued war conditions might cause a heavy drop in the market. Ontario alsike growers would be well advised to save seed only from especially clean fields, writes the Seed Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

FAVOURS MR. GORDON

Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I am entirely in sympathy with the candidature of G. N. Gordon for the Board of Education. This board needs one lawyer upon it to watch the contracts and business that is going through. It needs a man who is in sympathy with conditions which have already existed there and who will watch, in a fearless way, to see that nothing takes place along the lines of extravagance and careless dealing.

Mr. Gordon is a man who has already been kept active, and while he has twelve, one of his virtues is that he is a good sleeper and will not allow anything to be put over him if he knows it.

It looks to me as if this was the time to elect some new men to the Board of Education, and if the labour unions do what they should they will watch their interests and elect the right men. Yours truly,

STRATEGIC POSITIONS TAKEN BY THE ALLIES

Brilliant Bayonet Charges by the French Result in the Capture of a Series of Trenches--Fighting Has Been of a Desperate Character.

SPECIAL CABLE:

PARIS, France, Dec. 30.—The official announcement this (Wednesday) afternoon as as follows:

"In Belgium we have won a little territory in the region of Nieuport, opposite Polders and to the north of Lombaertsyde. The enemy subjected St. Georges to a violent bombardment. This is the position we are putting in a state of defence.

"We have captured a German point of support located to the southeast of Zonnebeke, on the road between Becelaers and Paschendaele.

"From the Dys to the Oise there is nothing to report.

"In the valley of the Aisne and in Champagne the enemy has manifested another burst of activity which has taken the form particularly of violent artillery fire, to which our heavy artillery has replied effectively.

"In Argonne we have made slight progress in the region of Four De Paris.

"Between Argonne and the Moselle there has been cannonading along all the front, but particularly severe along the Heights of Meuse.

"In the Vosges the enemy delivered an attack against our positions at La Tete De Faux. This was repulsed.

"In upper Alsace we are consolidating our positions. Our heavy artillery reduced to silence, German howitzers which were bombarding Upper Aspach."

PARIS, Dec. 30.—Official—The Allies have been able to reoccupy very important strategic positions southeast of Sonneback on the Bar le Acre Paschendalle Road, and are now in a position to drive a wedge into the German lines in that vicinity.. The fighting here has been of a desperate character for weeks, but the French, taking advantage of the German withdrawal, caused by weather conditions simply pushed their lines forward and finally captured an entire chain of trenches by a series of brilliant bayonet charges. The official three-o'clock statement confirms the capture of these positions and also states that the bombardment of St. Georges by the Germans is most violent. According to the statement in the region between the Aisne and Champagne there has been almost continuous cannonading. The Allies have made slight progress in the region of Four De Paris.. In the Argonne district, between Argonne and Moselle cannonading has been particularly violent. A German attack on the Tete De Faux in Vosges nas been repulsed, while the statement says that fighting in Alsace district continues.

Special Cable:

LONDON, Dec. 30.—Not since the early days of the war has popular interest been so centred on the session of the British Cabinet as to-day.

It was a special meeting and was called to take up the formal protest filed by the United States against the right of search and seizure now in force by British warships on the high seas.

Sir Edward Grey came back from his holiday vacation to handle the matter in person. He went direct from the train to the Foreign Office and took up with his subordinates the text of the protest of the United States as filed there by Ambassador Page. When he entered the Cabinet meeting he took with him the note and reports already compiled by his assistants answering the various points reached by the United States.

The entire question was threshed out at length at the Cabinet meeting to-day, and it is understood that the outlines of England's reply were decided on.

Recalls Mayor's Opera House "Call" To Local Minister

Dear Mr. Editor,—When I mark my ballot in favour of Mr. Duncan on Monday next, I am going to remember a scene in the Grand Opera House, in which Mr. Buller played a part, in my opinion, totally unbecoming the Mayor of Peterborough. It was back in June, and I said to myself I would not forget it when Mr. Buller again asked to be made the "representative of the people." The Mayor was chairman at a political meeting, at which the Hon. Mr. Duff was speaker. Rev. Robt. Pogue asked a number of questions, and affirmed something of no importance now, anyway I forget just what he said. But I recall that Mayor Buller was chairman at that political meeting, and, to my mind, he publicly insulted Rev. Robt. Pogue, when the Mayor approached him while he was speaking, and made the loutish remark, "You keep quiet," or something to that effect. In any case that was the impression conveyed, not only to me, but to all those who feel they have some idea of the options that become a Mayor of this City. He offended doubly, and this lesson should be taught now that if a Mayor hasn't the common-sense to know what chairmanships to accept, he will at least know that gentlemanly conduct is demanded, especially in public.—Yours, etc.,

Two Chimney Fires To-day

The Fire Department had two calls this morning, the first at 10 o'clock, from 534 Concession street, where a chimney fire caused trouble. No damage was done. The second alarm came in at 12 o'clockk. RECRUITING TO COMMENCE THIS EVENING

One Hundred and Fifty Men Wanted for the Mounted Rifles

RECRUITS FOR INFANTRY

Large posters are being placed throughout the City to-day, calling for recruits for the Mounted Rifles, and also for the infantry. One hundred and fifty men are asked for the Dragoons, but the number is not specified in the case of the infantry. Only physically fit and sober men will be accepted. Major T. J. Johnston, Officer Commanding 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, will be at the Armouries to receive volunteers for the Mounted Rifles each day from 10 to 12 a.m., 2.30 to 6 p.m., and from 6 to 10 p.m., until the full complement of men is made up. The recruiting commences to-night at the Armouries for the Infantry as well as the Dragoons.

Joseph H. Bell is North Monaghan Council Candidate

All the candidates nominated for North Monaghan's elections have qualified and are already busily at work, campaigning.

Joseph H. Bell, one of the candidates for the Council, resides near Crawford's Grove, and is not to be confused with Joseph S. Bell, Water Street, Peterborough. A number of persons have been making enquiries, and even Jos. Bell of the City called up the North Monaghan candidate to ascertain for a certainty who was nominated. Hence the ratepayers are asked to remeber that it is Jos. H. Bell who resides at Crawford's Grove who is in the contest. He is a new man with a clear sheet, and it was not until many had requested him to stand for the election that he consented, and is now waging a vigorous campaign.

SOCIAL EVENING

Another of the enjoyable socials of Peterborough Choral Society was held last night in Colemans parlours from 8 to 12 p.m., a large number gathering for euchre, music and refreshments. Euchre prizes went to Mrs. Craig, Miss Rosefield, Mrs. Redshaw and Mr. E. Coleman. The menu for lunch at 10 p.m. was a dainty one, followed by an impromptu dance, winding up with the famous old "Sir Roger de Coverly." Short addresses were given by the president, Mr. W. Stanker, vice-president C. E. Coleman as well as by Mr. R. J. Devey, musical director. Special attention was drawn to the renewal of practice on Tuesday next and a hearty invitation given to all singers not yet enrolled to do so promptly. The good news that Mr. Read is at home again, and recovering from his illness was gladly heard by all assembled.

AUSTRIANS ADMIT THAT LINES HAVE RETIRED

Austrian Staff Headquarters Announce That They Have Had to Retreat Along the Entire Eastern Front---An Important Admission.

SPECIAL CABLE:

LONDON, Dec. 30, by wireless from Vienna—An official communication given out by the Austrian staff headquarters admits a retreat by the Austrians in Galicia.

The statement follows:

"The old Russian army, which about a week ago commenced an offensive against those of our forces which had crossed the Carpathians, has been reinforced with supplementary troops and fresh divisions in such a manner that it is necessary for us to withdraw our troops along the entire Eastern front and in the plain of Gorlice, just north of the Carpathians and to the east of Nowy Sandio. The situation in the north has not been influenced thereby.

PARIS, Dec. 30.—Rain, snow, squalls and wintry gales sweeping in from the sea, are reported to-day to have almost checked the fighting along the Belgian and Northern France front.

For thirty-six hours the weather conditions have been frightful. As a result there are grave fears of an epidemic of sickness among the men who are compelled to remain exposed to the weather with only the protection of their muddy trenches, now half filled with water.

So fierce have been the elements that even long range artillery is silent at many points on the line. Only where the opposing forces actually have been almost in personal touch with, the fighting is continuing to-day, according to the reports received here.

There is, however, much activity on the centre and right wings, where the French are steadily pushing forward.

The operations in the Upper Alsace region have begun to overshadow all others in the opinion of French military experts. They believe that the long-looked for drive which is intended to clear Alsace to the Swiss frontier and the Rhine to Strassberg and Metz is under way. The German positions at Steinbauch are being shelled, and it is believed here that they soon will be taken.

This will open the roadways leading to Altkirch and Mulhausen.

Meanwhile the long range guns of the French picked artillery have begun shelling German trenches around Mulhausen.

This leaves six candidates to contest the field for four vacancies.

GEORGE REYNOLDS WAS CONVICTED

Of Assaulting His Wife—Sentence Was Suspended.

George Reynolds of North Monaghan, who was charged with assaulting his wife, was convicted this afternoon in the county police court, and allowed to go on suspended sentence. The case was heard before Police Magistrate Langley. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. McElderry for the defendant. After considerable evidence had been heard, the Magistrate found the defendant guilty on a technical charge of assault. Should the offence be repeated, Reynolds can be brought into court without the necessity of preferring another charge.

"A Quiet Husband."

Mr. McElderry characterized the defendant as "an ordinarily quiet husband." The evidence he gave was to the effect that plaintiff was the first to attack by waving her hands and striking defendant in the face. He also asserted that his wife called him some very indiscreet names.

Mr. McElderry asked His Worship to suspend sentence in event of a conviction being registered.

"A Wife Buster."

"Coming events cast their shadows before them," said Mr. Gordon.

"The agreement before the court would indicate that Reynolds is a wife beater. Reynolds has admitted that he used violence towards his wife and further that he choked her, which is brutality of the grossest kind; that he entered into a covenant not to strike her, is avidance of his testimony to abuse his wife. I submit that the to abuse his wife. I submit that defendant has spun his testimony with the [illegible]

My learned friend admits that he (the prisoner) is an "ordinary quiet husband." This is not fair to other husbands or it is a misstatement of the facts. It is said that she went back to defendants house after the alleged assault. She went back to see her child, guided no doubt by a true mother's instinct. Defendant could have avoided the alleged attack of his wife by standing to one side. It was his duty to avoid it. I submit it is the culmination of a long series of minor or more serious assaults. I think a punishment ought to be inflicted that will prevent a recurrence."

In reply Mr. McElderry said that the case could in no sense of the word be construed into a case of wife beating.

Expressed Displeasure.

Magistrate Langley expressed his displeasure at the evidence submitted and more particularly the battle indulged in by the plaintiff since the indictment remarks were referred to. I find on the evidence that there was not sufficient provocation to warrant the assault. It is a most unfortunate case. These people are young and live in a respectable community. I hope they will go out and do better.

SOCIALISTS MAY SCORE.

The Mail and Empire has no use for Socialists in municipal government. It says sarcastically—"Socialists, if elected, will reduce the tax rate, just as they prevented war." Don't be too hasty. If the Socialists of Germany did not prevent the war, they may be an important factor in bringing the war to an end. It is possible that when the truth leaks through the screen of lies with which Kaiserism has environed the German people, the Socialists of Germany will rise in revolt against the Kaiser and his gang, who have brought ruin on the German people. Fightings without, added to revolts within, may have an important influence in ending the war.

THE TRUCE HOLDS.

In spite of the efforts of some partizans of the baser sort to draw political advantage from the conditions which the war has created in Canada, there is proof that politicians of the higher type recognize the obligations of the political truce that has been declared. Some journals which have been trying to deny that a political truce exists, have had their eyes opened to the situation, are shown what honourable leaders of the Conservative party think of an attempt to bring on a khaki election. A day or two ago a Conservative convention was called at Lachine, to select a candidate to contest the seat vacated by the death of Hon. F. D. Monk. The convention was a fizzle, because Messrs. Doherty, Minister of Justice, and Casgrain, Postmaster-General, forbid the banns—they would not countenance the nomination on the grounds that it would be a breach of the political truce existing between the two parties.

HELP THE PRODUCTION.

In his address to the Canadian Club at Montreal, the Minister of Finance, spoke a striking truth when he declared that the present day motto for Canada should be "production, production and more production." In regard to agricultural production this motto promises to be largely heeded. But to realise the spirit of this motto more fully, the government of which Mr. White is a member, should get beyond generalities, no matter how admirable. Admitted that "production" is desirable, it must be remembered that production will not come at the mere word of command. The government has special machinery in its organization to induce and stimulate new action in all the departments of national activity. The department of agriculture should busy itself in telling us how we can add materially to the output of our soil; and Hon. Mr. White, as Minister of Finance, should show how the financing of larger industrial production, and of new industries can be accomplished. An officer can easily command his soldiers to take a trench or battery, but he won't send them to the work with naked hands; he must have provided them with guns and bayonets and ammunition before his order can become anything but a meaningless injunction. The readjustment of the ways of commerce, due to war conditions open new markets to the products of Canada. For existing agencies of production the way is comparatively easy; but if Canada is to fill the field of demands for new lines of products, we must establish new industries. To do this capital is needed; and it is on the Finance Minister to show the way and make the way easy. The Minister of Finance "gets down to brass tacks" when he advises increased production; it is the idea of a statesman; and greater statesmanship will be shown if, to the suggestion is added application of practicable and practical means of giving it effect. Kitchener does well to declare that this war must be waged to success; but he does not stop at that; he provides the ways and the means.

THERE WILL BE A WAY OUT.

The newspapers through prominent headlines give considerable importance to the protest or representations of the United States in regard to interference with ocean shipping. The shipping commerce of the United States no doubt suffers in common with that of all other nations on account of war conditions; and it is natural that that country should seek to make things easier. But it must be reasonable. If the government of the United States admits that ships bearing its flag are outraging the strict spirit of neutrality, that the government is striving to maintain, by fraudulent manifests, then she must recognize some responsibility, and see that Britain must protect itself and the tremendous interests for which she is responsible. The United States must remember that Great Britain and the Allies are not waging war from purely selfish and individual motives; they are in the fight for the benefit of all nations, for the preservation of the liberty of all nations. The United States must remember that Great Britain by the protection of her navy is making the prosecution of ocean commerce safe, by keeping the sea paths open and by destroying the menacing mines that strike shipping, friendly and hostile, with gruesome impartiality. The object of Britain's keen oversight of shipping is to prevent the passing of munitions of war to a world-hostile country, and so strengthen it in the fight it is waging, not only against the immediately belligerent countries, but against all civilization, and all the interests of human liberty. This suggests the idea that the United States might have reasonably felt itself justified in sending a companion note, to the British protest—a note to Germany of strong and indignant protest against the action of that country in strewing neutral seas with mines; against the brutalities of its methods of waging war; against its ruthless slaughter of non-combatants—women and children; protest against its outrage of the neutrality of Belgium and Poland, and the nameless horrors, for which Germany in this connection, is responsible. The baby-killers might well have had a little diplomatic admonition as well as the searchers of ships, who are only trying to prevent the strengthening of the arm of the baby-killers, of the enemies of civilization, and of the dearest liberties of humanity. There is hardly any danger that the situation will develop anything more perilous than an overflow of polite diplomatic verbiage. The United States, with commercial interests urging it on, was bound to make some sort of protest; but there is too much good sense on the part of both nations to allow such an issue to imperil or weaken the international good will that prevails. No doubt a way out—a modus vivendi—will be arrived at.

LIVE AND LET LIVE AMONG THE NATIONS.

The Literary Digest recently referred to Great Britain posing as the champion of the smaller nations. She is their champion. If there is one thing that Britain has encouraged wherever the British flag has flown it has been development along national lines, with the fullest measure of religious, civil and individual liberty. Canada herself is an instance of it. German efficiency would be aghast at letting Canada govern herself—of letting her work out her own destiny—if Canada were a German colony. Rule, absolute and ruthless, not federation, is Germany's idea of Empire.

The war will give a great impetus to the ideals of liberty and national independence. Already a new and brighter career is promised for Poland and Finland. Ireland will share in the benefits of a larger spirit of tolerance. India and Egypt, China and Japan—these, too, will find scope for national expression. This war will mean the death of Caesarism. Henceforth no nation will dream of absolute world dominion.

With German's deterrent policy smashed, it may be that civilization will be lifted to a new biological plane—that it will reap the benefit of aspirations towards which men for so long have been striving; that it will witness the triumph of that brotherhood of man to the wide belief in which the Peace Palace at the Hague is a monument. That indeed would be a great victory for true Culture—the Culture which is of the soul. That, indeed, would prove that the war heralds not a failure, but the triumph of civilization; that the human race, instead of retrogressing spiritually, has been preparing for a long step upwards, and will tolerate no force, however powerful, which seeks to hold it down.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

WHO SHALL MAKE TERMS?

For once we are in agreement with the Cologne Gazette in objecting to the introduction of the United States as arbiter at the end of the present war. Our contemporary objects that American opinion is, on the whole, too favourable to Germany to allow President Wilson to act with entire impartiality, while we, on our side, might say with equal truth that the strong pro-German element among those who have much influence with him makes us equally doubtful on the point. But there are other and much more cogent reasons why we should strongly object to leave the settlement of the terms of peace in the hands of the United States. We value American friendship very highly, but we recognight that American policy is, and must be, conceived mainly in the interests of the Americans, and this war is of such vast dimensions, and affects the United States, along with all other neutral countries, so intimately, that it is impossible for any American to regard it in vacua, or to divest himself of regard for his own country in pronouncing judgment. We had quite sufficient experience of "impartial" Powers when England and America pleaded before the bar of the Geneva Conference.

Further, let us say frankly that the United States have already disqualified themselves for the assumption of judicial functions. They have seen every Hague Convention, to which American statesmen set their hands, violated clause by clause by Germany and have not even protested, much less endeavoured to enforce the law by any active steps. We do not blame them; they are the judges of their own consciences and their own interests. But we say that their silence proves that they set those interests in front of all other considerations. We purpose to obtain deliverance for ourselves, and the weaker nations from a monstrous peril, and with less than the utter and final extinction of that peril we shall not be content. We and our Allies are resolved to break Prussian militarism once and for all, and we do not propose to ask for or permit any interference whatsoever until that task is accomplished. When it is we shall not require any assistance in arranging the terms of peace. We shall dictate them on the field of battle, or in the capital of the beaten foe. They must be severe, but they will be rigidly just, and for them we shall ask the approval of no tribunal but our own. To the counsels of neutrals we shall lend a respectful hearing, but the decision will be for the Allies themselves and for none other. —London Globe.

THE GIRDLE OF FRIENDSHIP.

She gathered at her slender waist
The beauteous robes she wore,
Its folds of golden belt embraced,
One rose-hued gem it bore.

The girdle shrank, its lessening round
Still kept the shining gem,
But now her flowing locks it bound,
A lustrious diadem.

And narrower still the circlet grew;
Behold! a glittering band;
Its roseate diamond set a-new,
Her necks white column spanned.

Suns rise and set; the straining clasp
The shortened links resist,
Yet flashes in a bracelet's grasp,
The diamonds, on her wrist.

At length, the round of changes past,
The thieving years could bring,
The jewel glittering to the last,
Still sparkles in a ring.

So link by link, our friendships part,
So loosen, break, and fall,
A narrowing zone, the loving heart
Lives changeless through them all.
—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

AN ENGLISH APOLOGIST FOR GERMAN "CULTURE"

A book that is attracting many readers is "Germany and England," by the late Professor J. A. Cramb. When cut off by death in October, 1913, he had partly finished the work, the substance of which he gave in four lectures earlier that year, and the book was somewhat loosely and crudely completed for publication in 1914. Sensational in the tragic setting of its genesis, in its hectic energy of style, and in its prediction of a speedy war (p. 133), "Germany and England" has run through a dozen editions.

What Cramb had to say on the sentiment and ambitions of the German people is of interest, as he not only had lived for some time in Germany, studying at a university there, but was a professor of modern history with special knowledge of German history and literature, and, most important perhaps of all, was an enthusiastic admirer, not a denouncer, of Nietzsche, Treitschke, and the Pan-German ideals. He lectured and wrote, in fact, to stir up his fellow-countrymen to appreciate and emulate the German philosophy and system of life. What he says of the German character cannot be held to be a malicious caricature. If he errs, it is on the side of over-partiality.

Very striking is his evident approval of the new religion and ethics of present-day Germany. He says, page 120:

"Germany shall not confront the twentieth century and its thronging vicissitudes as the worshipper of an alien God, thrall of an alien morality" (the Christian, imported from Asia). "With the dawn-star above her brow, the New Germany, knit once more to the divine genius within herself, delivered from the loathed burden of the past, the cancer of the centuries, confronts the vast darkness" (ie, of the future).

The "loathed burden of the past, the cancer," is the Christian religion, rather candidly designated by Mr. Cramb. He is no "master of the under-statement," as he praises Lord Salisbury for having been. The "divine genius," native to Germany itself, is the religion of Odin (see pages 97, 116, 117, 137), "the religion of Valor," of war. Many of us would call such "divine genius" a spirit of barbarism. Nietzsche is the great teacher the exponent of Napoleonism, the life of risks and pains to assert one's power and control over one's fellow-men. If he means to inculcate anything, Cramb means to rouse Englishmen to accept the Nietzschean philosophy, and to embody it politically in conscription, war and extension of territory (pp. 105-106). He means to suggest that Christianity had better be thrown overboard. The religion of renunciation and of service to humanity is to be replaced by that of will-to-power or domineering; the self-assertion praised by Carducci in his Hymn to Satan. Suck the whole orange of life for yourself, don't hand it to your neighbour, and simply enjoy his smiles and the smell. In other words, let us prefer the "divine genius" of the Gadarene swine, that rushed with a hundred devils in them over the cliff, to the teaching of the Prince of Peace.

If there is one thing that Cramb gets warmer over than another it is in denouncing Pasificism. It is foolish, dangerous and vicious, this idea of universal peace. It is "loathsome sentiment" (p. 45). The pacificists are among England's "chief enemies" (p. 66). War is so moral and spiritual a thing that it is even "above religion" (p. 60), or is religion itself.

This professor was evidently a rich, ripe specimen of the latter-day Prusso-Tory, who sees everything going to rack and ruin under a government of radicals, economists and pacificists. He was of a certain limelight, melo-dramatic type of professor, common enough in Germany, applying distorted history and science to render the confusion of politics worse confounded, in the screaming style of a Garvin or a Morning Post jingo. He foretold "the inevitable war," but so did all the other Tory scribblers for years—and then it was Russia, not England, that Germany first attacked, contrary to Cramb's view (p. 108, note). Consider the fury of this author (pages 67, 68, 234, etc.), against the Government which has put Britain into (1) a better social and financial position than ever before, (2) a sounder position of defence in every way than ever before—navy ship-shape and overwhelming in force, army for the first time since Cromwell, efficient, the Territorials winning glory (Cramb sneers at them p. 133, like the rest of the Tories), the alliances firm. The Asquith Government needed no Tory hysterics to teach it to be fully prepared. As a Prusso-Tory, eager for violence if only to smother social agitation, Cramb never mentions the Socialist masses of Germany and their vows, never mentions the great democracy of the United States of America as a possible factor in shaping the world's future. He offers us the Nietzschean version of the religion of Odin as a warrant for conscription. John Bull is no gudgeon. None of your new lamps for old in this regard. — London Advertiser.

France Opens Commercial War.

PARIS, Dec. 30.—France is going to make an effort to obtain her share of the world's trade which was formerly in the hands of Germans.

Minister of Commerce Gaston Thomas presided yesterday at a large meeting of merchants and ministers and members of the Paris Chamber of Commerce. He told the business men that this was the time for them to reach out for trade in all countries where Germany previously had been a large purveyor.

Before the meeting adjourned, a committee representing the principal industrial and financial institutions of France had been chosen to organize this work of expansion.

Dr. Hillis Defends Pulpit Attack on German Kaiser

Clergyman, Answering Criticism That Personal Views Should Not Have Been Discussed in Plymouth, Says He Is Not Going to Sacrifice Manhood for Neutrality.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—In the face of numerous protests against his sermon, "Lessons of the Great War," in which he criticised militarism and the German Kaiser, the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, declared that he meant every word he said.

"But in that sermon," he said, "I told but little of what I have come to believe about Germany."

Criticism to the effect that Plymouth Church was not the place to discuss the war from a personal viewpoint was met by the clergyman's statement that it is impossible to believe the war should not be discussed in church as it is everywhere else.

"I believe that it was my duty as minister of Plymouth Church to say just what I did say," stated Dr. Hillis.

In defence of his expression a personal viewpoint Dr. Hillis said:

"Whenever the time comes that I have to add God and the devil together and divide by two in the name of neutrality I'll withdraw. I am not going to sacrifice my manhood for the sake of what some people call neutrality."

Dr. Hillis said it is his belief that all the world must hope for German defeat and must see that Germany is in the wrong.

"I was for Germany five months ago," he continued. "For five years I have been lecturing about the lessons we might learn from Germany. Now I have changed my mind. I see that I was mistaken. I am about to withdraw from the Lecture Bureau my lecture 'The New Germany.'

"Only recently have I realized what German success would mean to the world—how there could be nothing but a world of armed camps, how we in this country would have to adopt militarism in order to live.

"I have praised the Kaiser in some of my sermons, for I believed then in the German ideals. I believed in German progress, German inventions and German principles. But I was wrong.

"I have now become convinced of what I never imagined before—that in the German viewpoint the only sin against the Holy Ghost is military impotency, and, to use Treitschke's words, 'the only virtue is militarism.'"

Dr. Hillis admitted that his sermon meant more than appeared on the surface. He said that while he did not think that his sermon could be construed as a violation of President Wilson's proclamation of neutrality, certain passages in it might be construed as a direct attack against the Kaiser.

"Certain persons in the congregation," said Dr. Hillis, "came to me after the service and told me that I would change my ideas about Germany within six months. If I do change my views, I will certainly retract my words, but my conversion is improbable. The task of converting me should be let out piecemeal as a government contract."

ALDERMAN GREEN A STAUNCH FRIEND OF THE WORKINGMAN

By His Shrewdness and Sagacity the Public Works of the City Were Revived and the Workingmen Kept Employed

Alderman G. Walter Green, who offers his services again as alderman for 1915, has proved himself to be a true friend of the workingman.

It was Alderman Green who came to the assistance of the city during those dark days of August last when the war first broke out, and the banks refused further assistance to the city. As a consequence our public works were summarily stopped without calling the Council together, creating a panic among the workingmen, whose means of livelihood had been withdrawn.

At the very first meeting of the Board of Works, following this action, when everything looked blue and down-hearted, Alderman Green took strong objections to the stoppage of the public works. He was sagacious and hopeful enough to believe there was a remedy to offset this peremptory action of the banks in closing down on the city's credit. He brought forward a scheme which he believed would safeguard both the city's interests and the interests of the workingmen and afford continued work for the unemployed as well.

It was Alderman Green's shrewdness that suggested that short term notes or debentures should be issued, giving our citizens a chance to invest their money in the banks, which was realizing only three per cent. interest, and lending it out to the city at six per cent, on two years' debentures.

Alderman Green's suggestion was hailed with satisfaction; the debentures were quickly bought up, and money was thus provided to continue the prosecution of our public works. It was a shrewd business man's idea that the funds the banks refused the city could be secured from our own public-spirited citizens with but scarcely any cost. The result was that our public works have been proceeded with without delay, and the anxious workingmen kept employed.

The citizens have another opportunity of retaining Alderman Green's valuable services for next year.

BENDER IRATE AT SHAWKEY.

Doesn't Like Story That He Is a Has Been, as Reported.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29 — Chief Bender is irate because of the story alleged to come from Shawkey, in which the later stated that Plank and Bender were done, and never would pitch winning ball again in the American League, and that both were used only against teams they could beat. To this Bender said:

"If Shawkey really said that then I stand convinced there is no gratitude in baseball among players. I taught Shawkey all I know about pitching and then for him to come out with the statement credited to him is showing a spirit that actually startles me. I hardly believe it is true, and will not believe it until I see Shawkey and learn the truth of the matter."

The Chief is spending the winter here at his Tioga home devoting his time to his sporting goods business at which he is one of the best in the business.

Montreater Accused of Arson.

MONTREAL, Dec. 30. — Adelarde Carriere, who is alleged to have been responsible for the fire that on the night of Dec. 12 destroyed the Salle College on Letourneaux street, Maisonneuve, resulting in a loss of about $50,000, appeared in the enquete court yesterday, charged with arson. It was remanded by Judge Loet to await his trial.

VON HINDENBURG MUST RETREAT OR ADVANCE WITHOUT HIS RIGHT

With Austrian Armies Shattered Germans in Front of Warsaw May Be Compelled to Retreat.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—Victorious in Galicia, where the Russians are again closing in around Cracow, after a strategic retreat, the Grand Duke Nicholas will immediately take the offensive against Marshal Von Hindenburg.

The breakdown of the Austrian plan of campaign in the south leaves nothing but retreat for the German forces before Warsaw, unless Von Hindenburg decides to go on without the co-ordination of the crippled right wing.

The following news agency despatch was received from Petrograd:

Austrians Near Dissolution.

"It is gathered from the latest official despatches that the Austrian army is nearing dissolution, and is surrendering prisoners by the thousands. The Austrians are straggling in disorderlyl fashion in the Carpathians.

"The Russians are now holding the Germans in check along the lower Vistula and the Pilica. The German armies were shattered by their futile attacks against the Russian stone wall.

"The Germans have lost many thousands in killed and wounded during the recent fighting."

Says Gallieni's Autos Won The Marne Battle

PARIS, Dec. 30.—It is not generally known that the battle of the Marne was won by auttmobiles. General Gallieni had 400 taxicabs and other light motor cars at his disposal. It will be remembered that Von Kluck with the right of the German army got as far as Champiley. General Gallieni as military governor of Paris had a large force, probably half a million men at his disposal and he was responsible for the defence of Paris.

Gallieni figured that he had more than he really needed and that 70,000 of his men could be spared for work at the front.

Acting entirely upon his own responsibility, he ordered his men to crowd into the automobiles. He made each taxicab carry nine soldiers. It was a curious sight. There were two in each seat, two on the hood, one with the driver and one on each running board.

Within six hours he threw the whole 70,000 against the flank of the Germans at Meaux, about 35 miles from Paris. Von Kluck evidently had not reckoned with such a sortie. He was forced to stop and give battle. The result was the retreat of the Germans from Marne to the Aisne after the sanguinary battle named from the first river.

This is only one of the great exploits of the French army automobile transport service. No other nation in this war has used the motor car with the effectiveness of the French. The automobile transport service is organized as a separate branch. Working with amazing rapidity just after the beginning of the war, the French army officers drafted into this corps men who had been employed in automobile manufacture—foremen, skilled workmen, testers and drivers. The officers were drawn from the manufacturers, agents and other heads of automobile organizations. The heaviest trucks are used for ammunition carriers and lighter commercial vehicles for the food supply. General Mongin commands the whole corps.

Some noted French race drivers are now in the army service. Boillot alternates with the Marquis D'Alburera in driving General Joffre's car. Several machines are kept ready day and night for General Joffre and it is no unusual thing for him to enter one of them and drive the whole length of the battle front in the course of the night.

There are now 15,000 automobiles and 12,000 trucks in the service of the French army.

One of the automobile service corps' biggest feats was the transfer of the British army from Braisne between Coisne and Rheims, to St. Omar, a distance of 170 miles. The 200,000 men were transported to their new positions within three days.

Claims Are Half-hearted

Berlin Bulletin Paves Way for News of Defeats

BERLIN, Dec. 30.—(By wireless to Sayville.) — Among the items given out for publication yesterday by the German official press bureau were the following:—

"The Russians have strengthened their forces opposing the Austrians in Galicia, and the latter, it is understood, will be compelled to make new dispositions, which will require some time. Local military experts are making attempts to picture Russia's occupation of the line of Kroshno-Jasio as being no real gain for the Russians, but, on the contrary, are weakening their position. This view, however, is considered too optimistic, and the fact must be faced that the extreme left wing of the Russians has proved itself superior to its opponents. The present action of the Russians in strengthening their forces there is due to their realization of what an encircling of their flank in Galicia would signify.

"News of importance is likely to come from the Vosges district at any time, since the French have assembled strong forces all along the line of Belfort-Epinal-Toul-Nancy. They still hold all the Vosges passes and appear to be developing new activity along an extended line against Alsace and Sundgau.

"Major Moraht, military expert of The Tagoblatt, in an article discussing the English reconnaissance at Cuxhaven, declares that the landing of troops on the Holstein or North Hanover coast would be extremely difficult in winter, but says even if it were carried out the invaders would get a warm welcome.

"The German Government will permit private traffic on the Belgium Railway from Jan. 1.

"A pastoral letter from all the German Catholic archbishops and bishops calls the world war a divine judgment for human wickedness. The letter lays emphasis on the statement that Germany was not to blame for the outbreak of the war."

FORCE DR. LIEBKNECHT TO ENROLL IN ARMY

PARIS, Dec. 29.—Dr. Karl Liebknecht, the German socialist leader, who was the only member to vote against the war credit at the recent session of the Reichstag, has been enrolled in the German army, according to a despatch to Humanite from the Swiss frontier. This move was decided upon, says the despatch, after his protest against war in the Reichstag as the best means to stop his opposition, a trial on a charge of high treason being considered too dangerous an expedient.

INTENSELY INTERESTING PICTURES OF BELGIUM AND THE WAR

Actual Fighting Around Termonde is Shown, Also Flooding of Belgium

AT THE GRAND

The London Free Press of recent date, referring to the Belgian war pictures which are to be shown here at the Grand Opera House on Friday and Saturday of this week, has the following to say:

"More than $30,000 has already been secured for the Red Cross of the Belgian army for pictures taken on Belgian battlefields with the authority of the Government and now being shown in the United States and Canada. Yesterday afternoon the pictures were shown at the Grand in the afternoon and evening and large audiences followed the fortunes of the plucky Belgians through four reels of intensely interesting pictures depicting war in all its magnificence and horror.

That the pictures are real is true beyond doubt. By the owner's agreement with the Belgian Government one-half of the proceeds are turned over to the Red Cross of that country, and it was only under this agreement that permission was given for the taking of the pictures. Happy, busy cities are to be seen which shortly after take on the appearance of war and later nothing is to be seen but ruins and desolation. The most striking thing that impresses the auditor is the awful lonesomeness of the towns that have been under fire. There are soldiers to be seen, but not a civilian except in isolated cases. There are the refugees in hundreds making their way out of cities under the German shell fire with horror-stricken faces. Refugees with their possessions in wheelbarrows, dog-drawn carts and leading children by the hand, while cripples struggle along the dusty road, are tragic views that are shown. And to see is to realize the horrors of war.

The first reel shows Antwerp and the great Notre Dame Cathedral. The actual fighting around Termonde is vividly reviewed and in succession the battle of Alost, Aerschot and Malines. The flooding of Belgium, which drowned many Germans, is intensely real. Real soldiers in action with the mounted and dead are incidents in the titanic struggle. In addition to the Belgian films there are several others that throw sidelights on the war farther from the battle line, and which if shown in Germany would convince that country of the utter uselessness of further struggle. There are scenes of recruiting for the Kitchener army in England and Ireland, with the Prince of Wales and Sir Edward Carson cheering the men on. The many thousands who are hastening to join the flag would bring home to the greatest pessimist the possibilities of the fighting strength of Britain. The whole entertainment concludes with a humorous film of the Civil War."

Notes From The Campaign

How to get the firemen's vote: Promise the boys a motor driven combination hose and chemical truck. Throw in a Fire Chief's runabout for good measure.

Mayor Buller to John Jones—"Will you support me as mayor for 1915?"

Jones—"Sure I will."

Ald. Duncan to John Jones (two hours later)—"Will you give me a lift?"

Jones—"Bet I will."

The retirement of Ald. McIntyre will eliminate the prospects of two brothers and one brother-in-law serving in the Council at the one time.

A prominent citizen wants to know if Ald. Duncan put the "daub" in Dobbin.

The first Japanese election cigar made its public debut yesterday. Several citizens in the near vicinity had a narrow escape from asphyxiation.

One citizen to another—"Which of the two Mayoralty candidates will undertake to see that I get sewer, water and other civic conveniences for the house that I propose to build?"

"Neither; you will have to build close to the city's assessor to get that."

Election by acclamation for the first time up is what you might call a pretty fair introduction.

The Market Senate is in session each day. A special emergency meeting was held this morning when it was decided to support the candidate who would devise a means of lowering the tax rate.

Having digested the war shock, some of the municipal aspirants will doubtless be prepared to digest a still greater shock.

Men propose but the electors dispose.

Ald. McIntyre has retired from the spotlight of municipal politics. He faried to qualify last evening.

Ald. Geo. Evans will have the honour and distinction of sitting within conversation distance of the press table. In this he will share honours with the Mayor.

At the rate the present Mayor is travelling he will have his arm in a sling before the campaign is over.

Did you see Mayor Buller and Ald. Duncan canvassing together yesterday? We did.

Or did you receive one of Mayor Buller's New Year's greeting cards. They were distributed before the campaign opened.

ALLIES DRIVE GERMANS BACK AT TWO POINTS

Advance Along Belgian Coast From Nieuport Results in a Notable Success—War Office Bulletins

PARIS, Dec. 30.—Definite and important successes were recorded by the allies in their advance from Nieuport and in their attack on Muhlhausen—the two extremes of the battle-front—in official statements issued yesterday by the French War Office.

While the Franco-Belgian contingents pressing the Germans back along the Belgian coast were occupying St. Georges, in the environs of which there had been most bitter fighting, and establishing themselves firmly in that position two miles east of Nieuport, the French forces commanded by Gen. Pau, operating in upper Alsace, were investing Steinbach, north of the line between Cernay and Thann.

The success of Gen. Pau's operations is considered highly significant as showing the approach of the long-awaited weakening of the German defensive on this line.

It was at Steinbach only a fortnight ago that the Germans, by a terrific cannonade, followed by vigorous assaults of infantry brought from Uffholz to the east, forced the French to retire and evacuate all the ground they had gained in this particular region.

The new French howitzers now have made their appearance on the French line in this field, and it was by the overwhelming fire of these batteries that the French established their artillery supremacy, which led finally to their encroachment upon the German works, resulting in the successful investment of the town.

The Germans did not fall back upon their supporting lines without first giving a good account of themselves, and the fighting that preceded the drawing of the French circle of steel about Steinbach was more terrific.

The main attack was made from the north and west. The forces facing to the eastward occupied the attention of the main German front, while the flanking column worked around the hill to the west of north of the town and took possession of the ruins of the chateau to the northwest of the village, which had been wrecked by the gun-fire of the previous engagement. Strategically, the possession of this pylé is of great advantage to the French, for it permits of the mounting of heavy cannon which have been brought up to command the main batteries defending the town.

The following bulletin was issued by the French War Office yesterday:

"No incident of note has been reported from the front this evening.

"An official German communication, dated Dec. 26, and transmitted generally to all stations where wireless telegrams are copied, refers to the fact that it often happens that the shells used by the German field artillery do not explode. At the same time the statement is made that these shells were taken by capture from the French or the Belgians.

"The Germans, who daily have excellent opportunities to observe the efficacy of the French artillery, have now discovered a new quality in our guns. This is that they are dangerous only when operated by Frenchmen.

"Let us believe that this is only one more of the romantic tales painstakingly spread abroad by the German wireless system.

"In Belgium the village of St. Georges has been occupied by our troops, who have established themselves in this location.

"From the Lys to the Somme the enemy has bombarded our positions rather violently in the vicinity of Rebelle, at St. Aublin, at Le Quesnoy and at Pouchoir, to the northwest of Roye.

"There has been calm along the front between the Somme and the Argonne.

"We have gained a little ground in the Argonne, notably in the forest of La Grurie, in the forest of Bolante and in the forest of Courte Chausses.

"On the heights of the Meuse several German counter-attacks have been repulsed in the forest of Le Bouchot, which is northeast of Troyon.

"The forces of the enemy which had occupied our trenches in the vicinity of the redoubt in the burned forest to the west of Apremont have been driven out after three successive counter-attacks.

"In upper Alsace, following a violent engagement we are to-day closely investing Seinbach, and our forces have taken possession of the ruins of the Chateau, which is located at the northwest of this village."

BRITAIN SURPRISED

American Protest Against Detention Arouses Excitement

INDEMNITY FOR LOSSES

LONDON, Dec. 30.—The American note of protest against the British treatment of American commerce and insisting upon an early improvement came as a complete surprise to the British public, as there had been virtually no intimation that any friction had arisen between the two Governments.

The placards posted by the evening papers were given over exclusively to the American note, and the papers gave it the largest headlines they have given any news during the past month. Consequently the British people regard this as one of the most important occurrences of the whole war. Nothing of the kind since President Cleveland's Venezuelan message has produced such a sensation.

The first impression of the public is that the note may create friction and perhaps some unfriendly feeling, although the newspapers point out that it specifically states that the representations were made in a friendly spirit.

The situation is comparable to that which arose at the time of the South African war, when neutral shippers began to send cargoes intended for the Transvaal Republic to the neutral port of Delagoa Bay.

The Washington note had no reached the Foreign Office yesterday afternoon, but it could not have been dealt with had it arrived, as Sir Edward Grey, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, who has been away for the Christmas holidays, is not returning until to-day.

Indemnity Due Says Wilson.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30. — President Wilson, referring yesterday to the American note to Great Britain insisting on better treatment for American commerce, declared that large damages would eventually have to be paid by England for unlawful detention of American cargoes.

The President pointed out that many protests previously had been sent in specific cases and that if the contentions of the American Government were correct, as he was firmly convinced it was, plans for indemnification ultimately would have to be met by Great Britain. Supplementary to previous protests, the new note, the President explained, represented fully the position of the United States, saying that, so far as theory was concerned, there really was no dispute on the point raised, because England herself in previous wars had taken exactly the American position.

President Wilson yesterday appealed to American shippers of non-contraband goods; such as cotton, not to allow their cargoes to be mixed with contraband articles. The United States Government, he announced, could deal confidentially with the difficulties which had arisen in the treatment of American commerce by [illegible]

This statement followed a discussion by the President with his Cabinet yesterday of the general shipping situation and of the note despatched Monday to Great Britain, protesting at length against the British policy of prolonged detentions of cargoes and other interference with American trade.

There was a confident feeling in diplomatic quarters that steps would be taken by other leading nations of this hemisphere, as well as by some neutrals, to point out to Great Britain their acquiescence in the American point of view.

SHIP LOST IN PORT.

Royal Mail Steamer Trent Sinks at Dock In London.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—A cablegram announcing the sinking at London of the Royal Mail steamship Trent was posted at the Maritime Exchange here yesterday. It was said that the Trent went down at her dock with her inward cargo aboard. Further details were lacking.

The Trent reached London Dec. 23, and it is believed here she docked at Tilbury, fifteen miles from London.

The Trent sailed from this port for Colon and London on Nov. 21. She is 410 feet long and has a beam of 50 feet and a depth of 33 feet. She was built in 1900.

2,400 German Prisoners Are Removed To British Prison Ships

Those Interned at Newbury Race Track Are Transferred to Three Vessels at Southend, Where They Live Like Passengers

Enjoying a Voyage

SOUTHEND, Eng., Dec. 28—German prisoners who were interned at the race-track at Newbury concerning which so many complaints were made in German newspapers, have been removed to other places, many of them being on board three English prison ships here, in command of Colonel De Cordes, a retired officer who had long experience in charge of prison camps in the South African war.

Baron Louis Anton von Horst whose citizenship has been much in question since the opening of the war, is among the prominent men held on board the Prince Edward, a ship formerly in service between Bristol and Canadian ports, which has been converted into a prison ship, together with the Saxonia and the Ivernia, of the Cunard line.

Baron von Horst is well known in California, where he has lived much of his life and has many relatives. His attorneys say he is really an American, as his father was naturalized in the United States and consequently the present Baron, who was then under age, automatically became an American citizen.

Baron von Horst, however, accepted a baronetcy from the Duchy of Saxe-Coburg, and believed he had surrendered his American citizenship in doing so. At least he registered in London, at the opening of the war as an alien enemy. His case, under representations from the American Embassy, is under consideration.

German prisoners are delighted with the transfer to the roomy passenger ships, where they can keep warm and dry, in contrast to the unfavourable conditions under which they lived under canvas and in stables at the Newbury race course.

Each of the three prison ships here has about eight hundred Germans on board. Sanitary conditions are excellent, and it is not unlikely that more vessels will be added to the prison fleet, as this means of caring for Germans is especially satisfactory.

The prisoners eat from china and live much as passengers would on an ordinary sea voyage, except that their belongings are carefully searched and military discipline is enforced.

At Queen's Ferry, in Wales, an unused iron works has been taken over for the use of prisoners, and several hundred men are quartered in the building, which affords an admirable shelter. The establishment overlooks the sea, and is surrounded by several acres of land enclosed in a high board fence on three sides. The prisoners have a large ground for football, baseball and other sports.

Lack of employment is the great problem in all the prison camps. Bad weather makes sports impossible and the men are unable to amuse themselves satisfactorily in their cramped quarters. In many of the camps they have learned to knit and busy themselves making socks and neck scarfs.

INSIST ON TARTAN KILTS.

Or, If They Must be of Khaki, They Shall Not be "Pebble Skirts."

LONDON, Dec. 28.—A recent official announcement that in view of the necessity for economizing the [illegible] material Highland regiments would in future be supplied with a uniform of khaki kilts disgruntled the Scots, and an additional order just issued to the effect that two yards less cloth will be used in making the kilts has increased the discontent.

The Highlanders are scornfully indignant, and declare they object to wearing hobble skirts. Many persons believe the latest order will seriously affect recruiting in Scotland.

Highland associations, Scottish members of Parliament, and others are sending influential protests to the War Office against the innovation. The question is certainly a matter of sentiment with the Highlanders. Their attachment to clan tartans cannot be realized by other races, but it is so strong that many men would rather risk the [illegible]

OTTAWA, Dec. 30.—Next Sunday is the day appointed for prayer throughout the Empire for the success of Great Britain and her allies in the war for an early peace. The proclamation issued calls for "a day of humble prayer and intercession to Almighty God on behalf of the cause undertaken by our Empire and our allies, and of those who are offering their lives for it and for a speedy and favorable peace, that shall be founded on understanding and not hatred, to the end that peace shall endure."

Copies of the proclamation were sent to the heads of all the religious denominations, and it is expected that the day will be observed in every city and town and rural district throughout the Dominion.

RUSSIAN SUCCESS IS BETTER THAN REPORTED

Tide of Battle Has Turned Strongly in Favour of the Russian Armies —German Onslaughts on Line Before Warsaw Are Effectually Checked

LONDON, Dec. 30. — News coming from the Russian front was highly gratifying to the allies. There has been a slackening of the fighting in northern Poland between the lower Vistula and Pilica rivers, where the Russians have captured some German trenches, prisoners and guns—an indication, it is believed here, that the German frontal attack on the army guarding Warsaw has been definitely checked.

In southern Poland the Russians also record some successes, while in Galicia they have apparently inflicted a defeat on the Austrians almost as serious as that which Emperor Francis' troops suffered in Servia.

Since their latest offensive commenced the Russians have taken 50,000 Austrian prisoners and captured many guns, according to the Russian official reports, and if, as was estimated, Austria had between three and four army corps on its re-entry into Galicia, it must have lost more than a third of the number in killed, wounded and prisoners. The state of the roads, which are deep in mud, has prevented the Russians from making the pursuit as effective as it might have done could the Cossacks have found a firm footing for their horses.

The Russian General Staff has issued the following bulletin:

"To-day, between the lower Vistula and the Pilica, only fighting of small importance took place. The Germans left their trenches on the right bank of the Bzura, near the village of Witz-trzewicz, and fell back on the left bank of the Rzura.

"On the River Rawka our heavy artillery is fighting efficaciously a large number of German batteries of heavy guns.

"In the region of Bolimovo our attacks have alternated with those of the Germans.

"We have dislodged the enemy from a trench near the village of Sumino, which they had taken from us previously, by a counter-attack, in which we captured machine guns and prisoners.

"On the centre, between the Pilica and the upper Vistula, only cannonading was heard. We made progress on the two wings.

"During an attack on a German redoubt to the south of Inow Lods, we captured three machine guns.

"Our troops met with success while crossing the lower Nida in the taking by storm of the villages of Starokorosin and Senislavice, which were well fortified. During the fighting we captured 50 Austrian officers, over 1,700 soldiers and three machine guns.

"In western Galicia we have made progress in spite of the almost impassable condition of the country, due to mud. We have driven the enemy from the front of Stromulk-Sorlice-Jaslinka, taking guns and a large number of machine guns.

"During the first half of December (old style calendar), we captured 50,000 Austrians."

CANADIAN SOLDIER SUICIDES IN CAMP

LONDON, Dec. 29.—A verdict of suicide was handed down this evening by a coroner's jury which held an inquest on the body of a man said to be Ralph K. Danforth, a medical practitioner of 119 Queen Anne Street, Milwaukee, who was a member of the Canadian contingent.

According to the testimony, the man was found dead in his room in a hotel with a wound in his throat, which evidently had been self-inflicted. Several empty bottles on a table indicated that he might also have taken poison. A photograph of a woman was in the dead man's lap. In his pockets was only twopence.

No evidence was adduced to show why the man committed suicide.

Island of Heligoland Another Gibraltar Says Ex.-U. S. Consul

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—The first intimate description of the fortifications of Heligoland, Germany's guarding fortress at the mouth of the Elbe, to come out of the cloud of secrecy thrown around the defences of the Kaiser's Empire, was brought back yesterday by Richard Wackerow, for seven years U. S. consul at Breslau.

Wackerow believes he is the only foreigner who has been allowed to land on Heligoland since the outbreak of the war, but admits that there were many features of the little island's defence which were kept hidden from him.

"Heligoland is a second Gibraltar," said Wackerow. "The place is guarded by an almost unbelievable system of defence. Long channels have been cut in the solid rock of the cliff, face seaward, and in these no less than 142 Krupp disappearing guns of the 42-centimetre type have been mounted. There are 364 guns altogether in the island defence.

"Ten concentric rows of mines guard the entrance to Heligoland by night, arranged at different levels to catch submarines as well as surface ships. A great fleet of submarines is assembled behind Heligoland, as well as the German high seas fleet. I do not think it is the intention of the Germans to send out their entire fleet to engage the British until the odds against it have been whittled down."

Wackerow said the Germans admitted that they had lost in killed alone 800,000 men since the outbreak of the war. They now have three million on both fronts, he added.

COUNT THEIR CHICKENS.

Germans Hint That Prince Otto May Be Ruler of Belgium.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—The Daily News correspondent at Paris says: "The Germans are doing their utmost to force upon the Belgians the conviction that their country is definitely conquered and will become a German State after the fashion of Bavaria and Saxony. They even hint that the future Belgian ruler will be Prince Otto of Windisch-Graetz, who married Princess Elizabeth, daughter of the late Archduke Rudolph, and his widow Stephanie, now Countess Lonyay, daughter of the late King Leopold of Belgium.

Son Of Former Peterboro' Man Wounded In War

Eric Greenwood, of Toronto, second lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, has been wounded while serving in the war. His name appears in the list of casualties issued by the War Office of London last night.

Lieut. Greenwood, when he was graduated from the Royal Military College in the spring of 1911, won the sword of honour and silver medal. He is the older of two brothers and was on duty at Chatham, Eng., when war broke out. He accompanied the first expeditionary force to France. His brother, Harold, had not yet completed his course at Kingston, but was sent over to Britain to take a commission, and may by this time have been sent to the front.

Their father, Lieut.-Col. H. S. Greenwood, a civil engineer, who has been with the Mackenzie-Mann interests and who was himself graduated from the R.M.C. in 1882, is now in London, having placed himself at the service of the War Office. He commanded the 3rd (Canadian) Dragoons in 1899 and saw service in South Africa with C.M.R., and also service in the Natal native rebellion in 1906.

Col. Greenwood is well known in Peterborough, having been employed in the Trent Canal office here some years ago.

PRESENTATION TO MISS HAZEL WALSH

By Members of Holy Trinity Church, Haultain

Special to The Examiner:

MOUNT JULIAN, Dec. 29. — A number of the members of Holy Trinity Church, Haultain, with their friends, met at the home of Miss Hazel Walsh on Wednesday evening last and presented her with a handsome gold bracelet, bearing the inscription—"Hazel. Xmas, 1914."

The following address was read by Mrs. I. D. Church, and the presentation was made by Mrs. W. G. Stone:

Dear Miss Walsh,—We, the members of Holy Trinity Church, Haultain, avail ourselves of this opportunity to express our thanks for your faithful services in our behalf.

We appreciate your services as organist of our beloved church and recognise the fact, that the responsible position, you so ably fill, is not held without great exercise of patience and self-sacrifice on your part.

In token of our esteem we ask you to accept this gift, not as a remuneration for your services, but as a slight token of our thankful appreciation of your faithful service amongst us; and we sincerely hope that you will remain with us, as our organist, for many years to come.

We pray that the blessing of God may attend you and remain with you always.

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love:
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

Signed on behalf the the members.
J. C. STONE, Warden.

Miss Walsh was completely taken by surprise, so much so, she could scarcely give utterance to her feelings, but replied in a very feeling manner, thanking them for their gift and their kindness and said that she had always felt it a great pleasure to be of any assistance in the service of the Lord.

A very pleasant evening was spent in music and social intercourse. Refreshments were served by the

FOWL CONTINUES TO BE PLENTIFUL

The farmers' produce market is more than an ordinary barometer of seasonal activity This morning the market was but a shadow of what existed prior to the date of Santa Claus' annual visitation. This indicates that there is considerably less attention given to the New Year holiday than that of Christmas. That is from a gastronomical standpoint. This morning the market hall was about half filled with buyers and sellers of produce common to that particular market.

Fowl still remains a plentiful commodity. Not all the feathered bipeds of the barnyards were sacrificed on the altar of Yuletide gastronomy. A good-sized turkey could be had for $3, and a goose, for $1.25. Chickens were a few cents higher in price. A fairly good pair brought $1. Some sold for less than that.

Twenty-eight and thirty cents was asked for butter. There is some indication of an increasing supply. The quality was pronounced good by the "toothpick brigade." A few lots of eggs were offered at 45c. One or two sacrificed at 40c in order to get away.

The Outside Market.

Seventy-five cents a bag was offered for potatoes on the outside market. The supply was limited. A few carcasses of meat were disposed of including a small quantity of lamb at 15c a pound.

SUNDAY'S SINGING AT PARK STREET CHURCH

Those who attended the Park Street church on Sunday evening were amply repaid. The opening anthem, "And He Shall Reign" (Simper) was sung with vigour and confidence. The attack and expression being excellent. Miss Nicholls sang her number in splendid voice. During the offertory, Mr. T. Smith palyed "Nazareth" as a 'cello solo, with splendid effect. The closing number, "Hark the Glad Sound" by Mr. Hill, showed some fine effects.

Rev. E. P. H. King of Almonte, preached.

THE COLLECTION OF GARBAGE

The new garbage contractors will commence their work on Saturday next, and as the service will be twice a week throughout the year instead of only during the summer months as formerly, it will be necessary to reconstruct the routes as follows, which are the same as last summer:

Mondays and Thursdays—All south of Charlotte, from the river to Monaghan road.

Tuesday and Fridays—All north of Charlotte and east of Aylmer to the river.

Wednesdays and Saturdays — All north of Charlotte and west of Aylmer to Monaghan road.

To ensure efficient service it is necessary to follow the regulations closely.

Put your garbage and ashes out on the morning of day of collection not later than eight o'clock.

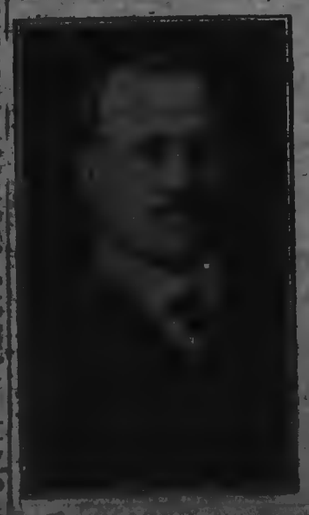
Don't Wait.

Don't wait till the garbage waggon has passed the house before you bring your pail out, and then expect the collector to retrace his steps. Wrap all garbage in paper to prevent freezing to the can and keep cover on can. This will lengthen the life of the receptacle, as the contents can then be emptied without the use of a crowbar.

Cardboard boxes or boxes without lids are not suitable receptacles for garbage, and will not be allowed. Also they will be confiscated. Only garbage pails or other receptacles approved by the Sanitary Inspector are permitted by the By-law.

Don't send in complaints about non-collection before the collectors have made their rounds, or you are sure you have been overlooked. This is frequently being done and is not fair to the collector.

There will be no collection on New Year's Day.



WONDERFUL DEVELOPMENT

New System of Railways May Be Linked Up With Lines in British Columbia

The development of Alaska, which is now occupying the attention of the United States Government, will benefit British Columbia very considerably, experts say.

Indeed, the Pacific Coast Province is looking forward to the time when the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific will be linked up to the system of Alaskan Railways, about to be built by the United States, thus providing a new northern avenue of commerce for the production of the Canadian farmer and manufacturer.

The Grand Trunk Pacific, with its through service to the Coast, has already brought Alaska nearer to the big traffic centres of the United States. From Prince Rupert the Alaskan boundary can be reached by a steamship trip of forty miles and the traveller returning from the land of the Northern Lights can be well on his way to Chicago over the new Transcontinental route before he would reach Seattle by the older method of travelling down the coast by steamship.

Governor Strong of Alaska, in his annual report, just published, says that "everything done in Finland in population, wealth, and material development is possible in Alaska on a much larger scale." With a climate very like that of Alaska and with one-fourth of Alaska's area Finland supports two million seven hundred and fifty thousand people, she has over three million head of live stock; she produces annually some nine hundred thousand tons of grain and legumes. This development is in part a result of good roads, canals and a railway system aggregating two thousand five hundred miles of line. The new railways and waggon roads building in British Columbia and the Yukon will diminish Alaska's severe handicap in transportation matters, and as Alaska's fishing, mining and farming opportunities are much greater than those of Finland. British Columbia's northern neighbour has obviously a bright future.

During 1915, Alaska will be visited by thousands of tourists, for a side trip through its scenic wonders will be one of the features of the Grand Trunk Pacific route to the Exposition at San Francisco and San Diego.

METHODIST BOYS CONTINUE SESSIONS

Splendid Address Last Night by the Rev. J. H. Arnupp--Rev. T. L. Farewell and Mr. Taylor Statten Spoke at This Morning's Session

In the George Street Church, last night, speaking to the Methodist Boys' Conference, the Rev. J. H. Arnupp delivered an inspiring address on the "Call to Arms." He said, in opening, that the purpose of the deelgates coming to the Conference was to train for service, and that the supreme qualification was the consciousness of a great job to be done. We looked upon the running of the Marathon race as the greatest athletic achievement, and yet the young Greek who ran the original Marathon covered the twenty-six miles between the battlefields and the City of Athens to tell the people that a great victory had been won, and that the City had been saved. The sense of a great thing to do also gave a better purpose for the original race that which Tom Longboat or any of his ilk entered that famous race with.

Last year it was a difficult matter for our Regiments of Militia to recruit up to full strength, to go to the Niagara training camp. Some of the Regiments were in such straits for men that they hired the unemployed to fill up the ranks for the trip. But just as soon as this war broke out, and hostilities commenced, the regiments were filled up very quickly, and moved off to the front. They had been filled to proper strength twice already and could be for several times more, just because there was something worth while to be done at the other end of the line. That was the reason why there were six or seven million men on the battle-lines of Europe.

The real question before the young men was not their training but what they were going to do when their training had been completed. When the war is over, said the speaker, there will be nearly 10,000,000 men out of employment, which will mean a very serious thing for the various countries involved. Once a rebellion was started in England through the unrest of the soldiers who had returned from the war in France, and were unemployed.

To the two hundred young men of the Conference he put forth the challenge, "What are you going to do when you go back?" For every one fellow at the Conference there were ten or fifteen or fifty fellows in the village, town, or city, or community from which they came. In the whole of the Dominion there were 1,000,000 young men and in the English speaking world there were 10,000,000 of them. The great question was, "How are we going to call them all out into service."

The call, to get a widespread response, must have three elements in it:

First.—A cause worth living (or dying) for.

Second.—A campaign big enough to be worth while.

Third.—A leader men are willing to trust and follow.

These three requisites were to be had in the principles, programme, and person of Jesus Christ. The principles referred to were the viewpoint of the world as a large home with God as the father and all men as brothers. Secondly, the presence in the world of a risen and living Saviour of men, and thirdly, the possibility that each man has for power, for purity, and service, and the realization of his ideals.

The programme of Jesus Christ was referred to as the greatest job ever tackled in the history of the world. Although He had lived His whole life in a country not much bigger than the County of Peterborough His plan included every person and every country in the world. He had started the biggest war for the best cause against the heaviest odds the world has ever seen.

In referring to the person of Jesus as a leader the speaker told some of his boyhood experiences which had led him to trust and follow Jesus, and take his programme for his own life.

The Methodist Boys' Conference continued their session this morning, when addresses were given by the Rev. F. L. Farewell and Mr. Taylor Statten on the "Spiritual and Service Standards of the Fold-fold Life."

It was for the delegates, said the Rev. F. L. Farewll, to see the invisible, to reach out after the attainable, and do the impossible. That was the challenge to Christianity—there were many obstacles in the way, many sacrifices to make and much to pay. When we looked at impossible things from the viewpoint of ourselves linked with God they became possible.

Intellectually and physically the German Empire was on a high national plane. But the end and aim of the individual, industry and the State was power, force, dominion. The weakness of Germany was that she conceived only the ideal that the State stood for power. On the other hand, Great Britain had enlisted the sympathy of the neutral nations because of her service to the world. No one, and no nation, could become really great unless they were linked to God.

The speaker proposed to take up the spiritual side of the four-fold standard. A man's life and character were only worthy in proportion to the contribution they made towards the great purpose of bringing in the Kingdom of God.

Environment, companionship, heredity, our reading, all contributed to our success and failure. But what makes most for our success or failure was the choices we made, our choice of environment, companionship and reading.

Three choices are made before a young man is twenty-five years of age. Firstly, he made the choice of what relationship he should assume to Jesus Christ. If we ignore Christ we do not get away from the issue, but range ourselves among the enemies of Christ. The normal life was to go right forward in the way God would have us go—the way our better selves always dictate.

The second choice is "What am I going to be? What am I going to do?" One could work on the farm, not so much for the money or profit, but because by staying on the farm they are raising produce to feed God's people. There were unlimited opportunities for young men to make good on the farms of Ontario. To stay and succeed in scientific, intensive farming was a great challenge to the young men.

When he was about 15 years of age he was just the average boy, who could smoke and play cards and steal down the river on a Sunday afternoon for a romp with the fellows. When he became identified with the Church, and became converted, the fellows told him that they thought he would be the last man to join the Church. He did not experience any overwhelming emotion when his conversion took place, but simply took his stand with God. So if any fellow felt that he had not been converted because he had not felt that joyous emotion — let them forget it. It depended on the boy's temperament whether he experienced such an emotion or not.

At an annual conference it became his ambition to become a minister, and he preached his first sermon in Muskoka. The speaker said that he believed that the greatest field of service was in the ministry. Not in the narrowest sense of the word, but in a ministry where the pastor carried his ideals and teachings down into every [illegible]

Soon after his decision to enter the ministry, Dr. Stephenson came into his life, and he and a group of young men organized some Epworth Leagues to send missionaries to the foreign field. Later he himself decided to offer himself, but owing to the fact that his mother, an invalid, would not give her consent, he could not go. But he remained a foreign missionary in the home field. He was willing to go to the foreign field, but circumstances ruled that he should remain in Canada.

The third choice was that of "Where will I spend my life?" The speaker said that the young men had passed the individualistic stage of life and in any game were willing to play where the captain of the team said. So in the game of bringing the whole world to Christ, He was the captain. India, China, Japan, etc., was the battfield, and Canada was the infield. The young men should be willing to say, "I will play wherever you wish Captain. In the outfields of China, Japan and India, or in the infield of this Dominion."

In the spiritual standard there were eight divisions, as follows:

1. Church and Sunday School.
2. Mid-week Bible Classes.
3. Daily Bible Reading.
4. Religion in Architecture.
5. Religion in Music.
6. Religion in Art.
7. Religion in Nature.
8. Religion in Astronomy.

Mr. Taylor Statten dealt with the Service Standard of the Four-fold Life." He wished to bring to the attention of the fellows the result of [illegible] being done in the world to-day. [illegible] Christ. The line on the chart reaching its highest point at 16 years of age, showing that the greatest [illegible] being done was made between 14 and 18 years of age. A chart made from an interview with criminals corresponded almost exactly.

The question naturally arose, "Under what influences are the young men of this country making their decision?" Three great factors entered into a boy's life — the home, church and school. Up till twelve years of age the influence of the mothers predominated, but during the time the boys are making their great decisions the influence of most mothers was apt to be lowest. The influence of the fathers came into the boys life at 6 or 7 years of age, when they were the idols and heroes of their son's life. But a little later, between the ages of nine and ten, the fathers, through pressure of business, allow a barrier to come between them and their boys which might never be broken down. Unfortunately the influence of the fathers was too low at the decisive period.

Four out of five fellows left school at 14, so that the influence of the school at the decision period was not great. While designed to inspire along intellectual lines, were not intended to help in making the greatest decision of all decisions — for Jesus Christ. In connection with Sunday schools, figures showed that at 13 years of age five per cent. of the boys left Sunday school, at 14 years of age 10 per cent., at 18, 50 per cent., and among schoolboys, 85 per cent. These figures increased until finally 64 per cent. left Sunday school.

The positive influences were not for the best. They were the "gang" — companions, chums and friends. Then there was the Sunday school teacher. Bible classes of boys between 14 and 18 should not exceed nine in number, so that the teacher could size up the needs of each particular fellow and meet his needs. Life was like a baseball game, where every fellow came up to bat and Satan was throwing the balls over the plate. Some fellows, through adverse conditions, are retired at once. To another the balls came over slowly, and he reached first base. And the work was not done when first base was reached, but every fellow had to get home—to score.

In the service standard of the four-fold life there were 8 divisions:

1. Member of Boys' Organization.
2. Ability to Entertain.
3. Training for Service.
4. Personal Service.
5. Good Citizenship.
6. Clean Speech, Clean Living and Clean Athletics.
7. Choosing Life Work.
8. Nature Study.

A GOOD CHOICE

Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Mr. G. N. Gordon is a candidate for the Board of Education and two other men are running also. It seems to me that it is time for a change and to break up the old ring which has been running the Board of Education for many years. They have done their best to keep others out, and new blood is needed in this old body.

The three candidates have taken an active part in public affairs, and Mr. Gordon particularly has had considerable municipal experience, where he was always active and progressive and watched the interests of the workingman while in the Council, and the anxiety of the old members of the Board to keep him out of the Board of Education, is a pretty good sign that he is not wanted there, and is a very good reason why the public should see him elected. There has been too much friendship altogether between the members of the Board. A man who is inclined to stir up trouble, and has a tendency to fight like Mr. Gordon has, should be elected.—Yours truly,

RATEPAYER.

Common Sense Test.

"If the War Office wanted to stop football they would not be long in saying so. The Government in their replies to questions in the House of Commons last week, plainly indicated that any change would not be restricted to one sport alone. Football is being played in France, Germany and Austria. Why should it be debarred in England, which is suffering least, and is not on the base of its operations? asks the Athletic News.

But Mr .Asquith, like a sensible man, without any special knowledge of an intricate question, frankly stated that he did not consider that a case existed for legislation to suppress all professional matches during the continuance of the war. He appealed to the general good sense of the football players and the community.

That is to say, if we stop football we must suppress other sports and amusements. All must be treated alike, and general good sense will guide the authorities in football."

An Old Favourite.

Tom M'Dermott, who was at one time a shining light in the Chelsea team, has enlisted in the 9th Battalion of the Highland Light Infantry, and is stationed at Plymouth.

M'Dermott has been made captain of the football team of the regiment, and if the players closely follow his advice they are pretty certain to prove a good side, for Tom was ever a football genius. When with Chelsea he had a deal to do with the success of George Hildson, and was never tired coaching the West Ham man in his youthful days.

Curiously enough, M'Dermott and James Sharp, the Chelsea fullback, made their debut in senior football in the same game, playing for the Dundee team against a local side named the Wanderers. Both played so well that they were signed the same night and played against the Edinburgh Hibernians on the following Saturday, signalizing their appearance by winning the match for their side. By common consent they were voted the best players on the field, which was a rare distinction for two youths, neither of whom had seen his 18th birthday.

You do not pick up many players of the class of M'Dermott and Sharp nowadays, more's the pity.

Speed Not Essential

In football the race is not always to the swift (says Jephcott, of West Bromwich Albion). This is probably why men like Hogg, of Dundee, late of Sunderland; Alec Raisbeck, of Hamilton, late of Liverpool; and May, Greenock, Morton, late of Derby County, to name only those who first occur to my mind, are able to continue to play with success in Scotland long after their usefulness with their English clubs was considered at an end. Scotland was the birthplace of scientific football, and its players have remained true to tradition.

HOCKEY GOSSIP

The following junior players are requested to be at the rink to-night at 7 o'clock for the practice game with the intermediates: Legros, Long, Smyth, Knapman, Jackson, Richardson, Rose, O'Connell, Wheeler. The same squad will be used Thursday night in the game with the Old Boys' team. Morrow will not be home in time for either of these games, as he is spending New Year's week in Toronto.

All intermediate players are expected out to-night for a practice against the juniors. The intermediates need a lot of work before they are ready and no player should miss a practice.

Junior players who have received complimentary tickets and who are not attending practice will be given the choice of turning out at the workouts or of having their tickets cancelled.

The intermediates game in Toronto on Friday night with Toronto Rowing Club will be a good workout for next Tuesdays game in Picton. And it would not be a bad policy to give two or three juniors a chance to get into the game for a time at least. Substitutes will be allowed of course. Jim Sutherland did that stunt when he took half of his junior team along with the Frontenac seniors on the trip to Detroit an Cleveland last year. And the young Frontenacs showed the benefit of the seasoning when they played there.

The game with the Old Boys to-morrow night will be a good test for the local juniors. Wilfrid Stratton has collected a good bunch together and the local youngsters shouldn't have to face anything harder in their group than this combination, especially as the Old Boys are not held down to any age limit.

Come and see a good game of hockey, shake the old year out and help along the Salvation Army home, all for 25c., at Brock Street rink to-morrow night. The Old Boys and Peterborough junior O.H.A. team will furnish the hockey excitement.

The lighting at Peterborough rink has been materially improved. It is now as good as that in any rink in Ontario, barring the Toronto Arena.—Toronto Star.

Picton's victory over Belleville last night was a surprise. So was Bowmanville's shooting at Peterborough. The "Rubber Necks" were of little account last year, but they certainly showed something last night. Now watch them get the crowd.—Toronto Star.

Whitby have registered all their last year's players except Jubb, the goalkeeper, who is in Toronto. The two Blanchards, Smith, Lavery, McIntyre, the Watson Bros. and Rice, are all on the firing line again this season.

"Ack" Hunter, the Toronto boy now playing with Peterborough intermediates, has the unique honour of being selected as captain for four years in succession on four different teams. In 1911 he was captain of Parkdale seniors, and in 1912 he was leader of the T.R. and A.A. squad. Last year he was the "boss" of the Toronto Rowing Club team, and this year he is captain of the Peterborough intermediates. He is with the Peterborough Hydro-Electric office. Hunter has the material for a good intermediate team.—Toronto Star.

The Examiner would be glad to hear from any team desiring to enter the Junior City League this season. So many good players were uncovered last year that it would be a shame to have no league this season.

If Willie or Johnnie show an undue desire to go to church twice and to Sunday school every Sunday for a couple of weeks or so, parents are warned that the improvement may not be lasting. The Church Hockey League may have something to do with the angelic conduct of the aforesaid Willie or Johnnie.

Peterborough intermediates will play Toronto Rowing Club seniors at the Arena New Year's night. With last night's game under their belts, the Petes should give the new T.R.C. squad a rousing battle. "Ack" Hunter will certainly try all he knows to beat his old team-mates.— Toronto Star.

The line-up of the Elmira team sounds like the roster of the Prussian Guard.

Johnny Dow, former Port Hope junior, is registered with the Toronto Rowing Club seniors. Dow has a burst of speed and an occasional outburst of conversation that is liable to startle a new referee.

St. Andrew's hockey team will practice on Thursday from 6.30 to 7.30 at the Brock Street rink. All the members are requested to be present.

The Petes Surprised Says Marsh

"Rubbernecks" Showed Unexpected Class According to Referee

Referee Lou Marsh has the following report of Monday's game in last night's Toronto Star:

PETERBOROUGH, Dec. 29.—Peterborough Intermediates opened the O.H.A. season here with a 10-6 victory over Bowmanville. Bowmanville, a weak team last season, surprised the Petes, and gave them a rattling good battle all the way. They looked bad in the first period, when the local team out-scored them, 4-2, but gingered up in the second half, and though the score stood 9-5 against them at the end of the second period, Peterborough had notched a couple of lucky goals, and the visiting team looked as good as the Petes. In the final session the "Rubber Necks" came with a rush and outscored the local squad 2-1, made it 10-6.

Though the game was clean and hard, two Bowmanville players received injuries. Fred Williams was accidentally hooked in the mouth and lost a tooth, and received a gash in the mouth which required two stitches, while Higginbotham was accidentally slashed in the mouth by a falling player, and came out with two broken teeth. Higginbotham, who was probably the best man on the Bowmanville team, finished the game, but Williams had to retire for repairs.

Peterborough showed up with a rattling good seven, but they lacked team play, and were shy of condition. "Ask" Hunter, the ex-Toronto man on the defence, was a hard man to pass, and rushed well, and he was well helped by Pethick. Park at rover was good all the way, and Halpin at centre showed streaks of good hockey. Kelly on the left wing worked hard, but he had Higginbotham to cover, and found that a hard task. Bowmanville's defence pair, Jones and R. Williams, were both excellent, rushers, and they were well backed up by R. Williams. Hooper at left wing did good work, though inclined to loaf. Greenfield at centre showed in flashes.

Whitby Won From Oshawa

WHITBY, Dec. 29.—Playing in mid-season form, Whitby's intermediates opened the season here to-night with a victory by 5 to 2 over their old-time rivals, Oshawa. The game was played on slow ice, but the first part especially was very fast. Despite the fact that the locals have had little practice, they showed up in great style and should make a strong bid for the group. The period scores were: 2 to 1; 4 to 1; 5 to 2. The line-up:

Oshawa— Goal, Smith; defence, Kemp and Freeman; rover, Hall; centre, Fair; wings, Jacobi, Weiler.

Whitby— Goal, Brown; defence, Smith, McIntyre; rover, A. Blanchard; centre, Lavery; wings, Watson, C. Blanchard.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, Dec. 29.—Trade export business on a liberal scale more than offset in the wheat market today the disturbing influence of the differences with Great Britain about American shipping. After rallying from a sharp decline, prices closed unsettled, but ½c to 1c above last night. Corn gained ¾c to 1c net, and oats ¼c to ½c. In provisions, the outcome was a drop of 2½c to 10c.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 29.—Following the sharp break of yesterday prices today were comparatively steady, fluctuations being within narrow limits. Winnipeg wheat opened unchanged to ⅛c higher, oats unchanged to ⅛c higher, flax unchanged to ¼c lower. Many holders sold out yesterday and were buying back today, which caused a firm undertone. The export trade continued active. Good sales were claimed to be worked today, and a commencement has been made with all rail shipments in both wheat and oats.

Cash trading is insignificant, only a few cars of various grades being offered, and the demand was about equal to the offerings.

Inspections on Monday totalled 256 cars, as against 243 last year, and in sight on Tuesday were 115 cars.

During the last hour heavy buying was reported in the Chicago market by Armour and Patten firms, and over 1,000,000 bushels was said to be worked for export, which caused a sharp rise in values. Winnipeg followed in sympathy.

Winnipeg futures closed 1¼c to 1⅜c higher for wheat, oats closed ¼c to ⅝c higher, and flax ⅛c to ⅛c up.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Dec. 29.—Business in Manitoba spring wheat over the cable was quiet today, there being very little demand, and advices from London stated that Argentine and India were pressing sales. On the other hand there was a good demand from foreign buyers for spring wheat flour and sales of some round lots of choice patent were made for February-March shipment to London at 28s 3d and export patent at 28s 9d. There is also a good export demand for winter wheat flour and Ontario millers have advanced their price 30c per barrel, but there is no actual change on spot yet owing to business being still very quiet.

There was a good enquiry from American buyers for millfeed today, but owing to the limited supplies available here no sales were made. The local trade is fairly active at firm prices. The tone of the butter market is strong and prices have advanced ½c per pound with a good demand. Cheese is quiet but firm. Demand for eggs good.

MINNEAPOLIS GRAIN MARKET.

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 29.—Wheat—No. 1 hard, $1.27; No. 1 northern, $1.23¾ to $1.26½; No. 2 do., $1.20¾ to $1.24½; Dec., $1.22¾.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Dec. 29.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 147 cattle, 527 hogs, 147 sheep and 63 lambs.

Trade was quiet, unless it was for a few of the best cattle, which sold at higher quotations.

Stockers and feeders were unchanged.

A few milkers and springers were on sale, but the market for them was dull at prices ranging from $30 to $75 each.

Choice light lambs of 85 to 90 lbs. weight, were reported as being in demand at $8.25 to $8.50, but heavy lambs were slow of sale at $7 to $7.50.

U. S. WILL TAKE TIME.

And Will Avoid Recognizing German Possession of Belgium.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29.—There is no disposition on the part of Germany to hurry its request for the cancellation of exequatur held by neutral consuls in Belgian territory under German military rule, according to State Department officials. The German note was sent by mail to the Washington Government which will consider the subject at length before making a decision.

It is generally understood that the U. S. will avoid any action which might be considered a political recognition of the German possession of Belgium.

While officials did not comment on the contents of the German communication they intimated that it contained no evidence of any desire to place the American Government or neutral nations in an embarrassing situation.

HOCKEY

The first junior O.H.A. game of the season will be played here on Monday night, when the Port Hope Ontarios will meet the local juniors. The Lake Shore gang started out on the right principle a couple of seasons ago with a young bunch and by this year they should have developed into a rattling good team. There will be a number of new faces on the local team. The boys have been going good in practice.

WAR COSTS BRITAIN $225,000,000 A MONTH.

LONDON, Dec. 29.— Mr. Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in an interview printed in the Paris Humanite, which is reproduced here, said:

"Great Britain's monthly expenditure on the war is $225,000,000. England has put more than two million sailors under arms and before spring five hundred thousand new soldiers will have joined those struggling to bring about an end of Prussian militarism.

"This was done without conscription," remarked Mr. Lloyd George, with pride, "and the soldiers are the pick of the nation—the best and bravest in all classes of society."

J. A. Anderson, President T. A. Thompson, Secretary

Ald. Duncan's Letter to the Labour Union Members in City.

To the Labouring Men of the City.

Gentlemen.—It has been brought to my attention in my canvas that some members of the local Labour Unions write "Socialist" on their ballots, instead of marking them for a candidate for the Mayoralty. Whoever is elected for Mayor next year should represent all the citizens. As far as I know the Council has tried to give the Union men every consideration, and if I am elected I will not forget that the labouring men of this City are numerous and should receive every attention. However, I would want to feel that the Union men were in sympathy with the Council, and that they used their ballots in the regular way. I say it truthfully that I would rather see the Union men mark their ballots for my opponent than that they should destroy them by writing "Socialist" across them. Because they are at least interested in who is elected, and besides no one but the poll clerk learns the number of Socialists in the City.

However, to the Union men I may say that I firmly believe I am as worthy and deserving their support as my opponent. Everybody knows that I am a painter by trade, and if my business has grown it is because I paid the closest attention to it. The City has grown and presented opportunities in which I have shared with the most of the labouring men.

My opponent has termed himself "The People's Candidate" until he almost believes he is. He has always been careful to "mention" the interests of the labouring men whenever a question of expenditure came up. He has "talked" as if he were the only labouring man in eight. I congratulate him upon securing his present incumbency, but I think it ought to be brought out that he is by no means a labourer, nor was he a labourer with the Fuel and Cartage Company. Whoever the people select will be determined on Monday and I repeat that I feel the labouring men and the Union men will be safe in placing their confidence in me, even though I do not, beforehand, claim to be the "people's candidate." I am willing to let the people decide for themselves on Monday whether a phrase of bluff will prove a mere vote catcher.

Yours respectfully,

George H. Duncan.

WEDDING BELLS

GARDINER—FEIR.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Feir of Ops township on Wednesday, Dec. 23rd, 1914, their youngest daughter, Miss Alma was quietly married to Mr. Hubert A. Gardiner of Mt. Pleasant, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Gardiner. The Rev. J. E. Butler, of Cavan, tied the nuptial knot in the presence of the immediate relatives and a few near friends.

The wedding march was played in excellent form by Miss Deyell of Omemee. The young couple were the recipients of a number of useful and suitable presents.

After the interesting and beautiful service had been performed the guests were treated to a very excellent supper and entertained afterwards in a very pleasing manner. Mr. and Mrs. Gardiner will, we are pleased to say, reside near Mount Pleasant, where their many friends will give them hearty welcome.

British Press Receives U. S. Protest With Friendly Editorials.

LONDON, Dec. 31.—All the morning newspapers comment at length on the American Government's note to Great Britain concerning the treatment that is being accorded American commerce by the British fleet, and agree that the American protest should be met by the British Government in the same spirit of friendly good-will as is shown by the note. Generally, however, the newspapers are inclined to await the actual text of the note before engaging in detailed criticism of it.

In the meantime they point out how, inevitably, serious difficulties arise when violations of neutrality are involved. Moreover, they are inclined to dispute the theory that Great Britain alone is responsible for the dislocation of the world's trade, arguing that, even had she remained neutral the fact that a number of other nations were involved in the hostilities must have had a detrimental effect on the world's commerce. In any case, they say, Great Britain was not responsible for the war.

The Times, in an editorial, says:—

"The note is dated Dec. 26, and although the idea may seem fanciful, we cannot help imagining that it was by no accident that the eve of the great festival of peace and good-will was chosen for the despatch of this friendly communication from one of the great branches of the English speaking communities to the other.

Proceeding to state that there are many peculiar conditions arising from the war which justify Great Britain's policy, the editorial continues:—

"The note deals throughout with unshaken faith in our sense of justice. That trust we shall assuredly do our best to preserve. It is quite inconceivable that two sensible peoples on the friendliest of terms with each other should not succeed in overcoming a difficulty of this nature."

Denmark's King Suspends Custom.

COPENHAGEN, Dec. 30. — (Via London.)—The usual custom of the King, receiving each diplomatic mission to Denmark separately on New Year's Day, will not be followed this year, as it is feared that some representatives of a belligerent power might meet the representatives of an enemy power on arriving or departing from the palace instead of the former custom the dean of the diplomatic corps, Dr. G. F. Hagerup, the Norwegian Minister, will present to the King the greetings of the diplomats.

The usual dinner to all the members of the diplomatic corps has been cancelled and the King will entertain he envoys in groups.

BOOTS EAGER TO MEET FOE; ALL CLASSES UNITED

(By Frederic William Wile.)

LONDON, Dec. 18.—My colleague, Carolyn Wilson's, recent London letter to The Tribune, speaking about British "apathy" toward the war, is psychologically interesting, because it is the impression gained by almost every visitor to London who has no opportunity for other than superficial observations.

I venture to be so unchivalrous as to devote one of my own letters to a discussion of Miss Wilson's views, because The Tribune's editorials on "The British Empire," based on her remarks, have attracted critical attention here.

It would be a mistake for Americans to imagine the British empire has reached "the Diocletian period of the Romans." I can assure readers of The Tribune that Britons at this moment are revealing anything but embryonic decadence.

Never Greater Than Now.

Men who know England much better than I do will tell you that the old country, in fact, was never greater than in this hour of crisis. Miss Wilson was misled by the fact that a typical, stodgy English music hall audience did not wave flags and shout when some pictures of marching Belgians were thrown on the cinema screen, as we would have done at home under similar circumstances. She was shocked because London is plastered with appeals to the male population to enlist. She cannot understand why London was not a vortex of patriotic fervour.

In explanation of this I will say that there is no doubt in my mind that the war has come straight home to the heart of the nation. But it is a British heart, which does not beat any the less feelingly because its pulsations are not of the spread eagle timbre.

Similar to Lincoln's Time.

The greatest democracy in Europe is trudging through the self-same valley of superhuman effort in an emergency through which the greatest democracy of the Americas passed more than half a century ago.

President Lincoln had to resort to just as heroic measures to find men to overthrow the rebellion as Kitchener is employing to-day.

If the union had had conscription like Germany the war would have been over much quicker. If England had conscription it would not be necessary to convert Trafalgar square into a billboard or paste enlistment appeals on the windshields of taxicabs.

For the present Kitchener is relying on passion and patriotism. Lincoln did the same as long as he could, but then came bounties and drafts.

Quick and Hearty Response.

Here is how "apathetic" England has been about the war: Within ninety days of its outbreak the great civilian state raised within its own boundaries and placed under arms for training purposes 1,000,000 volunteers.

This total is exclusive of the regular and territorial military establishment, hitherto the only one upon which Kitchener has drawn for the requirements of the expeditionary force fighting on the continent.

The sons of the empire from India, Canada, New Zealand, and Australia have come by the shipload in their tens of thousands to fight for the motherland.

The great national war charity, the Prince of Wales' fund, has reached the unprecedented total of $20,000,000 within four months; a single newspaper, the Times, has raised $3,500,000 within the same period, while countless men and women of all ranks and stations have placed their fortunes, homes, and motor cars at the country's disposal.

"Have Not Begun to Fight."

There is nothing very Diocletian, I submit, about a state of affairs like this. If Rome had marshaled citizens and resources such as these, her history would in all likelihood have never known such a period. Was not it one of our own admirals who, on a certain hard pressed occasion, when asked to surrender by a foe who thought he had us beaten, retorted, "We have not begun to fight!"

I think that about sums up the situation in England at this hour, apathy and all. Time is fighting on the side of the allies. Germany, prepared and armed to the teeth, went in for a gruelling fight, intending to force the pace and carry the day by rushing tactics. Her enemies reeled from the effect of an unexpected blow, but they have never been groggy, and they have no intention whatever of taking the count.

They have "come back," to continue the metaphor, and are growing stronger and longer of breath every hour the bout continues. That is especially and particularly the case with Great Britain; and it would be the sorriest mistake the German general staff had ever made if it figured that a waiting game was the winning game, because England was "apathetic" and tired of the struggle.

Week-End Visits Impressive.

The war is being brought home to people in these islands more and more every hour. Lord Kitchener's new system of brief leaves [illegible] to the fighting men [illegible] thousands of them to spend [illegible] with the folks at home, [illegible] at-homes into the [illegible] contact with what the [illegible]

Dear Sir,—I was talking to a couple of our Postmen and I happened to ask them how the Christmas boxes were coming and I was surprised to hear that the public were forgetting them this year. That is what our "Posties" did and I hope that everybody who forgot their "Posties" on Christmas Day will not let him pass on New Year's Day without remembering him in some way. Dunkirk Bombed By Four Airships

LONDON, Dec. 31—Four German aeroplanes flew several times over the City of Dunfirk edneaday, droppin gbombs as they went, according to the Dunkirk correspondent of the Daily Mail. Soldiers in the streets fired on the machines, and one Taube seemed to be hit, but all got safely away.

The official return of the casualities show that fifteen persons were killed and thirty-two wounded. The bombs were filled with shrapnel.

Two bombs also were dropped on Furnes.

The attack on Furnes was evidently an effort to wipe out the Belgian headquarters where King Albert is at present. No damage was done there.

Two flights over German holdings by French and British dirigible balloons and aeroplanes were also successfully made, according to official announcement from Paris.

The report says dirigible balloons bombarded the railway station at Sarrebourg and several other points along the railroad to Avrecourt. French aeroplanes again dropped bombs on Metz and on German hangars at Frascatti and other points.

French Preparing To Attack Both Metz and Strassburg

Operations in Alsace Are on an Extensive Scale--Troops Are Being Pushed Forward to Support General Pau

CONDITIONS BAD IN THE NORTH

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Dec. 31.—Fighting which is reported increasing in intensity, is in progress along the entire French centre and right. Following the exchange of almost continuous artillegy fire by the heavy guns of both sides, the infantry is again pressing forward slowly but surely. The chief operations to-day are reported to be in Upper Alsace and in the Champagne districts.

The operations in Alsace are on an extensive scale. The troops which have been massed along Toul-Nancy line and in the neighbourhood of Belfort, are being pushed forward to the support of General Pau, who is in entire charge of these operations. It is the intention of the General Staff to clear all of the Upper Alsace of the Germans if possible, so that attacks can be commenced on both Metz and Strassburg soon after the first of the year.

In the Champagne district the operations are slowly developing into a general battle with the advantage on the part of the French. At several points great wedges have eben driven into the German lines and their trenches captured.

In the north operations are still retarded by the weather. Heavy snow squalls have succeeded the rain, making the conditions for the troops in the field even worse.

So severe are conditions that it has been found necessary to relieve men in the outer lines of trenches every few hours, while stimulants and hot tea and coffee are being furnished in unlimited quantities.

An epidemic of pneumonia and rheumatism is reported among the troops, and hundreds are being invalided to the coast cities for treatment.

Russians Win Success In Bloody Engagement

Fought the Germans 40 Miles Out of Warsaw and Halted the German Offensive---Russians Claim a Definite Check Has Been Placed on the Enemy.

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—Success for the Russians in a sanguinary engagement on the Rawka River, 40 miles southwest of Warsaw at Bolimow, where the Germans made a desperate effort to resume the offensive, is reported in to-night's official communication from the headquarters of Grand Duke Nicholas. The Germans, according to the Russian statement, moved forward under a withering fire from the Russian artillery, and endeavoured to take by assault the trenches in front of three villages east of the river.

"Our troops," the Grand Duke reports, "by an impetuous counter-attack slaughtered with their bayonets all of the enemy with the exception of a few, who were made prisoners. In this engagement we captured German machine guns and inflicted enormous losses on the enemy, who brought into action successively regiments from divers army corps."

What is described by the report as a lull has prevailed everywhere on the Russian front in Poland south of the lower Vistula, excepting in the region of the Pilica River, where two fierce battles are progressing. At Inowlods, on the Pilica 65 miles south of Warsaw, the Russians stormed and occupied some German trenches, and the combat for their ultimate possession is still continued. Further south the Germans, after a long cannonade, made an infantry assault, which was repulsed by the Russian artillery, excepting at one point, where the enemy secured an entrenched position. Later he was dislodged and thrown out of this ground by a Russian counter-attack.

Fifty Thousand Prisoners.

It is officially reported from Petrograd that the German prisoners taken by the Russians during the last fortnight exceed 50,000 in number.

The Russian statement indicates that the advantages gained over the Austrians in Western Galicia during the last few days are being pressed to the utmost, despite isolated efforts of the enemy to reform his lines and assume the defensive at certain points. To the south-west of Dukla the Austrians fled in a panic, after being dislodged from strongly organized positions, and the advantage also is said to rest with the Russians south of Lisko, near the aCrpathians. In the mountain passes themselves the Austrians are making counter-attacks which, according to to-night's Vienna official statement, have stopped the Russian advance. Petrograd, however, claims that these counter-attacks have been repulsed, as also have new sorties by the garrison of Przemysl.

Nothing is said in the Russian report as to the situation north of the lower Vistula or in East Prussia. According to a Berlin statement, there is some activity in the region of Pillkallen.

Curtain is Rung Down.

The Russian view of the military situation in Poland, in the light of recent developments, is that a definite check has been administered to the Germans. The evacuation by the Germans of the village of Mistrzewice, five miles north of Sochaczew, related officially by the War Office, is regarded by military critics as "ringing down the curtain on the third German advance toward Warsaw."

At a tremendous cost to themselves the Germans had succeeded in establishing a foothold in Mistrzewice, on the east bank of the Bsura River, but their persistent sledge hammering attacks during the last three weeks failed to penetrate the Russian line before Warsaw.

The Germans steadily threw reinforcements into the town, in an endeavour to extend their positions along the river. When it became evident that the Austrian advance from the Carpathian Mountains had failed, the Germans evacuated the village during intervals between Russian attacks. The Austrian operations from the Carpathians evidently formed an integral part of the general plan of the Germans for the Warsaw campaign.

Italy Gives Turks Two Days' Notice

ROME, Dec. 30.—I am informed that at to-morrow's Cabinet Council a decision will be reached in connection with the incident at Hodeida, which is still in abeyance. The Italian Government's patience is exhausted and Turkey has been peremptorily notified that the British Consul at Hodtida must be released immediately and that the gendarmes who broke into the Italian Consulate must be punished.

Turkey has been warned that no excuse for further delay will be accepted and a satisfactory reply is demanded from her within two days.

LONDON, Dec. 30.—The Empress of Ireland Fund, which closes to-morrow, now totals approximately $427,000, of which $240,000 passed through the hands of the Lord Mayor of London, $125,000 through the hands of the Lord Mayor of Liverpool, and $62,000 was forwarded by the Board of Trade of Montreal. In addition the amount $2,870 has just been forwarded by the Quebec Board of Trade to Col. Pelletier, Agent-General, this including a contribution of $500 from H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught. The fund will be administered by two committees from the public trustee office, one for the passengers and the other for the crew and relatives. A committee will probably be appointed in Montreal to deal with Canadian claimants, although the English claimants are greatly in the majority.

FRENCH CRUISER TWICE INJURED IN "ACCIDENTS"

BARBADOS, Dec. 30.—The French protected cruiser Descartes has been crippled twice in St. Lucia since the commencement of hostilities in Europe through being in collision with freight steamships. The latest disabling of the warship has caused an official investigation to be made, which, it is said, has resulted in an order that the master of an offending merchant vessel in future suffer the death penalty.

The Descartes was rammed on the firs occasion by a Spanish vessel which was entering the harbour to coal. The position of the cruiser and the regular course of the vessels entering the harbour were in no wise close together, so that the "accident" caused some severe criticism of the seamanship of the Spanish vessel's captain, whose steamship was held for damages.

The second vessel was a British owned ship and did not foul the French cruiser until she cast loose and stood out from the harbour. Several persons who witnessed the ramming of the Descartes the second time remarked the erratic course steered by the navigating officer on board the merchantman.

Upon being interrogated after the collision the master of the steamship declared that his steering gear had become jammed. The bow plates of his vessel were badly stove in and she also was held in heavy damages.

These "accidents" have given rise to a strong suspicion here that German influence might have been behind them, and that the ramming of the French war vessel could have been the result of a deliberate scheme to remove her from the guardianship of the harbour. That this alleged scheme has been frustrated was soon apparent in the arrival off the port, of the large British cruiser.

Meanwhile it has been made plain, unofficially, that any repetition of careless navigation of merchant vessels will bring down upon their masters prompt reprisals by the authorities. It has been said that they will receive short shrift and will have the same status as civilians who bear arms. That is, they will be shot.

Advantage in East With the Russians

Germans Are Driven Back at Several Points on the Vistula and Rawka Rivers While the Austrians Are Retiring Still Further Into the Carpathian Passes.

Special to the Examiner:

PETROGRAD, Dec. 31.—To-day reports from the front declare that the Germans are being driven back at several points on the Vistula and Rawka rivers, following a series of attacks and counter attacks, in which both sides lost heavily. The advantage, it is stated, is with the Russians, although along most of the battle front the fighting has taken on the nature of an artillery duel.

The Galician operations are progressing, the Austrians being compelled to retire still further into the Carpathian passes. Reinforcements are being sent to southern front and preparations made for forcing the passage of the passes and opening the way for the invasion of Hungary. In the west the Russians have taken a number of Austrian positions east of Zalicin, capturing many prisoners and a number of machine guns.

The Turkish forces, which were yesterday reported concentrating in the vicinity of Yalanuzdjam pass, are today said to be advancing in general direction of Ardahan.

United States Will Refuse To Recognize Germany in Belgium

Following Notice That Exequaturs Issued to American Consuls by Belgian Goverment Would Be Ignored, It is Made Clear in Washington That No Political Status of the Invaders in Occupied Territory Will Be Conceded.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 30.—The United States has no intention of recognizing any political status of the Germans in Belgian territory as long as the war continues.

This was emphatically stated yesterday following the receipt at the State Department of a note from the German government informing the United States that Germany would not recognize exequaturs issued by the Belgian government to American consular officers in territory now controlled by the German forces.

It is hoped and believed here that the American consuls in the Belgian districts now occupied by the Germans can continue to exercise their consular functions through temporary informal permits granted them by the German de facto authorities. This would not involve any recognition of a political status of the Germans in Belgium. It is not believed that Germany has any intention of forcing the issue of recognition at this time.

But it may be stated that if Germany should press this issue the United States would withdraw its consuls from Belgian territory rather than grant such recognition to the conquerors.

When consuls are sent to foreign countries this government makes application of the foreign office of the government to which they are being sent for exequaturs or commissions authorizing them to exercise consular functions in a specified district of that country. A formal request for such exequaturs, in the present case of Germany in Belgium, would involve recognition by the United States of the political control of Germany over that part of Belgium which her forces occupy as distinguished from a merely temporary military control.

It is the practically unanimous opinion of officials here that it would be an unfriendly act to the Allies for the United States to accord such recognition to the Germans in Belgium, and consequently the United States will not make formal application to Berlin for exequaturs for American consuls. Instead it is thought that the German authorities will be asked informally to permit the consuls to cohtinue in the exercise of their functions. Such an arrangement should be mutually satisfactory unless it proves that the Germans are attempting to force neutral countries to recognize her political acquisition of the occupied Belgian districts. However, such a demand on the part of Germany, so far as can be seen here, would avail her nothing.

The press reports of the German communication regarding consuls in Belgium to neutral countries other than the United States state that Germany has specifically informed them that they must apply for new exequaturs to the German Foreign Office. But no such demand is contained in the note presented to the State Department. Germany informs the United States that she will not recognifie exequaturs of the Belgian government, but it is not understood from the note that she wants to replace them with German exequaturs. It is thought that she will readily agree to an informal arrangement avoiding the question of recognition.

It is generally believed here that Germany intends soon to proclaim civil control over the occupied Belgian districts. But it would be unneutral for the United States to recognize such a step until the war is ended.

Similarly no recognition of Great Britain's action in annexing Egypt could be given until the end of the war. Though England has ruled Egypt for many years her control has never been formally recognized by the United States nor by the other Powers and must remain as one of the questions to be settled when peace is made.

Mr. Havenith, the Belgian Minister, called at the State Department after the German notice had been received. Later he issued this statement:

"The Belgian Minister has been informed that the German government has notified the neutral Powers of its intention to cancel the exequaturs accorded by the Belgian government to foreign consular representatives.

"The Belgian government has protested against this step. The issue as well as the cancellation of an exequatur are acts which imply the sovereignity of the State from which they emanate. Now, a Power in military occupation of a territory only enjoys a defacto possession, which cannot be transformed, in so far as its relations with neutral States are concerned, into a State of sovereignty. Such a change could only become lawful by the communication of a treaty of peace determining definitely the status of the occupied territory."

PORTUGESE FORCES DEFEATED BY THE GERMANS

LISBON, Dec. 30.—The Portuguese Government has supplied details of an engagement between the Portuguese and German forces in Angola on December 18. The German artillery attacked Fort Naulilla, and the Portuguese made a steady resistance to the enemy's entrance, which tried to turn their left wing. The great numerical superiority of the Germans obliged the Portuguese troops to retreat.

Cavalry was engaged on both sides and there were many losses. Eight Portuguese officers were killed and missing and one is a prisoner.

BRITISH WAR PRISONER MUST DIE FOR ASSAULT

COPENHAGEN, Dec. 30.—A Berlin message says that the German supreme war tribunal has sentenced a British war prisoner named Lonsdale to death for assaulting a German officer at the Doberitz concentration camp. Lonsdale, in the first instance, was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, but the military authorities' appeal for a sentence of capital punishment has been successful. Lonsdale it is admitted, did not hurt the officer, and the prison guard beat him off.

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

CHAPTER IX.

The scheme that had germinated back of the contemplative and seemingly resigned eyes of Milt McBriar had borne its fruit of surprise and death had recoiled entirely upon the would-be avengers.

Of the six men who had crept down three had lain within one hundred yards of the house when the shots came from their rear. The other three were off to the side ready to bring up the horses as close as might prove safe when the moment came for flight. But now they, too, found themselves cut off. Had the man who fired on the man who was about to fire, waited an instant longer there would have been more deaths than one. His colleagues would then have been, like himself, covering their respective victims, victims who confidently thought themselves executioners. But as it was they had not yet quite worked themselves into positions entrammeled by intervening rock and timber. The man who fired first, knew that for he had not heard the perfectly imitated quaver of the "scritch-owls" which was to signify a common readiness. But as he eyed his crouching victim across his rifle sights he had also been able to look beyond him, and had seen the figure of Cal Douglas pause at the lighted window. He knew that to wait a moment would be to wait too long. So the others had to fire blindly through black undergrowth at speding shadows—and they missed. The fleeing murder squad melted back into the black timber and some of them, signalling with the call of frog and owl, came together in temporary safety. They dared not go to their own horses, since they might be discovered in the effort. The road that led into McBriar country would be watched. If they were to carry away unpunctured skins they must flee the other way—into the Havey territory and astride stolen Havey horses. It was every man for himself, and they had not paused to count noses. They hurriedly swung themselves into saddles at the remote end of the line of hitched mounts and galloped pell-mell down the road toward the cabin of Fletch McNash.

When the theft of the horses was discovered, Anse Havey sent pursuing parties to ride the roads in both directions.

It had seemed to Havey wiser to withhold his warning from all save those whom he needed to use. To all the rest the affair had come without warning, and the hue and cry which followed the rifle shots was genuine in its excitement

But in a very few minutes the pandemonium fell away to quiet, and sullenness supplanted the shouting. The mountains behind, where several men were stealthily seeking escape and many others were stalking them, lay silent in the moonlight. Here and there an owl quavered and a frog boomed, and some were not owls and frogs, but men, calling as lost quail call at twilight when the covey has been scattered under fire.

A hundred yards beyond the window a small and inquisitive knot of men knot of men gathered around a figure that had hunched forward, sprawling on a cocked rifle. Some one turned the figure up and straightened its limbs so that they should not stiffen in such grotesquerie of attitude. The face with the yellow lantern light shining down on it was the face of a boy of twenty. Its thin lips were set in a grim smile of satisfaction, for Death had overtaken him without a suspicion of its coming.

Perhaps had a photograph of his retina been taken it would have disclosed the portrait of Cal Douglas pausing at the open window.

"Hit's Little Iash McKay," exclaimed a surprised voice, using the diminutive which in the mountains takes the place of Junior and stays with a man well on in life. The victim who had been designated to avenge the death of Noah McKay had been Noah McKay's younger brother.

Meanwhile the pursuing horsemen were gaining slowly on those that fled. The murder squad had failed and must bear back to Milt McBriar, if they ever got back, a narrative of frustrated effort. They were bitterly angry and proportionately desperate. So as they clattered along the empty road, meeting no enemy whom they could shoot down in appeasement of their wrath and chagrin, they satisfied themselves with raising their little war cry for the benefit of the sleeping cabins.

A little distance beyond Fletch McNash's place lay a cross-trail by which they might find a circuitous way back over the ridge, but it was too steep and broken to ride. They could make better time on foot over the "roughs," so there they abandoned their mounts and plunged into the timber. When the pursuers came up with the discarded horses they realized that further effort "in the night-time" would be bootless. Yet since the heaving flanks and panting nostrils of the horses testified that they had been only a few minutes late, they took a last chance and plunged into the thicket.

There a single defiant shot, sent from a long way up the slope, was their only challenge, and their volley of reply, fired at the flash, was merely a retort of hatred. But even in the isolation of the hills certain news travels on wings, and the morning would find every cabin dweller wearing a face of grim and sullen realization. The phrase which Fletch McNash had whispered to his boy would travel to the headwaters of every fork, and the faces of the women would once more wear the drawn misery of anxiety for their men.

* * * * * * *

It was into this newly charged atmosphere that Juanita Holland and her missionary guide rode in the morning mists. The face of the preacher still bore something of last night's torture and despair, for his eyes were looking ahead and foresaw the undoing, in a few hence moments of passion, of what he had so uncouthly, but sincerely, laboured through years to accomplish.

He had planned to take the girl to the gap in the ridge, because it was remote from a railroad and no section stood in greater need of schooling. If she meant to set up a serviceable school in this territory—unless it were to be limited to one faction of the feud—its doors must stand open at the border, alike to the children of east and west. But now the ridge would be an armed frontier.

Good Anse Talbott was in many ways as inadequate an ally as he had at first seemed to Juanita. He was both narrow and illiterate, but he was earnest. He knew the life and people—and—

"As Pictish shepherd dog among his Pictish sheep,
So went he in and out of them where they stood breathing deep,
Half frightened and half loving,
He could make them laugh or weep,
Whose lives and deaths were his to him, whose vigil and whose sleep."

In his ignorant zeal, he had thought out many things which she could not realize until she had crossed the first great barrier of prejudice and learned many lessons of sympathy. So she had trusted herself to his guidance, and as they plodded on and he rode in silence, she was puzzled and a little hurt by his uncommunicativeness.

The way at last followed the creek bank, but soon they were climbing steeply upward and the mists went with them; lifting and giving way to the clarity of day. The sun had appeared above the dim summits now, not yet in the golden triumph of full victory, but like a polished disc of platinum, that slowly passed through pallor to rosiness and through rosiness to flame. A dozen miracles of exquisite and ephemeral beauty hung between sunlight and mist like dreams at the pale heart of an opal. A scrap of bird's-egg blue flashed in the grey sky and a tilting cornfield, far up the mountain, gave back a response of spirit emerald. Upon the foliage of pine and oak and poplar were breathed transitory and gossamer hues that were like the fugitive souls of colours. At last the veil was rent and the vapours went floating away in tattered wisps and streamers of defeat. Through rifts in the nearer hills rose other hills where the green turned blue with distance to the last line of smoky purple that merged and wedded with the sky.

It was all very beautiful, but she had not come here only to listen to the song of June. So at last the girl rode resolutely up to her escort's saddle-skirts and asked, "Brother Talbott, hadn't you better tell me what it all means?"

The missionary lifted a fact that was almost haggard.

"Hit means," he said, with no idea of irreverence, "thet Satan's got both under-bolts—an' God help this country."

She listened with a sickening heart while he told her many things she needed to know until he changed the subject and assured her that the Widow Everson, with whom she was to stop, had a sizable house where she would be comfortable.

"Are all the houses in this country like the one where we stopped last night?" she inquired.

"No, ma'am," he promptly informed her with a solemnity which belied any spirit of the humorous. "Back a piece in ther hills amongst ther branch-water folks thar's lots of houses whar, es ther sayin' goes, ye hain't hardly got room ter cuss a dawg 'thout gittin' yore teeth full of ha'r. But es fur es thet's consarned," he apologetically added, "a man hain't rightly got no call ter cuss a dawg nohow."

As the day advanced they passed a cabin that stood barred of door and smokeless of chimney; deserted since yesterday. "Thet house," he told her, "b'long ter Bud McBriar. He married a Havey an' I reckon they've done moved acrost ther ridge this mornin'."

Juanita looked at the abandoned place and shuddered at the thought of the conditions that had urged such flight.

Yet as they rode through cloistered hollows where the greens were deep and the air moist, and the sun sent only vagrant flakes of gold filtering through the branches it all seemed incredible. The melody of peace and joy poured from the swelling throats of cardinal and thrush down there and tiny shoals of minnows darted about the splashing feet of their mules in creek-bed pools.

The hills grew with their progress until those behind them were only the little brothers of those ahead, for they were steadily plodding toward the ridge of the divide. At last, the girl saw, still a long way off, a fertile little valley where the corn seemed taller and richer than in the scattered "coves" and where across a table-land she could make out a silver thread of water—flowing east. There, like a tiny match-box, on a high level near the point where the wall of mountain broke into a broad gateway she could make out a house. It was not of logs, but of brick, and stood in an enclosure that looked more like the Blue Grass than the mountains. From its chimney went up a thread of smoke blue and straight until it lost itself overhead. Then the missionary drew his mule to a standstill and raised one talon-like hand, pointing across the vista. The girl followed the direction over miles of forest tops and broken hills; over two narrow and converging valleys; over shadows that were thrown by western peaks and that crept well up the eastern slopes beyond. She nodded her head and caught her breath in a quick, almost gasping intake to sheer admiration.

"Does ye see ther brick house over thar, nigh ther gap? — Thet's Bad Anse's place, an' over thar acrost ther ridge, three mile away by crow-flight an' a half day's ride by ther roads is whar Milt McBriar dwells. Ye kain't se hit from hyar."

Juanita followed his words and his brown index finger and in her heart beat something like the emotions which must have stirred the crusaders when their eyes first looked on the walls of the Jerusalem they had come to take from the Saracen.

It was almost sundown when they reached the house of the Widow Everson, and at sight of the woman standing at the fence to meet them her heart took strength. This house was not of logs, but of undressed boards, with gayly painted window and door frames of red, and though two days ago she would have called it mean, she had revised her views enough to regard it, now, as almost magnificent.

The widow dwelt here with her two sons, and the trio, by virtue of great diplomacy, had succeeded in maintaining a neutrality throughout the strife that went on about them.

The comforts of the place were such as must give contentment where teaming is arduous and the mail carrier comes twice a week, but cleanliness dwelt there, and homely cheer of a sort.

Before they had yet entered the house the girl saw a horseman approaching, with an escort of several men who carried rifles balanced across their pommels. They came from the east, and though the girl did not know who they were, she recognized that the central figure, himself unarmed, was a person of consequence.

3 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS.

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sign of a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

Lucky Quip.

When Thomas was preparing one of his first almanacs a man who was engaged upon the work with him asked what he should say about the weather opposite a certain week in July. Thomas humorously or peevishly replied, "Thunder, hail and snow." It was so put down and printed, and it so happened that it did thunder, hail and snow at the very time. This fortunate prediction raised the almanac maker in the estimation of many and made his almanac the most popular of its day in this country.

Strong Resemblance.

An elderly gentleman went into a photographic studio and asked to see the proofs of a picture recently taken of a young man whose name he gave. They were handed to him as a matter of course, and he examined them critically. He seemed pleased and finally said:

"These are of my son. This one is a remarkably good photo of him; it is very like him indeed. Has he paid you for it yet?"

"No, sir," said the photographer, "not yet."

"Ah," said the elderly gentleman, "very, very much like him indeed."—Exchange.

Preacher-Novelists Message

Let Canada prepare, eagerly, swiftly, surely prepare to-day, that in the last deadly crisis of the desperate fight she may be able to throw the weight of her young might upon the wavering line of battle and help hurl the enemy backward in defeat. The final touch may be Canada's. There is no place for hysteria, but there is place for haste. Not a contingent but the whole nation will fulfil Canada's obligation; and not when the cry comes for help but now should the preparation be made.

With a clear conscience and a steadfast heart we can invoke the God, not of battles, but the God of Righteousness and Truth to our aid, but only after we have made our full preparation; and if by God's good hand our men should not be needed the loss is small, but if the day should come when there was desperate need of our men and we were found unready, not even God could help us then. The which may God forbid.—Rev. Charles W. Gordon, D.D. (Ralph Connor).

Dr. Shortt Says There Will be Great Competition For Capital When War Ends

Dr. Adam Shortt, M.A., Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, Ottawa, was in England at the outbreak of the war and is especially well acquainted with the facts relating to it. In an address at Toronto he pointed out the effect that the war would have on trade conditions in Canada not only during the war, but after it.

"We are at a crisis at the present time which puts all others in the shade," said Dr. Shortt, "and consequences must arise out of it that will greatly affect this country.

"Canada must adjust itself to the new conditions that would arise, and it must not be alarmed, but face them calmly. "When war broke out we were in a state of transition. Prosperity was in evidence everywhere throughout the Dominion. This prosperity was greatest in the West. The most noticeable increases in population had been in the cities and not in the rural districts. The towns get their stimulus from the farmres and especially from the pioneers, who have to get everything at the outset. About one hundred years ago the farmers grew and made nearly everything they required, but everything grown is sold and goes off the farm now; in fact the average farmer does not retain enough for his own maintenance. When the West was growing it made gigantic demands on the East. Materials for the building of railroads, schools and all farm implements were brought from the East. Now all this has changed and we would have to readjust ourselves to the new condition of things. At the present time there was not one-third of the western land under cultivation. "What has stopped people going on to the land?" he asked. "The huge profits being made in the cities," was the answer. Farmers could not compete with the wages being paid in the cities. Probably this would change now as a result of the war, and many would turn to the humble pursuit of agriculture.

"War means an immense absorption of capital. A lot of it is wasted. The manufacture of shells only to be exploded is like taking money to the bay and dropping it in the water. The worst part of this enormous waste is that every country of the world has to pay and suffer for it.

"This war should not affect Canada at the present time as much as several other countries for several reasons. The first thing that people economize on is luxuries. She does not export a very great quantity of these commodities. The real pinch does not come while the war is being waged, but when the struggle is over. Every country now taking part in this great dispute will have to raise taxes upon its people, and although there are some who are making profits all out of proportion at the present time the majority will have to suffer after.

"The end of the war will see great competition for capital, and it will be up to Canada to show that she is on a sound footing to get the first chance for the use of this money. There is no part of the world that has a greater possibility for future advancement than this fair country of ours."

A ROMANCE OF TRADE.

Death of Baron Belper Removes a Merchant Prince.

There recently died in England a man whose career and whose ancestry are associated with what may be called a romance of trade. This man was the Rt. Hon. Henry Strutt, second Baron Belper, who was the second son of the first baron.

The founder of the family was Jedediah Strutt, of Derby, a small farmer's son, who became a hosier and greatly prospered in his business. A man of inventive talent, he originated the machine for making ribbed stockings. For this profitable invention he and a Mr. Need, of Nottingham secured a patent. Mr. Strutt then came into association with another and yet greater inventor, Richard Arkwright, who had already perfected his famous roller spinning-frame. In 1771 Arkwright, went into partnership with Mr. Strutt and Mr. Need and erected his spinning-frame at Cromford, in Derby. Before patenting it, he adopted various improvements which were suggested by Strutt. The thread produced by this machine—which was driven by water — was greatly superior to the hand-spun cotton, and in 1773 the partners began to use it, instead of the linen warp formerly used together with the cotton weft, for the manufacture of calicoes. Thus for the first time a cloth solely of cotton was produced in England, and from this beginning was developed the leading industry of the North of England. In spite of the immense opposition which they had to overcome, all three partners made fortunes out of their operations. Works were erected at Belper, and these Mr. Strutt kept in his own hands, after dissolving partnership with Arkwright in 1782.

Jedediah's son, William, who inherited much of his father's mechanical genius, and who was an intimate friend of Darwin and other leading scientists, added considerably to the wealth of the family. His son, Edward Strutt, who sat in Parliament for nearly a quarter of a century, was created Baron Belper of Belper in 1856. He was succeeded by the late peer in 1880.

The House Adjourned.

There is a good Fleet Street story of how a reporter once adjourned the House of Lords. He had worked in the gallery of the House of Lords for about a quarter of a century, and it may be that familiarity had dimmed his sense of reverence. One day there had been a stodgy little debate with a dozen members in the House, and the reporter with his colleagues perched in the gallery was thoroughly sick of the whole business. His feelings found outlet in a muttered remark as some noble lord on the cross-benches rose to continue the debate.

"Why don't you move the adjournment?" said the reporter to himself. He said it louder than he intended, and the words reached the noble lord who had just risen. He on his part believed the words to be a private hint addressed to him from the Lord Chancellor, and feeling that he could not disregard the suggestion, he said, "My lords, I move the adjournment of the debate." Instantly the Lord Chancellor was on his feet from the Woolsack, and their lordships' House rose for the day. Hardened as was the reporter, it is stated that as he went out he was blushing at his achievement.

The Cost of Battleships.

It is usually supposed that Britain builds the biggest and most costly battleships; but this is by no means the case. Our biggest ships belong to the Warspite class, 28,000 tons, but the latest class is somewhat smaller.

Japan has designed four of 30,000 tons, America is building one 1,400 tons heavier, while Russia has four mammoths of 32,000 tons on the stocks. These last will cost something like fifteen millions apiece, while our super-Dreadnoughts cost only about one and three-quarter million pounds, in each case without armament.

A battleship of 18,000 tons, carrying ten big guns, costs roughly as above while the bill for a 12,000 tons four-gun ships is $6,100,000. Thus the bigger ships are more economical, for their cost per gun is $900,000, and the smaller $1,526,000.

Tasmania's Minerals.

Rare minerals exist in Tasmania to a considerable extent and their number is constantly being added to the latest addition being molybdenite, which is used in the manufacture of "molybdenum steel," to which it gives a special hardness and toughness that make it suitable for use in propeller shafts, guns, boilers, etc. It is also used, to a lesser extent, in the making of pottery glass and other things. The price of molybdenum is now $2,500 per ton. It is worked in East Gippsland, Victoria. In Tasmania it occurs in the form of crystals on Cape Barren Island, in the Blue Tier (East Coast) and in the Shepherd and Murphy Mine at Middlesex, and it is as a matter of fact rather widely distributed in the northeastern and northwestern parts of the state.

An Unknown Chess Genius.

When Lasker, previous to the 1889 cheap international tournament, visited Manchester he was opposed in a simultaneous performance by an unknown player, who had obtained permission from the club secretary to take a board against the champion. The player put up quite a fair game, but was finally mated. Then he inquired of Lasker to know wherein he had erred in the conduct of the play.

"Well," said Lasker, "your play has been somewhat peculiar. I notice that you have not once moved your knights."

"No," replied the player, "the fact is that I have not as yet quite mastered the move of the knights, so I thought it safer not to move them at all."

The stranger had unconsciously conceded his famous adversary the odds of two knights, not to mention the handicap of his cramped position.

"Nisi Prius."

People often ask the meaning of the legal expression "nisi prius." Literally interpreted it means "unless before," a name given to the sittings of a court for the trial of civil causes. Judges on circuit, besides trying prisoners, have the power to give decisions in causes of complaints between private parties and when so acting are called judges of "nisi prius." Formerly when the circuits were less frequent the sheriff was commanded "by writ" to bring the jury and witnesses from the county where the action arose to Westminster, Gloucester or Winchester on a certain day, but when the assizes became frequent a "nisi prius" clause was inserted in the writ containing these words: "Unless before that day our justices shall come to your county and take the assizes there." As it happened that the assizes always did take place before the date named in the writ the clause was practically useless and now remains only as a name for those civil causes to which until recently it referred.—Dundee Advertiser.

Blood and Thunder Drama.

One of the most successful productions at the "Old Vic" was a play—written without Dickens' permission—round "Oliver Twist" and banned by the lord chamberlain owing to the realistic way in which Bill Sikes murdered Nancy. His lordship's jurisdiction did not extend to what were then called the "minor theatres," so the play was for many years a standing dish at the "Vic" and thrilled the galleryites with fierce emotions, no matter how many times they had seen it. "Nancy was always dragged round the stage by her hair," writes John Hollingshead, "and after this effort Sikes always looked up defiantly at the gallery. He was always answered by one loud and fearful curse, yelled by the whole mass like a Handel festival chorus. When Sikes seemed to dash Nancy's brains out on the stage a thousand outraged voices, which sounded like ten thousand, filled the theater and deafened the audience below."—London Chronicle.

First War Correspondent.

The first war correspondent, according to a theory propounded by Sutherland Edwards, appears to have been Homer, who was sent by the editor of an Argos paper called the Chronos to describe the siege of Troy. Hostilities lasted only about seven weeks, and when they came to an end the Greek chiefs were in no hurry to return to their wives. Homer was a good sort, and as he drew a large salary and a handsome allowance for expenses from the Chronos he readily accepted the scheme propounded by the wise Ulysses—to keep the war going to the columns of his paper so long as he could manage to write about it. His letters were too good not to publish, and meantime the Greek chiefs had an enjoyable time at Troy and elsewhere. Reissued in book form as "The Iliad" these early examples of war correspondence have enjoyed a wider circulation than was possible even in the columns of the Chronos.—London Graphic.

Faithful Lover.

Of all the girls that I have known
(And you know how girls vary)
I've lost my faithful heart alone
Unto my charming Mary.

I loved her as a little tot,
And then I called her "Maisie."
Her proper name I have forgot—
My memory grows hazy.

I loved her as we older grew.
'Twas then I called her "Maybelle."
I thought that we should marry too
As soon as we were able.

But fate, alas, forced us apart!
Fate is a cruel lady.
Another Mary won my heart,
Although I called her "Maidee."

To Mary Smith and Jones and Brown
And others in succession
My Mary loving heart bowed down
And found renewed expression.

I've lost of Marys quite a score.
Of love I am not wary.
But ever, as I said before,
I've faithful been to Mary.

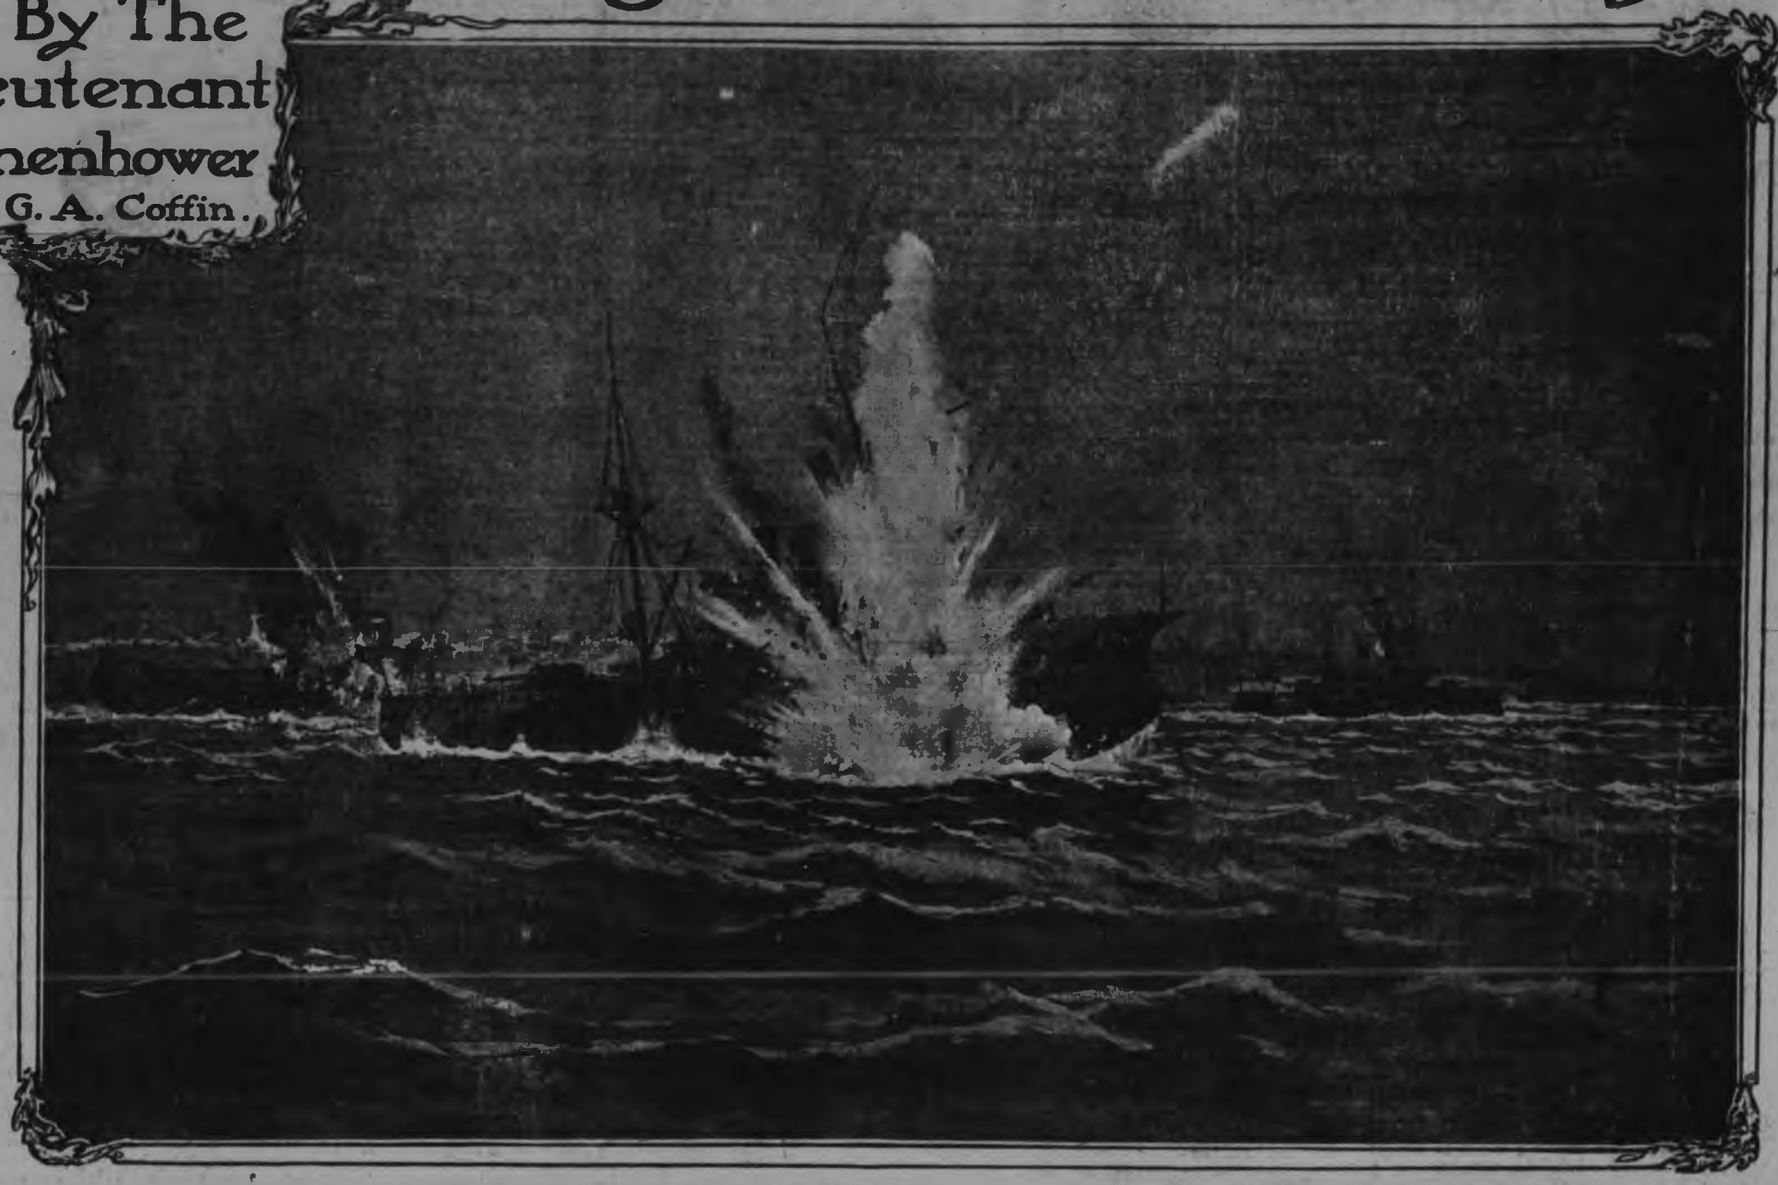
The X-2 Against the Enemy

As Told By The Junior Lieutenant To R. Danenhower

Illustration By G. A. Coffin.



MY heart beat wildly. I stared at the expressionless face of the orderly as if I might read there why the division commander had sent for me. For weeks we of the "subs" had been monotonously patrolling and I'd received a hundred orders, but this time somehow—well, there was just something in the air.

I hurried to the division commander's cabin on the mother ship. The glint in his eye flashed a message of enthusiasm and perhaps a hint of envy. Surely it must mean action. I waited breathlessly.

"Stanton," he said gravely, "I have important orders for you. The aerial corps reports two cruisers and a battle ship of the enemy's fleet lying near the mouth of C. harbor, not more than a mile inside the outer defences of the port. You will take the submarine under your command into the harbor and sink them."

I wanted to yell like any "plebe" at an Army game. I wanted to clap the commander on the back and dance around the cabin with him; but I remembered in time that I was only a junior lieutenant and crowded all the enthusiasm of a lifetime into a choking "Aye, aye, sir."

The commander smiled appreciatively.

"You will start immediately so as to run under cover of darkness when you reach the enemy's waters. Do not let the crew, even Dallas, your ensign, know your orders till you're well at sea. And, now, sir, I realise the great responsibility that"—

I'm afraid I don't know just what admirable sentiments he went on to express, for I was figuring out the probabilities of the stem of the upper exhaust valve of No. 3 cylinder, standing up for an eighteen hour run and itching to recall two of my men who were visiting the guardo.

At last the commander wished me goodby and good luck, and as soon as I had escaped the range of vision of the orderly I broke into a run. It was not two minutes before I'd sent a wigwag recalling the men from the guardo.

Then I beat it back to the wharf where the X-2 was alongside and called up my chief gunner's mate, Brown. I must have shown my exultation, for the order, "All hands unmoor," was obeyed with even more than usual alacrity. I pride myself on having a smart crew, but, even before I expected it, all was reported ready below, the engine telegraphs responded successfully to the usual test, and a trial squawk from the air whistle was simultaneous with the breathless arrival of the absentees from the guardo. Old Jansen, the helmsman, was one of them, and I put him in his place immediately.

As the bow line was cast off and the motors turned over slowly astern I realized that at last real business was ahead. We had air and provisions for a week, oil fuel for 350 miles of surface running with Diesel engines and electricity for three hours of submerged running at eight knots, or one hour at ten knots. I mentally reviewed our equipment with the hope that no fault of personnel or "materiel" would mar the success of our mission.

Sharp at a quarter to ten we were running out of the harbor. I couldn't resist an exultant wave at our sister ship, the X-1, whose commander and crew would have been green with envy if they'd known our orders.

We were turning our backs on our own coast for a run nor'-nor'-west of 196 miles. I reckoned we could make twelve knots steadily till daybreak, running on the surface, of course, and set my revolutions accordingly. Sunrise wouldn't be till four or even later if it were a cloudy morning, so I counted on two hours' leeway to make our attack as soon as we had light for it.

Except for old Jansen at the helm, Dallas and I were alone on the bridge. He let out a regular siren yell, and turned crimson all over his pink and white face when I told him your orders.

I turned the boat over to him and ducked below to tell the men. I didn't know eighteen throats could make such a rip-snorter of a roar as they gave. The "subs" aren't like the big ships. With such a small crew I knew the men personally and felt I could count on each and every one, especially on old Jansen at the helm, and Brown, the gunner's mate. No need to caution the engine room crew for special watchfulness. Every oiler aft knew a warm bearing would damn him forever in the eyes of his shipmates.

We raced along about six miles out to sea, where there was less chance of encountering floating mines. Just as dusk was setting in Dallas reported an aeroplane to leeward. I could just make it out with my binoculars, a tiny speck about eight hundred feet up, and bearing down toward us. I hated to use the juice of my batteries that would be so precious later on, but I wanted no chances of unnecessary discovery. So I trimmed her down and ran along a depth of sixty feet at eight knots for nearly an hour to be sure of complete darkness when we came up. I kept our course nor'-nor'west, which is just as easy under water as above, thanks to the gyroscopic compass. Soon the man on watch at the bell-receiver reported the sound of a ship's propellers above. We sure were in well populated waters! I turned my place at the periscopes over to Dallas and listened myself. The steady, rhythmic beat was well off our port bow. I blew the main ballast tank so that our conning tower was just awash and went up to have a look for both the aeroplane and passing ship. Those sky pilots must certain they can see us and get us with bombs at any depth, but that claim was belied in this case, for a thorough search of the darkening skies showed no Mr. Birdman on our trail.

The only thing the periscope showed me was a 10,000 ton cruiser a hundred yards or so to windward of us. It was nearly dark, and cloudy, with just a few stars peeping out. Apparently her look-out didn't see us. What a chance if she'd been an enemy! It was after colors, of course, but by her cage masts I placed her as one of our own cruisers, probably the furthest north of our patrol, as we were now on the edge of disputed waters. It did me good to know by actual experience how invisible an X-ship. When we were far enough off so that if I'd mistaken her identity we had time to get down before her guns could be trained, I fired our recognition signal for that night, green-red-green. She replied according to code, so we came all the way to the surface and kept on steadily at twelve knots.

The clouds gradually thickened through the night and I kept hoping for rain or at least a dull sunrise. Brown, the gunner's mate, said he was sure we'd be favored with suitable weather through the righteousness of our cause, but I pinned my faith on the barometer, which had fallen two points. There was more rest than usual that night on the X-2. I wanted the men especially fresh for the day's work, and so made the two watches off duty turn in and pipe down. Our 185 by 15 feet is divided up with a crew space where the men in their bunks get little of the sound of the engines. Dallas and I stood watch and watch on the bridge.

At two o'clock we were off C. harbor, according to my reckoning, but, as all navigation lights on the enemy's coast were extinguished or misplaced, we stood off and on near where I placed the shore line, till we should have daylight for an accurate reckoning. I studied the charts for the hundredth time, thanking our stars the harbor mouth was two miles wide, so that the probabilities were against our finding an obstruction built across it. The chart gave the bottom on the sand bar in front of the entrance as shell and hard sand, which was lucky for us, as we could hope to run with very little under our keel in no fear of rocks. But the shallowness worried me. My chart showed a bare six and a half fathoms over the bar, continuing slightly deeper till it sheered off into the deep basin that was the inner harbor. From the top of her periscopes to the bottom of her keel the X-2 displaced exactly twenty feet. It would be ticklish work to navigate in those six and a half fathoms (39 feet) without being drawn down by suction and striking bottom so hard as to rebound up to the surface and be sighted by the enemy. * * * Would sunrise never come?

At half-past four, under heavy rain clouds, there was light to make out the big gray forts at each side of the entrance. We lay not more than a mile inside an island that according to my chart was two miles outside the forts, so it behooved us to get under quickly before there was light for the island or fort watches to sight us.

Being satisfied of how far our run should be and verifying our course with the compass while still on the surface, I quickly trimmed down and ran at a depth of sixty feet at as low speed as consistent with good handling—about four knots. It was high tide, just beginning to ebb, so at least we'd find all the water on the bar that was possible.

No more sleep on the X-2 now. From Dallas down every man was on the qui vive. All we neared where the bar was charted we came up till the pressure gauge showed only ten feet over us, ten feet to hide us from the forts' lookouts and guns.

Suddenly there was a jar that stirred us all our pins and we felt the all too familiar sensation of sucking bottom. As previously instructed, the diving rudder man immediately gave her up-rudder. I ordered full speed ahead, though I knew it meant our periscopes would come up, giving the fort watches a good look at us. Still if we hadn't gone full speed we'd have been sucked down solidly into the sand and goodby to our chances at those men-o'-war duckies. Some shallow water navigation anyhow!

Sure enough we had to porpoise, but in a second were down again in the deep basin beyond the bar. We weren't up even long enough for me to get a good look around. We must have the work along now before the guns in the fort, set into frenzied activity by our momentary appearance, could take measures against us. We ran at ten knots at a depth of forty feet and in no time at all had covered the mile from the entrance to where the men-o'-war were reported to lie. Now was the time. Our torpedoes were in place in their tubes, six new 18-inch superheaters ready for their final runs. It only remained to come up, sight the enemy, take aim and fire.

I took a firm grip of the periscope wheel and ordered a quick porpoise, putting the glass just out for an observation. Through the spray that broke from it I saw our big gray targets. There on our port side a hundred yards ahead lay a battle ship of the super-dreadnought type, stern to, alongside the wharf, coaling. Midstream to our starboard lay a light cruiser of the first class, and eight hundred yards up the basin between the two a small armored cruiser. The flat country was thickly veiled with mist and a drizzly rain. A choppy sea added to our chances of making our first shot unobserved. I steered a course straight to the starboard side of the dreadnought to launch the torpedo just forward of amidships at a distance of about three hundred yards.

Her lookout hadn't picked us up yet. As we raced toward her I saw officers on her stern sighting the forts with binoculars. I imagined gunboats and destroyers rushing down to the entrance, but there was no time to turn the periscope to look that way. We crept on unnoticed. I don't mind confessing my hand on the toggle of the firing valve shook, and it wasn't all from the vibrations of our engines either! Suddenly a big seaman on the focsl saw us, waved his cap frantically and ran toward an officer. My range scale read 310 yards.

The cross wires of the periscopes were on her middle funnel. I jerked the firing valve for No. 1 torpedo. The resultant hiss of air and rush of water told me she was launched!

I took us down till the periscopes were under, put the helm hard-a-starboard, and made for mid-channel, where I knew the first-class cruiser lay at anchor, stern to, and nosing the strong ebb tide. We were jubilant. The men insisted they had heard a roar that meant the exploding of the battle ship. In concentrating on giving orders I had heard nothing, but I knew that shot couldn't have failed to get home.

Even so our job was only a third done—less than that if you count getting out to sea again the hardest part. We ran slowly across the harbor at an angle, aiming to come up to the starboard of the big cruiser. I argued they would expect us on the side nearest the battle ship, so we might surprise them on the starboard, and at the same time have our movements masked from the smaller cruiser by our second victim herself. To foster the appearance of an attack off her port side I let go a decoy periscope to float with the tide's decided sweep to the left shore and draw the fire in that vicinity. We kept slowly on and soon heard the unmistakable boom of heavy guns. I took that to mean our ruse was succeeding, and my hopes of success against the cruiser surged high.

We porpoised and I found we were heavily five hundred yards to the starboard of the big cruiser. We ran full speed ahead straight up to her bow. We were quickly sighted, but before they could get their starboard guns into action—they were so busy firing on the port side—I had launched No. 2 torpedo and was at the bottom again. I had my nerves well under control so that my hand didn't shake at this second shot. This time I heard the explosion, a long roaring boom that must have meant her magazine went, too. I must say I never saw cooler men than our crew. When you're a hundred feet or so below the shots and cries of battle they're neither exciting nor gruesome. I suppose I ought to have thought with pity of the mangled and dying above us, perhaps at that very moment sinking down to their graves, but that side of it didn't occur to me then. I was steering a course to the second cruiser. If I thought of death it was to hope we'd finish her before our time came. I decided to fire at longer range to have a shorter return run among the wreckage of all three.

In ten minutes we had porpoised and got the desired range, unobserved by the cruiser, which was lowering her boats to assist the others. I found out afterward two gunboats were closing in on us from astern. I had my hand on the toggle of the firing valve and was reading the range scale when their shots hit us and sent us canting toward the bottom. I was sent flying across the deck, and must have been knocked unconscious. The next thing I knew was Hopkins leaning over me. I sat up and heard the hiss of air through the vent of the manifold. Dallas was letting water into the ballast tanks to keep us down. I went over to him unsteadily.

"They got our periscopes, I think," said he, as cool as you please, though he was flushed crimson. "But our torpedo went just the same." He sure is a plucky young 'un!

Sure enough, the tube was empty! I could not hope the aim was true, but the cruiser must have been hit somewhere, if only with a glancing blow.

We remained stationary sixty feet down while I took account of casualties. One of the men had a nasty gash across his forehead from being thrown against a stanchion, another had a bleeding and probably broken nose. I was over my dizziness and had Dallas apply first aid to the men while I got under way toward the mouth of the harbor.

I quickly reversed our course to east-sou'-east, which was the nearest I could figure it after our quick manoeuvres. I could imagine the wild confusion overhead, but as the X-2 was blind now there was no chance of our seeing it without exposing ourselves to gunfire. Still, thanks to a tight hull and true compass we had a fighting chance to escape.

We were making ten knots, for there was no use wasting time and perhaps giving the enemy a chance to plant another barrier. Of course I was going to slow up when we neared the sand bar. Suddenly when we were certainly five hundred yards from it there was a jar, a moaning, grinding sound, our motors instantly went dead, and from the battery compartment there was a rush of water into the living quarters. It didn't take long to dog down the doors of that compartment to segregate the damage and prevent flooding of the other compartments. But even with that done we were in a bad way. Whether iron girders or other obstructions had been let down to bottle us in the harbor I have never known.

By whatever cause the deadliest foe of the submarine was at work against us—chlorine gas. The action of the salt water on the sulphuric acid of the battery cells was generating it with fatal quickness. Already I could feel the deadly burning in my throat and nose. I was half sick with the horrible realization that fifteen minutes of that fatal atmosphere would leave us gasping, stifling, smothering there sixty feet below the fresh air that meant life. There was but one thing to do—come to the surface and run for it in the faces of the forts.

It would be the end of us if that upper exhaust valve of No. 3 cylinder failed now, for with the electric engines gone running on the surface with our Diesels was our only hope. Well, better be shelled up there than stifled on the bottom from the chlorine gas.

No porpoising this time, since our periscopes were gone. We came up well awash and started the engines full speed ahead. I immediately opened the hatches and started the ventilating fans full speed, blowing out the gases and letting the cold, damp air in. Lord! It was good to breathe freely again!

From my station in the tower I could plainly see the activity of the forts when their look-outs picked us up. But, glancing back, I saw the fighting tops of our first two victims, super-dreadnought and first class cruiser, just reaching out of the water. The smaller cruiser was afloat, but from her heavy list to starboard I knew she must be damaged. The forts were getting our range now and their shells fell all around us. One struck the water near us and passed the conning tower with a splash. Well, if our time was coming it was going to know that we had gone big while it was too badly.

I heard one shell hiss and instinctively I ducked, but it hit the water 500 twenty yards ahead and sank harmlessly. We were half way across the bar. My helmsman was sticking to his post, head down and eyes ahead without a look at the forts. Our hull shook with the vibrations of the hard-pushed engines straining to get us to deep water before by all the laws of chance the shell must hit us. The lads in the engine room were doing their best. A shell from long range with most of its force exhausted glanced off our port bow carrying away the towing pendant. Our nose dipped under a bit, but came up serenely in half a second. I encouraged Jansen with the prospect of deep water a hundred yards ahead. Already I could see we were nearly over the bar. The fire from the forts was decreasing. Only the longer range guns could come into play now. Looking back I saw a gunboat and two destroyers racing toward us, the gunboat leading in the narrows between the forts.

Our water armor for ours! The first shells from the gunboat whizzed past us as I slammed down the hatch and brought us to the safe haven of the bottom with a hundred and eleven feet of solid protecting water between us and hostile shells.

That's about all there is to tell. We stayed there all day—"went to sleep on bottom" as the phrase goes, and literally that is what we did. The men certainly needed the rest. I suppose there was trawling going on all day in an effort to locate us—probably over a wide area, as they couldn't have known of the loss of our batteries. Luckily with complete flooding of the damaged compartment no more chlorine gas could form. It was rather nervous work for me, waiting there all day with the thought that at any moment we might be found and have barge loads of pig iron or something of the sort let down to crush our steel plating.

An hour after sunset we blew. No sign of any enemy waiting near. It was still clouded completely over and a choppy sea on. We started the homeward run full speed ahead and well into shore, so when we had to submerge we could find bottom at not too great a depth for our plates to withstand. Having no batteries for submerged running we had to be either on top or on bottom without ability to run part way down. Mines were our worst bugaboo. We might strike one any minute. We were picked up by hostile searchlights twice and had to duck down, but the gist of it was that we reached our own waters before daylight and then met only our own patrol, who would gladly have convoyed us in.

But our engines were standing up well and we reached our wharf at one o'clock under our own power, after an absence of a little over thirty-nine hours. I found the division commander on the mother ship, saluted and began:—

"I report the safe return of the X-2 with complete loss of periscopes, partial destruction of battery department and two very minor casualties in the crew. We damaged one small armored cruiser, totally destroyed one first class cruiser and one super-dreadnought."

I felt my eyelids blinking as I spoke. To this day the division commander laughs over how I went to sleep standing up during his speech of congratulating the morale of the enemy's fleet," and ended all through his eloquent congratulations on the exploit of the X-2.

CHAPTER XVII.

A Girl With One Idea.

IT was the following day that, leaning against the window grating of iron, she was astonished to find it bending before her. She looked more closely and was astonished to find that one bar had been cut cleanly through. She examined the remainder of the bars. They appeared absolutely untouched, but when she pulled harshly at them every one gave way. Ready made was her means of escape.

That night, fully dressed, she stood beside the window looking out over the moon splashed patio. A furtive figure detached itself from the shadows and crept toward her. Strangely enough it did not frighten her to recognize the butler.

She crouched in the opposite side of the room listening to the faint tinkle of snapping iron bars as the man detached the ends from their sockets. His head and shoulders appeared in the opening.

Breathlessly she watched his approach. There was nothing undecided about his movements. He was swift; he was certain; he was sure. Not a motion, not a step was wasted. He was almost over the bed when Lucille sprang from her hiding place behind the door.

Instantly he turned, his head darting from side to side like that of a giant reptile. He did not speak. Slowly his hands opened and closed, while a grin crossed his face, widened his mouth—a hideously inhuman grin. She tried to cry out, but her lips were frozen shut.

He had almost reached her side. With a gasp Lucille grasped a native vase that stood near and brought it down on his head with crushing force. As he sank to the floor with a moan there was a sound outside, and her mysterious friend, the lover who had promised his assistance, leaped lightly into the room. Reading his thoughts, yet hearing nothing, she moved toward the window and lifted her tiny foot as though to mount a horse. His hands cupped about it. She vaulted to the casement and in a second had scrambled through.

By her side stood the man. For a moment he waited, then urged her forward. She was free, free, free! Of course there were pickets to be passed, but she had made one providential escape tonight, why not another?

Out of sight of the building she paused and looked about her. How calm and peaceful and friendly appeared the night! The moon was full, the stars winked merrily at her, urging her on her way. The touch of a timid finger upon her arm brought her from her reveries.

"The horses wait, my lady."

Came a swift dashing of lights from the house they had left behind, a scurry of feet, the sound of voices, loud, shrill, insistent. The Mexican seized her arm fiercely and half dragged her from off the court to a clump of bushes, where two horses stood saddled and bridled. In a second she was in the saddle, the man beside her.

The clatter of hoofs rang out upon the silence. Looking back, she caught glimpses of dark figures silhouetted against the tropical vegetation in the patio. A spurt of fire leaped out at them like a living thing. The Mexican muttered a guttural oath and urged his horse to more speed. Lucille bent over her horse's head, beat low, for the whine of bullets was in the air about them.

Suddenly the Mexican grunted loudly. His hands shot high in the air; then the horse fairly ran from under him. Upon the ground he swayed a second; then leaped against the shadow of a giant fingered cactus plant. Lucille sprang from her saddle and sought his side.

Red, warm blood gushed from the wound in his chest. His eyes were glazing when she stooped and brushed her lips across his forehead.

"Go!" he muttered. "Go!" Then his voice took on the resonant tone of a scant day or less before. "It is the ripple of the wishing well, my lady. Go! Ride—to the one—your—heart—desires."

He stiffened suddenly and a spurt of tears came from her eyes. Louder grew the shouts, the voices. The air was alive with long, darting flames. Loubeque's hive was swarming.

She leaped into the saddle once more and dug her heels into the horse's sides. Through the night she rode with the ripple of the wishing well in her ears.

Behind her, Lucille could hear the pursuit. Not a second could she spare for thought of regret.

Times, above the ringing of her horse's hoofs, she would hear the shouts of those behind her. Now and then a message of lead would whine its dreadful tale into her ears, but all these were growing fainter, less distinct with every leap of the animal she bestrode.

Hours, it seemed, she rode, with never the slightest slackening of the mad pace to which she originally set her mount. He was lathered with foam, but she had no pity on him. Her brain was fiercely chaotic, wild with the bloody memories of the night.

From now on she had every advantage. She was free and she knew where the stolen papers and documents were secreted in the mysterious house of inexplicable disappearing rooms and stairs. She had the diary of Hugo Loubeque in her possession, and she had the ruby necklace which was equivalent to vast wealth. She had the outward seeming of guilelessness, was girlish and delightfully effeminate, but she knew the power of the claws she had, and her eyes rested fondly on the revolver which she found in a holster attached to the Mexican's saddle, even as she urged her horse to greater speed.

Across the trackless plain she rode with only the moon and stars looking down upon her, a wild, eerie figure of a bareheaded girl. Behind the pursuit had died away and before there was nothing save a slender ribbon of water that the moon buried its face in contentedly.

She heard voices, low pitched, yet carrying far in the silence of the night. Instantly she drew rein and flung herself to the ground, listening intently. Creeping cautiously to a slight rise, she looked down upon an adobe shack, before which a little squad of barefooted Mexicans loafed idly, their brown hands lazily supporting old fashioned Springfield rifles, such as she recalled the soldiers of Uncle Sam to have carried in the old days.

From where she watched she suddenly noticed a stir among the men. From the interior of the shack stepped a gaudily dressed little Mexican, evidently an officer from the awkward salutes accorded him by the tatterdemalions gathered before the house. For some reason she could not gauge, Lucille listened eagerly, her breath coming in quick, eager gasps as she overheard their daring plot to cross the river and stampede the corral of an American ranchman. A little cry of delight came from her lips as she heard their allusions to the United States cavalry they must sift through before hoping for success.

Her eyes were glittering with excitement when she stole cautiously to the adobe shack, peering inside slowly and carefully before entering. She knew all their plans, and her blood was boiling; but she also knew from what they had said that they, too, would be on the lookout for any upset to the well laid plot.

From a chest in the corner, which she hurriedly overhauled, she drew a similar suit to the one the little leader had worn. It would just about fit her, and she must take no chances of trying to cross the Rio Grande attired as she was.

Swiftly she changed, for every moment now was precious to others as well as to herself. Daughter of General Sumpter Love, she was afire with rage at the way the Mexicans had spoken of the border patrol of her country, the presumption of the plan she had heard outlined. The gaudy costume fitted her beautifully, and the broad straw sombrero, with its weight of silver cording and tassels, made it easy for her feminine features to be unrecognizable even as it concealed her long hair.

She was well pleased with herself when again she mounted her horse. The beast had been ready to drop in his tracks any moment, and she had killed two birds with one stone while changing her costume. Cautiously toward the glittering ribbon of river she rode, her eyes always alert for any sign of the Mexican foraging party.

The horse hesitated at the bank of the stream, but Lucille boldly urged him forward.

"Hurrah! We're across!" she said to herself, as, dripping and disheveled, she stood upon the "right side of the Rio." Up and down the bank she looked for signs of the border patrol, but none was in sight. But in the distance she could make out a tiny speck.

The chances were it was one of the Mexicans. But something must be done if the ranchman was to be saved from the plot she had overheard. Fiercely she urged her mount toward the speck in the distance until her heart sank as she recognized the man for one of the plotters.

Hours it seemed to her she pursued the slinking figure until it joined with two others. Gradually, after a few miles journeying, a great blaze shot high in the air, a blaze punctuated by shots and wild cries.

The three men cruelly dashed their spurs into the sides of their horses.

The Costume Fitted Her Beautifully.

Came a thunder of sound as a great bunch of cattle from the remuda of the Americans were driven toward her by the fiendish Mexicans. Lucille saw the danger she was in of being trampled underfoot by that wild herd, driven to frenzy by the flames and popping revolvers from behind them. She urged her own horse to the right, escaping just as the cattle whirled by her in a wild riot of sound. Here and there the Mexicans had assembled themselves, always alert, marvelous horsemen all, keeping the frightened beasts together while they drove them in a direct line for the river.

Lucille felt a shot slash through the sleeve of her jacket. She reined in her horse instantly, for she knew the Mexicans had gained. As she turned she almost collided with a long mustached, grizzled man, driving bullet after bullet after the marauders. She did not speak, did not even rein in, but urged her own horse beside his, drawing her own revolver.

The ranchman uttered a bewildered ejaculation as he saw she was of his own blood.

"I was trying to get there in time to warn you," she gasped. "There's a chance of driving them into the patrol if you know where it is."

Without another word, as though complete understanding had been established, he waved to the right; came a sudden abrupt wheeling of the stampede; came a rifle shot, more like a clear, ringing signal it was than anything else. Lucille heard the sharp voice of the enemy; saw the hesitancy of the Mexicans even as they saddled clean together, facing that solitary figure in olive tights, bestriding his steed as though carved from granite.

They looked frantically behind them. The ranchman's revolver sounded, and their leader threw his hands in the air and flopped over upon his horse's neck. The soldier's voice rang out to them, and the frightened bandits threw down their short carbines in token of surrender. The sentry waited until Lucille and the ranchman came up, then listened to their story, at the end demanding their presence before his commanding officer.

This story can be seen in Photo-Play at the Royal Theatre, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of each week.

Brought it Down on His Head With Crushing Force.

A HUSBAND'S IMPRESSION.

Explains Away What Looked to Be an Exaggerated Statement.

MRS. KNOALL was greatly puzzled—and not without reason. The fact is, she happened to meet Mr. Newlywed one morning as he was rushing to catch his train and ventured, with her usual solicitude for other folks' affairs, to hope that Mrs. Newlywed wasn't having trouble with her servants.

"Oh, no!" said Mr. Newlywed. "We have got three."

Then he dashed off, leaving Mrs. Knoall gasping. Three servants, indeed! Why, it was common knowledge in Suburbville that the Newlyweds were anything but rich. How on earth, then, could they afford to keep three servants? Mrs. Knoall felt forced to call on the bride that afternoon to make investigations.

On his return home in the evening Mr. Newlywed was greeted with this question:

"John, whatever made you tell Mrs. Knoall this morning that we keep three servants?"

John smiled.

"Well, don't we, my dear?" he asked. "It seems to me that we always have one going, one coming and one here."—Philadelphia Record.

Same Meaning.

"Mother, what does it mean when you read about escaping Scylla only to get into worse trouble with Charybdis?" asked Mrs. Baker's young hopeful.

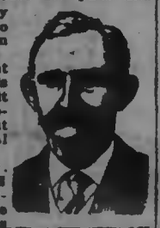
Cured Fifteen Years Ago of Piles and Eczema

By Using Dr. Chase's Ointment—Certifies That the Cure Was Permanent.

Some people have tried so many doctors and so many treatments in their search for cure for piles and eczema that they find it difficult to believe there is an actual cure.



MR. KETCHESON

The strong point about Dr. Chase's Ointment is that it not only brings relief promptly, but brings about actual and lasting cure.

In 1897 Mr. Ketchesson, 88 Douro street, Peterboro', Ont., wrote as follows:—"I was troubled for thirty years with itching piles and eczema. I could not sleep at night, and when I got warm the itching was terrible. Eczema covered my legs down to the knees, perfectly raw. I have tried every preparation I could hear of. Seeing Dr. Chase's Ointment advertised, I procured a box, and this Ointment effected a complete cure."

On Sept. 28, 1912, Mr. Ketcheson wrote as follows:—"I received a letter from you to-day, saying that you found on file a statement made by me 15 years ago. I have always given Dr. Chase's Ointment a good name since it cured me, and shall tell you how it came to use it.

"I had suffered for many years from eczema and piles, and had tried doctors and everything I could hear of in vain. Reading about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I purchased it at once, and was soon completely cured. That was fifteen years ago, so there can be no doubt of the cure being a permanent one. I have met a great many people who have been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

Farm and Dairy Market Report

Toronto, Monday, Dec. 28.—Trade is now experiencing the usual after Christmas lull. Business men expect this cessation of activities and take advantage of it in summing up their year's operations. The Christmas trade as a whole compared more favorably with former years than was expected. During the last week a good volume of business was done. This unexpected business is due in large measure to government contracts, which are keeping factories busy everywhere. Financial men are asking themselves anxiously what will happen when these government contracts cease, and we have to shoulder the burden of paying back all of the money we are expending. Even the prospects of immigration do not cheer as they otherwise would, in that with practically all of our good, free land taken up, immigrants cannot immediately become producers as in the days of old.

Farm trade too is quiet now. The situation generally is excellent, with grains particularly strong and cattle holding firm at last week's decline.

WHEAT

The wheat market was remarkably strong the first part of last week, and advanced quickly past the $1.30 mark. During the rest of the week business was quiet, due to the holiday closing of foreign exchanges. Eyes are now on the wheat crop of the southern hemisphere. The Argentina surplus is estimated at 120,000,000 to 140,000,000 bushels. Ontario wheat too is stronger. No. 1 Northern, $1.31½; No. 2, $1.28½; No. 3, $1.24; Ontario wheat, $1.12 to $1.13.

COARSE GRAINS

There has been a good trade in oats with European countries, but they are now quiet on the advance. Other grains generally strong: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 61c; No. 3, 58c; feed, 57c; Ontario, 46c to 48c; corn, 74½c; peas, $1.60 to $1.70; buckwheat, 76c to 77c; rye, $1.05 to $1.08; barley, 66c to 68c. Quotations at Montreal rule as follows: Oats, C.W. No. 2, 60½c to 61c; No. 3, 59½c; local white, 51c to 53½c; barley, feed, 68c to 70c; malting, 76c to 78c.

MILL FEEDS

The demand for bran is active at $25; shorts, $25 to $27; middlings, $30 to $35; feed flour, $34 to $39. Montreal dealers quote bran $25; shorts, $27; middlings, $30; feed flour, $32 to $35.

POTATOES AND BEANS

The market has weakened perceptibly, about 5c a bag. Ontarios are now offering freely at 55c car lots and New Brunswicks, 60c. At Montreal Green Mountains are quoted at 60c.

Beans here are quoted: Primes, $2.60 to $2.75; hand picked, $2.75 to $2.85. The Montreal quotations on one-pound pickers is $2.65; hand picked, $2.70.

EGGS AND POULTRY

As the market practically depends altogether on storage eggs, the situation is unchanged. Locally fresh eggs are quoted around 35c; selects, 32c to 33c and storage, 29c to 30c. At Montreal new laids are selling at 55c to 60c; No. 1 storage, 35c to 36c and selects, 38c.

Poultry quotations are: Live; Spring chickens, 10c to 12c; old fowl, 8c to 10c; ducks, 9c to 12c; geese, 7c to 8c; turkeys, 12c to 13c. Dressed: Spring chickens, 12c to 15c; old fowl, 10c to 12c; ducks, 14c to 16c; geese, 12c to 15c; turkeys, 16c to 20c. All prices are for choice stock.

DAIRY PRODUCE

The outlook for butter is decidedly brighter than it was a short time ago. Production is continually decreasing, and with this is coming a greater demand for storage stocks. This firmness is evident both in this country, New York and the Old Lands. Prices at Montreal have advanced ½c to ¾c. Choicest creamery butter is there quoted 29c to 30c and seconds, 27c to 28c. On this market fresh creamery prints bring 30c to 31c; separator prints, 26c to 27c; dairy prints, 24c to 25c; bakers, 20c to 23c. Cheese here is quoted 15½c for large; twins, 16¼c.

LIVE STOCK

Drovers took warning from the slump in prices two weeks ago, and reduced shipments accordingly. On Tuesday and Wednesday, for instance, there was not more than a handful of cattle offered. The demand was small in proportion and no great activity is expected until after the New Year, and until then, it will be the part of wisdom to hold down shipments to a minimum. When the Christmas supplies on hand are consumed, the packers will be on the market again.

Shipping steers, $7.50 to $8; butcher steers, good, $7 to $7.25; com. to med., $5.50 to $7; heifers, $6 to $7.50; choice cows, $6 to $6.50; com. to good, $4.50 to $6; butcher bulls, $4.50 to $7.25; feeders, $6 to $6.50; stockers, $4.50 to $6.25; canners and cutters, $3.75 to $4.75.

There is a good steady demand for milch cows at nominal prices. Choice, $60 to $100; com. to med., $40 to $60; springers, $60 to $100. Calves range from $3.75 to $10.

Lambs continue in normal demand; Light, $7.50 to $8.25; heavy, $6.75 to $7.25; culls, $5.50 to $6; light ewes, $5 to $6.75; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $5; culls, $2 to $4.

Hogs show a trifle more strength, packers quoting $6.90 to $7 f.o.b. shipping point.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

6972.

Among the latter may be classed the belt of the picture, which is straight and made long enough not to wrinkle at the hip; that is, the dress is loose enough so that the belt remains unwrinkled. These straight, loose dresses are quite the thing next fall seem to be a protest against the tendency of the basques to define the waistline. The overdress, in this instance, is made of stripe wool fabric, with satin under-dress and buttons. The sleeves (with tab made of the dress material and the belt brought all the way around if one preferred that style. The pattern, No. 6972, comes in five sizes, from 34 to 42 bust measure.

The bolero coats are very often made of velvet and even more frequently of the fur cloths, among which, imitation broadtail is the most popular. Collar and cuffs are made of matching material, and sometimes the bottom of the skirt is finished with a broad band of the fur cloth. Hudson seal may be used in the same way, but while the long haired furs are used for trimming the belt is not apt to be made of the fur.

Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and name of pattern required and send to Pattern Dept. The Evening Examiner, Peterborough, Ont.

Like Snowballing A Dragon Fly In The Sky

LONDON, Eng. Dec. 26—An English officer at the front writes home the following interating letter about war in the air.

The prettiest thing of the whole lot to watch, if you aren't an aviator, is the Germans shelling one of our aeroplanes. They have a special anti-air craft gun, which must, I think, be mounted on a motor carriage, as it is very mobile and which obviously can be fired at any angle from the horizontal to straight up in the air.

It must work on the skyrocket principle, as it lets go a regular string of shells, and considering the tremendous difficulties of the target the Germans are amazingly skillful with it.

They use a fuse which can be set to burst at a fixed height above the ground. When they spot an aeroplane they first burst three or four shells with different lengths of fuse, to discover its height. Having got that they loose off in rapid succession anything up to a dozen shells, all bursting at the same height. If they are lucky they burst all around the machine; they hope that even if they do not actually hit it the explosion will make air pockets which, disturbing its balance, will make it fall.

I don't know what it feels like to be an aeroplane pilot, but it is quite fascinating to watch from a safe place on the ground. You see an aeroplane, looking for all the world like a dragon fly up in the sky. As you watch it a lump of cotton-wool suddenly appears somewhere behind it, then another and another. These are the German shells, bursting. They hang in the air, looking just like snowballs in the distance or lumps of cotton-wool if you are close and then they very slowly spread out and gradually disappear. Meanwhile fresh shells keep bursting, and it looks exactly like a dragon-fly being snowballed.

CULTURE VS. KULTUR

Much Difference in the Meanings of the Two Terms

Discussion of the worth of German culture has been somewhat clouded by the fact that when a German speaks of Kultur he means an entirely different thing from what a Latin or Briton means by culture. Kultur means the organized efficiency of a nation in the broadest sense—its successful achievement in civil and military administration, industry, commerce, finance, and in a quite secondary way in scholarship, letters, and art. Kultur applies to a nation as a whole, implying an enlightened Government to which the individual is strictly subordinated. Thus Kultur is an attribute not of individuals—whose particular interests, on the contrary, must often be sacrificed to it—but of nations.

Culture, for which the nearest German equivalent is Bildung, is an attribute not of nations as a whole but of accomplished individuals. It acquires national import only through the approval and admiration of these individuals by the rest, who share but slightly in the culture they applaud.

Nations with cultured leaders have generally been beaten by those whose leaders had merely Kultur. The Spartans and Macedonians had abundant Kultur; they generally beat the Athenians, who had merely very high culture. The Romans had Kultur, and the Hellenistic world wore their yoke. Germany unquestionably has admirable Kultur, but on the other hand, Germany has singularly little culture. She has willingly sacrificed the culture of a few leading individuals to the Kultur of the empire as a whole. [illegible] not surprising that Germany, as measured by the production of cultured individuals, takes a very low place to-day. Not only France and England, Italy and Spain, but also Russia and America, may fairly claim a higher degree of culture.

Woollens in War

One Hundred thousand Russian tunics were ordered from the Yorkshire mills. This is not the first time that Russia has welcomed material from Yorkshire. Napoleon felt the force of Britain's export trade in the great struggle and tried to crush it by prohibition, and endeavored to start an industrial revolution in Russia in order to get British goods boycotted.

But the British export trade struck to its guns, and so valiantly did they pursue their course, in spite of the Continental system, that, in the retreat from Moscow, the soldiers of Napoleon himself were clothed in the woollens of England.

DIES AFTER SPEECH.

Toronto Temperance Orator Falls Dead When Leaving Hall.

TORONTO, Dec. 30.—While walking down the aisle after making a short address, in which he became somewhat excited, at Howard Park School last night, Mr. A. W. T. Martin, known for many years as a temperance worker, fell unconscious to the floor and died within a few minutes.

Mr. Martin was speaking on behalf of Ald. F. S. Spence, Board of Control candidate, who is ill. He had referred to Mr. Spence's eleven years of service, and concluded his tribute with an emotional and impassioned peroration, praising Mr. Spence as a "good man," during which he worked himself up into a high state of excitement. During the last minute of his speech he was reminded that he had overstepped the ten-minute limit. His face was flushed, and with some dramatic effort he concluded his speech with the recitation of a few lines of poetry. Then when about to leave the hall he fell to the floor.

Cancelling a Mosiem Divorce.

It is well known that under the Mosem religon divorce is made remarkably easy and that there is no need for any legal or religious formalities—a man being able, so to speak, to divorce his wife by word of mouth. This facility often gives rise to unpleasant results, as when a man in a burst of anger will divorce his wife and then utterly repent of his rashness. One such incident happened recently in upper Egypt. It is related that a fellah appealed to his omdeh to help him to regain his wife, against whom he had pronounced the fatal words.

The omdeh told him to traverse the streets of his village for two hours braying like an ass and to eat chopped straw as an ass does, when he would be absolved from his divorce, without needing to go before the cadi. The fellah carried out the order to the letter and then returned to his wife, fully convinced that he had done ample penance for his impetuosity.—Boston Transcript.

Built Upon Cotton.

When the Leasowe lighthouse, England, was built on the sandy Wirral shore the builders were puzzled by the lack of a suitable foundation for the masonry tower. An ingenious way out of the difficulty was effected. In the vicinity an incoming ship, laden with a cargo of cotton, had gone ashore and had become a total wreck. The cotton was useless for its intended purpose, so the bales were salvaged and dumped into the sand at the point where the lighthouse was to be erected. The fleecy mass settled into the sand and under compression became as solid as a rock, while its permanency was assured by its complete submersion. The stability of this strange foundation may be gathered from the fact that the tower erected thereon stood and shed its welcome light regularly every night for about a century and a half, being extinguished only a few years ago, as it was no longer required.—Argonaut.

Corsica and Do Paoli.

While the island of Corsica derives its fame from being the birthplace of Napoleon, the name of Pasquale de Paoli is more dear to the natives, for it was under the leadership of this patriot, in 1755, that they escaped from the yoke of the Genoese. For fourteen years he wisely administered the affairs of the island. In 1769 France bought the island from Genoa and landed an army of 22,000, which Paoli met with a few thousand Corsicans and fought until his army was reduced to 537 men; yet he cut his way through and escaped to England, where he remained twenty years. At the outbreak of the revolution in France he returned to his native land and became military governor, but he could not get on with his old enemy, so he returned to England, where he died in 1807.

Extracting a Splinter.

A splinter that is embedded deep in the flesh can easily be extracted by means of steam. Almost fill a wide-mouthed bottle with hot water, place the spot containing the splinter over the mouth of the bottle and press lightly. The suction will draw the flesh down, and in a short while the steam will draw out the splinter.

Take a Glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers You

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

The Earwig.

There is no insect which has puzzled naturalists as to its proper classification more than the earwig. Some have asserted that it belongs to the beetles, of which it is an "aberrant type," others that it is connected with the grasshoppers. Even about its very name there has been endless discussion. Some have thought the name earwig is the result of the creature's supposed habit of getting into the ears, while others are equally certain that it is derived from the original name, which they say was earwing, from the fact that the wing when spread resembles the human ear. At all events, one thing is certain—the earwig as we know it now is a survival of an early type of which almost every other member has become extinct.

Many Uses For Old Leather.

Old leather material, which finds its way into the waste pile, is extremely valuable and returns to our homes in many other shapes. It is soaked in water to remove the dirt, all the nails and threads are picked out, and the leather is reduced to a thick pulp, from which wall papers, screens, etc., are made. The finer the original quality of leather the better it takes the bronze and old gold of the designs which make these hangings things of beauty. Bookbinders and framemakers also know the value of this pulp, and carriage builders press it into shapes.

FRENCH HAVE CAPTURED STEINBACK

ARE OPENING THE ROAD TO THE RHINE

BATTLING THEIR WAY FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE, FRENCH ARE VICTORS

Facing a Raging Machine Gun Fire From German Rapid Firers Posted on Roofs and Windows--French Soldiers Take Upper Alsatian Village by Storm in Gallant Fashion.

A WIN OF STRATEGIC IMPORTANCE

Examiner Special:

PARIS, December 31. — The official statement to-day says that the French have captured the village of Steinbach, in Upper Alsace, following one of the hardest engagements of the war to date on the western front. They had literally to battle their way from house to house, meeting a raging machine gun fire from rapid firers that the Germans had posted on roof tops and in windows. The losses on both sides were very large. The occupation of this positon is declared to be of the utmost strategic importance, opening as it does the way to roads that run to Altkirch and Mulhausen.

The announcement of this triumph for the forces of General Pau was the chief feature of the official communique issued this afternoon. It was stated at the military headquarters that the Germans were defeated only after hours of the most desperate fighting, in which the French essayed half a dozen bayonet charges.

The fighting is now confined to the centre and left wing of the allied lines. From the sea to the Aisne, the situation was reported to-day as quiet. The snow and rains have made active operations impossible. The troops are remaining in their trenches doing their best to keep warm.

The Germans blew up two of the allied trenches just north of Sillery last night but their subsequent attack was repulsed with heavy loss. The allies held their second line of trenches in the face of a series of bayonet charges, and the Germans were finally compelled to fall back defeated.

North of Mesnilles-Hurlus, the allies have taken the offensive and they have captured a number of German trenches in that region.

To the north of Beau-Sejour Farm a German counter attack was repulsed and the allies acting on the offensive, drove the Germans back on their own secondary lines.

Slight gains were also reported to have been made in the Argonne region.

TOKIO, Japan, December 31.—In its denial of report that Japanese troops had been landed at Vladivostock, the foreign office to-day said: "Japan has not been approached by Great Britain or any other country to send an army to Europe."

RUSH OF RECRUITS AT ARMOURIES FOR THIRD CONTINGENT

Eighteen Accepted for Mounted Rifles and Eleven for Infantry--Men's Pay Will Commence From the Day of Enlistment.

Although the notice was a short one there was a rush at the Armouries last night to recruit for the 3rd Canadian Overseas. Contingent. About fifty men applied and twenty-nine were accepted—eighteen for the Mounted Rifles and eleven for the Infantry Battalion.

The 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons have been asked to enlist 150 men here, and judging by the applications last night they will have little difficulty in securing their quota in this district There was a big crowd of intending cavalrymen on hand last night, and Dr. Cameron passed eighteen, a number being rejected as medically unfit. Nineteen applicants for the infantry were examined by Drs. Sutton and Eastwood and eleven were pronounced fit.

Major Walker announces that recruiting for the infantry will continue to-night at 8 o'clock, and on Saturday and succeeding days from 3 to 5 and from 8 to 10 p.m. It should be understood that the pay for the recruits commences from the date of enlistment; that is to say the men who enlisted last night will receive daily $1.10 pay and 75c. a day rations allowance.

While no orders have been given to that effect it is understood that the infantry and mounted rifles being recruited here, will be mobilized in Peterborough.

THE TURNING POINT OF EASTERN FIGHT

The Overwhelming Defeat of the Austrian Army Has Resulted in the Complete Collapse of the Offensive --Losses in Recent Battles Have Been Enormous.

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, December 31.—A London cable to The Herald says:

"The most important and probably the most far-reaching event in the recent history of the war is the overwhelming defeat of the Austrians in Galicia and the complete collapse of that offensive.

"All messages from Petrograd show a confident belief that with the Austrian defeat and the retirement of the Germans across the Bzura River west of Warsaw, the turning point has been reached in the battles along the Polish rivers.

"The losses in these battles have reached enormous figures in dead, wounded and prisoners."

NEW YORK, December 31.—Discussing the progress of the war, J. W. T. Mason, the war expert of The United Press, says:

"On seas there have been numerous destructions of minor craft, and an occasional capital ship has sunk to the bottom. But the dominating fact of Great Britain's command of the water has in no way been disturbed. Instances of personal daring, of individual luck and ill-luck, of isolated and chance disaster, have been abundant, but they have played no part in robbing the allies of the tremendous advantage of their superior sea power. The trade routes of the ocean were closed to Germany and Austria when the war began, and continued open for the benefit of the allies. The end of the year sees no change in this fact, which if continued, as it doubtless will be, bids fair to become a determining factor in the cause of peace."

NEGOTIATIONS WITH U. S. MAY TAKE MONTHS

Immediate Settlement of All Questions Raised in the American Protest Not Expected

PARTIAL CONCESSIONS

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 31. — Many weeks and probably months will be consumed in discussions between the United States and Great Britain over this Government's shipping protest. Immediate settlement of all questions raised is not expected.

This was stated to-day upon high official authority. The President himself does not expect immediately more than partial concession by Great Britain.

Officials privately pointed out to-day that one of the chief effects, though not the purpose, of the protest to Great Britain, would be to restore confidence everywhere in the world, especially in Germany, that the United States is really neutral in the strictest sense of the word.

It would go a long way, one official explained, towards dissipating the growing impression that the United States was too friendly towards the Allies, because of the unrestrained shipment of arms and ammunition from the United States to the Allies.

NOT SATISFIED WITH VERDICT

Special to the Examiner.

BUFFALO, N.Y., Dec. 31.—Some decisive action will be asked of the United States Government in the killing of Walter Smith, American hunter, by Canadian soldiers, it was declared to-day by Attorney John W. Van Allen, representing the Smith family.

Van Allen is not satisfied with the verdict of the coroner's jury at Fort Erie, Ont., which last night absolved the soldiers of blame and declared Smith was killed while evading arrest for unlawfully shooting ducks.

The report of the military court of inquiry was to-day mailed from Fort Erie to Major-Gen. Hughes at Ottawa.

From none of the officers came the slightest intimation of what the report contained.

CANTATA TO BE REPEATED

"Around the World With Santa Claus" to be Repeated on Jan. 8th by Special Request

The cantata given by the children of Park Street Baptist church on Dec. 16th was such a huge success that on the request of many who were desirous of hearing the production, Mr. H. Hill, the energetic organist and choirmaster of Park Street Baptist church, has decided to repeat same on January 8th. A "full house" is expected, as many who wished to hear the cantata were unable, as they were away on the holiday visits, so now all are to be given another chance to see the production. Come and hear the children and have an enjoyable evening.

Alderman Green's Efforts For Economy In Civic Affair

There Would be No High Taxes if Alderman Green Had His Way—Economy in Expenditure His Watchword.

On the eve of the municipal elections, it behooves the ratepayers to guard well the best interests of the city for the coming year, and to select the most experienced men for the position of aldermen.

It is a regrettable fact that so few of our influential business men can be found willing to offer themselves for civic positions. There will be a lot of hard work to be done and careful management to be exercised in the conduct of the city's affairs next year much more than ever before in its history. And it will require the best skill of the most successful business men to face the problems that will confront our Board of Aldermen for 1915.

Those of our ratepayers who have watched the cautious course pursued by Alderman Green during the two years which he has represented the West Ward, will have been impressed with the economical attitude which he has taken upon all occasions. Even on the occasion when the deputation from the Patriotic Fund waited on the Council for the grant of $10,000—which Alderman Green was personally prepared to do all in his power to assist—his economical hobby was manifest. But while Alderman Green was in hearty sympathy with the gentlemen composing the deputation, he realized the financial obligations the present Council were in that it had already exceeded the limit, and was "heels over head" in debt. He was forced, almost alone, to advise against any more overdrafts. His contention was that he did not think it wise for the present Council to vote away any more of the people's money this year; but would be quite willing to support any sum the coming Council saw it could afford. The deputation admitted that Alderman Green was right in his contention.

As evidence that Alderman Green was heartily in sympathy with the Patriotic Fund, it might be mentioned that he had personally contributed, in a generous manner, to the fund previous to the matter coming before the Council.

PRESENTATION AT PARK STREET

After the weekly practice on Wednesday night of the Park Street Baptist Choir a business meeting was held and Wilton Tranter was elected Choir Secretary for the year 1915. The Choir then decided to hold a recital in February. Mr. T. Marks then called Mr. H. Hill and Mr. A. Daniels to the platform and after a neat speech, thanking them for the willing services in the past, presented each of these with gold.

Messrs. Hill and Daniels, in neat speeches, thanked the Choir for their kind gifts.

The meeting closed with prayer by Mr. T. Marks.

Water Level Is Normal

At a meeting of the Board of Health which was held this morning, a resolution was adopted respecting the cutting of ice on the Trent Canal. It is claimed by the members of the Board that the water is too low for that purpose. Dr. Amys, chairman of the Board, was instructed to take the matter up with Mr. Burnham, M.P.

The Superintendent of the Canal states that the Board has not yet applied for permission to cut ice on the canal so that no arrangements have been made for raising the water at that particular level. The water level of the river is said to be normal.

A CHRISTMAS WIND UP

A wind-up of Chrismas Trees in the Salvation Army took place at Browntown last night in the Orange Hall. The hall was packed to the doors. A good programme was given and Santa Claus did his part well. Over five hundred children were supplied this Christmas with toys, oranges, nuts, candy, etc., and something is being done for New Years as well.

The usual meeting takes place at the Temple at 8 o'clock to-night, the Watch Night Service commencing at 10.30, with a very special meeting of a bright and lively character on New Year's night, taken part in by Junior and Senior Bands, together with a number of pieces by the children. All are invited.

The Temple Band will finish their serenading on New Year's morning if weather permits.

TURNS DOWN A BIG WAR OFFER

SPECIAL WIRE:

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—Rather than do anything that might tend to prolong the European war, Clarence H. Howard, president of the Commonwealth Steel Co., of Granite City, Ill., has rejected an offer for $2,000,000 worth of shrapnel to be used by the warring nations.

Howard, who is spending the holidays here, admitted this to-day:

"Why our company would not accept an order for $10,000,000 worth of shrapnel," he hotly declared when asked about the $2,000,000 order.

"Would it be a laudable thing to make these shells and then send them away so that men might murder each other with them, no, a thousand times no."

Howard, who is a Christian Scientist, is known as "The Golden Rule Steel Men," because of his business scruples.

CHEERED CANUCK TROOPS IN MOVIES; ARRESTED AND FINED

PITTSBURG, Dec. 30. — Before Magistrate J. J. Sweeney, there was arraigned a man who had registered as "John Smith," but who is said to be a resident of Sprickley. Smith said he would call the attention of the British Consul to his arrest in a downtown nickelodeon, and request that the matter be reported to the State Department in Washington. He announced further he probably would prosecute the police and manager of the picture house. He was fined $10.

According to the testimony, Smith's enthusiasm began to effervesce when he saw flashed on the canvas several regiments of Canadian soldiers in manoeuvres on Salisbury Plain, England, preparatory to going to the Front. He clapped his hands and cheered loudly, it is averred.

Quality of Milk Supplied in City

Is Fairly Good—Sanitary Inspector Spence Makes a Number of Tests

The average of one hundred and eighty-four samples of milk tested by Sanitary Inspector Spence is 3.59. This is a fraction higher than the average last year, which was 3.55. There are upwards of twenty-nine milkmen retailing milk in the City, and acording to the Sanitary Inspector they are supplying a fair quality of milk. The standard, as required by law, is three per cent. butter fat. It is interesting to note that the four lowest averages in the entire list were taken from samples of milk produced by Holstein cows. The owners of one herd of this type of cattle barely succeeded in meeting the requirements. Thinking that something was wrong Sanitary Inspector Spence visited the farm, where he secured a sample direct from the cow. The result was the same. This bears out the oft-repeated contention that Holstein cows are noted for quantity and not quality. The milk that tested the highest was from a Jersey cow.

During the year two of the milk producers have erected new barns, and are otherwise conforming with the requirements of the sanitary regulations.

Didn't Resign Soon Enough

Editor Examiner:

Sir,—I am a ratepayer of Ward Five and I feel that ex-Alderman McIntyre has not given us fair play. If he had to resign, why not have done so before nomination day and give us a chance to bring forward some other good man? The whole thing was worked out to benefit someone else. Why not have given us the opportunity to benefit ourselves. We are pretty mad about it, and don't you forget it.

Yours, etc.,
Fifth Ward.

BUDGET SPEECH

Further War Taxes on Liquor and Tobacco Expected

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Dec. 31.—Hon. W. T. White's budget speech at the coming session of Parliament will be unique in many ways. At the present time he is considering ways and means to increase the falling revenues of the Dominion in order to meet current expenditures.

There will be no militia estimates next session, since the militia is now on a war footing and the expenditure is met from war appropriations. There will be no summer training camps next session and no railway subsidies, but despite these deductions the deficit will be large.

Consumers of liquor, tobacco and beer will be called upon for further taxes, and the already largely increased excise revenue duties will be still further increased.

In addition too, it is probable that every man who telegraphs or telephones or travels may be called upon to pay duty. A scheme will probably be evolved whereby an extra charge will be made for every railway ticket sold, every telegraph message despatched and every long distance telephone pay station conversation held in the Dominion.

There is considerable conjecture as to whether there will be any increase in the customs duties.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

The old year is on its last legs. It has been a great and terrible year. Its last five months have created more world-wide disturbance, more universal unchaining of human passions, more outrage and slaughter, than any half dozen centuries of precedent years. But it leaves us in the old rut of duty; leaves us with our work to do, and our place to fill in the new year that is upon us. We need to put ourselves personally right with the conditions the changing year creates; in right relations to the obligations it brings. We cannot worthily place our gift of service to our fellow men upon the altar unless we are at peace with our brother. We might well close the old year by closing out—at cut rate prices to insure a clearance—all our stock of petty enmities, all our hard feelings towards our neighbours, so that we can enter upon the new year and respond to its call of duty with the spirit of brotherhood undimmed in our hearts. Only by bringing ourselves to this condition can we fit ourselves for taking our right place and doing our full duty effectively. The keynote of the call to duty at this time is unity. Imperial, national, civic and individual unity will constitute an irresistible force. We are throwing our whole hearts into the duty of maintaining the unity, integrity, moral and physical, of the Empire. We must put that spirit into our relations to national and civic affairs. We must pull together as a Canadian people, as the Empire is pulling together. We must do the same in regard to our civic and citizen responsibilities. Animated with the spirit of cordial unity, we can enter upon the coming year adequately fitted for the work that lies before us. The condition created by the war are only temporary; and it is our part to strive to bring good out of evil, to work for the better conditions that with right effort, will follow this dark hour, and make true the saying that the darkest hour goes before dawn.

With faith in the good sense of our people; with faith in the triumph of right; with faith in our faith in, and our fidelity to, the divine Providence that stands back of the right cause and the right spirit, we can with confidence wish the world, the Empire, the nation, the community, and all our readers—

A HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR.

CANADIAN NICKEL.

There is considerable newspaper and other talk over the alleged fact that Canadian nickel is indirectly finding its way to Germany to strengthen the enemies of Canada and the Empire. There are claims that the Canadian Government has a protective arrangement with the refineries of Canadian nickel in the United States. But no such arrangement can be effective. The sea is wide and there are many ships besting nickel from United States ports. No arrangement, however great its bona fides, can prevent the diversion of some of the originally Canadian nickel to Germany. We have the world's greatest supply of nickel, but we don't refine an ounce. We send the half-treated ore, the matte, to New Jersey, whence it is shipped abroad. We may not be able under present conditions to prevent Canadian nickel finding its way to the enemy; but we can use the situation in order to provide for absolute control of our nickel resources. Forbidding export of ore at present might create great economic disturbance. We can, however, adopt a policy to be applied hereafter that will prevent one ounce of nickel being captured except with our will. We can apply to nickel the policy we have applied to a limited degree to pulp wood—forbidding export of pulp logs—forbidding export of pulp but a manufactured article. We can easily do that in the interests of Canada. We could have done it and should have done it years ago. Whatever may be the outcome of the present nickel situation, it should lead to a course of action, that will be consistent with the motto, Canada for the Canadians—consistent with the policy of Canada getting the last cent of value in the form of home employment and the other profits involved, out of our natural resources. We should have all the advantages that come from doing in this country all that can be done, in the way of promoting the ultimate form of manufacture. This will be to our highest advantage, and will be no injustice to other countries. They will get our goods and products, but we, while not impairing their value, shall have taken the cream of the profit of the exploitation of our natural resources—of our raw material of every kind.

WIDE RANGE OF RULE.

It is no wonder Germany hates England as a greedy, grasping, monopolizing power. Britain not only has a world-corner on shop-keeping; not only rules the waves; not only rules the land; not only rules the world with her cult of individual and national freedom, but is beginning to establish a monopoly of the rule of the air. Germany hates Britain because it does not, cannot, understand her, cannot appreciate the ideals that make her the greatest force for good in the world. But Germany will learn; though she pays a high price for the knowledge. In spite of herself her own misguided war ridden and force ridden people will get the benefit of the triumph of the British genius of government. Germany began this war of satanic ambition; but Britain will make peace that will make such another war impossible.

FREEDOM AND FORCE.

This war has created new conditions in the British Empire, and in the whole world. But it has not created any new condition in regard to the wonderful oneness, unity and solidarity of the British Empire. In this respect it has created no new condition; it has only demonstrated an essential characteristic and principle of its existence. We never doubted the loyalty of every part and parcel of the Empire. It was as inevitable as the fall of an object, with its support withdrawn. It was and is, the working out of a law as unchanging as the law of gravitation—the law that freedom breeds patriotism; liberty loyalty. It is a wonderful object lesson to the world to note how the faith that freedom breeds is stronger than force. Sir Wilfrid Laurier touched the quick of the relation between the heart of the Empire and the other members of the Imperial family, in the saying that when Britain is at war, Canada is at war. That is, the interests of Great Britain and Ireland are so intimately and inextricably united with the outlying portions of the Empire, that what affects the integrity or interests of the one, affects the other or others. When Britain entered the present war, for the maintenance and vindication of the principles upon which her existence depends, freedom of self-government and national integrity, she automatically drew in the whole of the Empire. We see this in the universal response from every section of the Empire from the least to the greatest, a response as spontaneous as it was general. Canada, sent of her best citizenship, a larger army than Wellington had to win Waterloo. Australia sent soldiers and ships, and put her navy at the service of the Empire with splendid effect. New Zealand and South Africa joined the standard, and India, of alien religion and nominal allegiance, threw in her lot and threw in her famous fighting forces. Every colonial mother's son of Britain sent its help and entered heart and soul into the fight.

Not only that but their resources were deeply drawn upon for other supplies necessary in the condition. Canada led the list with a gift of a million bags of flour, typical of her position in the imperial family, the granary of the Empire—and all the provinces, all the municipalities—the towns and cities gave of their abundance. And not only these, but every little colony, every little red spot among the isles of the sea, give freely and willingly.

The wonderful thing about this wendrous British Empire, is that the action all round was spontaneous—no order was issued, and even no appeal made. Britain saw the fruits of her spirit of government, the fruits of liberty and freedom, falling like ripe fruit into her lap. Freedom and self-government, the widest liberty brings out love and loyalty. The British Empire is run on the volunteer principle. It makes itself worth standing by and preserving as the greatest agency of history in human enfranchisement; and every part stands by every other. There is no compulsion; irresistible elan takes its place. Britain's army of two millions on war footing and constantly growing, has not a single conscript in it. Britain went into the war unprepared because she lived for peace. But when her place in the world as the strength of the weak, the protectrix of the unjustly assailed of nations, was challenged, she rose to the places and trusted and trusted not in vain, to the loyalty of her people, at home and abroad, to stand by the right.

How The British Empire Holds and Pulls Together

A remarkable feature of the war of nations has been the splendid response of the Britain "overseas" to the call of the mother country. And this response has come not only from the great self-governing colonies like Canada, Australia and New Zealand, but has been made abundantly manifest in South Africa, in India, and in Egypt. In no quarter has a deaf ear been turned. Here are a few evidences of sympathy and practical assistance:

Barbados—£30,000 from the colonial treasury (welcomed in the form of sugar.)

British Guiana—1,000 tons of sugar; $12,816 for the Prince of Wales' fund, and gifts of clothing.

Falkland Islands —£2,250 from the legislative council (equal to £1 per head of the population) for the National Relief fund, in addition to £750 collected privately; £4,000 for the Prince of Wales' fund.

Jamaica—Sugar, 300,000 Jamaica cigarets "for use of British troops at the front"; £13,000 for funds for sailors, soldiers, etc., and large presents of oranges and cocoa.

Leeward Islands (St. Kitts and Nevis)—£5,000 to the Prince of Wales' fund; £4,000 for the Prince of Wales' fund, and £1,000 for the Belgian relief fund, from the Dominion legislative council; 1,248 lbs. of guava jelly from Montserrat for the military and naval hospitals and the British forces in the field.

Sierra Leone—£5,000 from the legislative council for the Prince of Wales' fund.

Bermuda—£3,450 per annum for 15 years (approximately £40,000) towards the cost of the war.

Ceylon— £15,000 for the Prince of Wales' fund.

Bahamas—£10,000 from the legislature as a contribution to the expenditure of the war, "being proud of the action of His Majesty's government in upholding the honour and plighted word of Great Britain."

Windward Islands—£2,000 from the St. Lucia legislative council for the purchase of St. Lucia cocoa for the use of the forces, and £1,000 for the Prince of Wales' fund. From Grenada, £6,000 worth of Grenada cocoa for the use of the forces, and £4,000 for the Prince of Wales' fund; from St. Vincent, £2,000 worth of St. Vincent arrowroot for the forces, 25) barrels of arrowroot from the planters, and contributions for the Prince of Wales' fund.

Trinidad—£40,000 worth of cocoa.

Fiji Islands—£5,000 for the Prince of Wales' fund.

Gambia—£10,000 from the legislative council for the Prince of Wales' fund.

Mauritius—1,000,000 lbs. of sugar for the army and 1,000,000 lbs. for the navy.

Southern Rhodesia (Agricultural Union)—Maize.

No wonder Germany is envious of Great Britain's colonial possessions, and demands a place in the sun. Nor can she be confronted by the fact that not one foot of British territory has been lost since the war began, while Germany's colonies, with perhaps one exception, have been lost to her. Instead of getting more in the sun, she is more in the shade than ever.—Brantford Expositor.

Now we see the mightiest military power in the world which has been preparing for war for forty years; which worships the god of force, crumbling to its ruin, broken against the real force, the force of the loyalty and power that freedom, and regard for human rights create. Freedom, not force, is the source of strength.

POWER OF A KEPT PLEDGE.

In a speech in the city of London the other day Lord Curzon said: "The whole of the stability of our position in India depends upon our fidelity to our pledged word. Our relations with the princes, our obligations to the native troops, all depend upon the pledged word of Englishmen. Indian troops were upholding the honour of the British flag not in France alone, but in Egypt, in British East Africa, and in other parts of the world." He was not going to say how many of them had left India, because he did not wish to present a valuable secret to the German Emperor, but he thought the number was probably in excess of anything the world believed. For the first time Victoria crosses are now given to Indian soldiers.

Special Prayers For The Empire

Mr. R. J. Todd Says We Should Pray That Righteousness Shall Cover the Earth

Editor Examiner:

Will you allow me space for a few it may be, humble words, on a subject at the present time seems of great importance and comes very near my heart?

Sunday it was announced in First Church of Christ, Scientist, that next Sunday, in compliance with the request of the Governor-General, at the close of the lesson sermon there would be a special season of prayer in behalf of the Empire. I would like to ask as a true subject of our King, that all who know God aright, and believe in the method of prayer as taught in Christian Science, be present on this important occasion. To my mind this should be no formal obedience but a sincere searching of hearts, as a great responsibility is laid upon every one who believes in God and power of prayer. If King or Governor were drowning and called for our individual help we would gladly do anything we could do, to save them. Here is a more important call, not the saving of one or two, but of millions of human lives, and a righteous cause.

Recently when I read of the slaughtering of women and children on the coasts of England, there arose in me a spirit that wanted to be there, and slay the intruder with a blade, but such was not my power or privilege; now we have an opportunity of doing our duty as loyal Canadians.

We do not have to intercede with God to be on our side, and help us slay the other fellow as some aver. This would only build a wall between God and the object of our prayers. Abraham Lincoln said: 'Let us not ask that God be on our side, but that we be on God's side.' I listened to a lecture once by Dr. Wild, in which he claimed Britain was the lost tribe of Israel. In this same lecture he said that England would have a desperate struggle, would be almost overpowered, but would arise and be the great nation of the world. Would it not be well for us, as British, to think that that time is come? The scriptures say; "As a man thinketh, so is he," Shakespeare said, "There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so."

If we are the Israel of this age would it not be well for us to try and imitate the old when led by Gideon against the host of Midianites, (see Judges, 7 chap.) Let us then be as Israel of old, every man in his place, in our obedience to the call for help. Remove the object or thought that would obscure the light and let the light of righteousness and freedom shine so brightly that the host of greed, cruelty and mad ambition will flee before it. It is only the evil we wish to destroy, but if certain nations or personalities persist in clinging to the wrong, let them go down with it. We are not praying that the Germans, or any other nationality be destroyed, but that righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters the sea, and our beloved soldiers saved from having to slaughter their fellowmen.

Again I say, let us be in real earnest that great good may be the result of our united thought, based on the one God, Love, who is too pure to behold iniquity, and changes not. Great is our God; in Him alone do we trust. Have love! Not love for me alone

But man as man, thy brother call;
And scatter, like the circling sun
Thy charities on all.

—Schiller.

Thanking you in advance.

ALLIES' MEN LOSE MINDS UNDER THE TERRIFIC STRAIN

Many Suffering from Nervous Collapse Sent Back to England

SOUTHAMPTON, Dec. 30.—Insanity and nervous prostration are invaliding large numbers of allied forces who have lain for weeks under German fire in the trenches about Ypres. The insanity wards in the big government hospital at Netley are filled to overflowing and all the hospitals in the south of England have many patients who suffered absolute nervous collapse and have been sent back to England for treatment.

Most of the cases improve greatly as soon as the men get into new surroundings and are afforded quiet. Many of the patients suffering with nervous afflictions declared when they left Belgium that they could never endure further service under the fire of heavy guns, but clamour to return to the field of action as soon as they get a grip on their nerves.

An amazing number of invalided soldiers have never been touched by a bullet or a shell and show no physical signs of disability. Some of the most desperate cases are men who were terribly shocked by shells which exploded near them. One sergeant, a boy of eighteen, who recently left Netley to visit his relatives in Manchester, was hurled through the air forty feet by the force of an exploding shell, not a fragment of which touched him. Both of his eardrums were broken and he was unconscious for several days. His brain was so affected that he was unable to see anything for weeks to come, he became the least excited.

Must Have New Environment.

When he left the Netley Hospital he still walked somewhat unsteadily, and complained that dark spots frequently appeared before his eyes. Physicians get such patients away from hospitals as speedily as possible that they may be more free from military surroundings and reminded less frequently of their experiences in the field.

As in the case in nearly all military actions soldiers are on rare occasions found shooting their own hands and feet, or exposing their arms and hands to the fire of the enemy that they may get wounds which will relieve them from service in the trenches. This is attributed to shattered nerves in many cases, although there are occasional court martials in cases where there is reason to believe that cowardice inspired such action. In engagements where the fighting is at such close range as in the present position in Belgium it is a simple matter for a soldier to expose his head or arm and catch a bullet from the enemy's trenches.

Bad teeth are playing havoc with the English troops exposed to cold and dampness in the trenches. Many dentists have been sent to the front to treat defective teeth which have caused neuralgia and disabled men otherwise sound.

Dental Trouble Frequent.

Recruiting officers were at first extremely particular about the teeth of applicants for admission to the army but it soon became necessary to let down the bars. As the middle and lower class people of England take indifferent care of their mouths and seldom have their teeth treated, dentists' chairs have been numerous.

"I am not going to bite the German," was the protest of an Englishman turned down at the opening of the war because of defective teeth. The developments of the last few months have convinced that no man is better than his teeth. Inability to masticate the coarse army food properly has incapacitated large numbers of soldiers, who were actually allowed to leave the front because their teeth and swollen jaws aggravated by standing for days in wet trenches.

It is not unusual to see new recruits who have part of their front teeth missing, and others badly decayed. But such men are turned over to the army corps as rapidly as possible to receive careful treatment at the public schools in London and other large cities are having the teeth of recruits examined and encouraging words are sent to the mouth, but the movement is so recent that the general public has not been thoroughly aroused.

Dum-dums Don't Fit the Rifles

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31. — The sample of dum-dum bullets put in evidence by the German ambassador Count Bernstorff, as having been used by British troops fighting in Belgium and northern France, it was announced yesterday, do not fit any British rifle. It is also believed that the sample dum-dum bullets are not fit the bore of any military rifle known by the German and Austrian forces.

The Government has evidence that the German samples are sporting bullets, capable of being used only in big game rifles.

They are believed to be the product of an American manufacturer.

To Restrict Wheat Export.

DELHI, India, Dec. 31. — (Via London.)—In view of the abnormal amount of wheat the India Government decided to restrict exports to 1,000,000 tons of wheat, including flour, from Jan. 1 to March 31, 1915.

The export will be confined to certain countries, to which a strong demand for the grain exists.

THE UNITED STATES' PROTEST AGAINST BRITISH BLOCKADE—Washington's note, described as the strongest addressed to any power since the war began, was prepared by Robert Lansing, a Washington counsel, being revised by Secretary of State Bryan and President Wilson. It has been transmitted through the ambassadors to Sir Edward Grey and a reply is anxiously awaited. The situation is a sensitive one, resembling that which one hundred years ago, when there was little Anglo-American friendship, led to serious results.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL SIR J. G. MAXWELL IS THE MAN OF THE HOUR IN EGYPT

Commander of British Force Known and Respected by Egyptians and Soudanese Alike

LONDON, Dec. 30—Turkey's entry into the field has focussed much attention on Egypt, and the Tatler devotes an interesting article to a description of the man of the hour, Lieutenant General Sir John Grenfell Maxwell, the commander of the British forces in that country.

Lieutenant General Maxwell was born in 1859 and duly went to Cheltenham, where he made a name for himself as a mighty exponent of "Rugger." From that temple of learning he went to the R. M. C., and when twenty years of age was gazetted to the famous Black Watch. Three years later, the article states, he made the famous night march across the desert with the Highland Brigade and helped to storm the Egyptian rebel fortifications at Tel-el-Kebir. In the Nile expedition of 1884-85 he received his first mention in despatches.

A Model A. D. C.

In 1885-86 he was with the Egyptian frontier field force as A. D. C. to his cousin, Major-General Grenfell. Socially he was a model in that capacity, for he danced exquisitely, played polo hard, was a wonderfully good rifle shot, and real expert at organizing gymkhanas. He followed his career with equal strenuousness. He was present at the engagement of Giniss, for which he got the D. S. O. and at Gemaizah, in 1888, when he was made brevet major, and got the third class Medjidie. Again at Dongola, in 1896, he was made brevet lieutenant colonel, and mentioned in despatches. By this time he really was getting on, and K. of K. looked upon him with favour. In consequence of Kitchener's approval was that Maxwell commanded the Second Egyptian Brigade at the battle of Omdurman, and again won more favour in the sight of Lord Kitchener.

When the South African war broke out General Maxwell was at Khartoum, but in January, 1900, his former chief sent hastily for him, and gave him a brigade in South Africa, and a little later made him Military Governor of Pretoria. He was successful in that land of ruined reputations, and for his services in South Africa he received the Queen's medal with three clasps and the King's medal with two clasps. He was also made a K. C. B. and C. M. G.

One would have thought that he would have been busy enough without having had time to fall in love, but as a matter of fact he did with a charming American, Miss Lady Selina Bonynge. This charming woman who probably is as brilliant and vivacious as any of her sex in the whole world, did her best to be the model general's wife.

Among other things she did to assist her lord and master when he was Governor of Pretoria, was to write to the New York Herald asking for donations of warm clothing for the Boer women and children in the Boer refugee camps. Her appeal was successful.

Appeals for Recruits.

After South Africa Sir John Maxwell became chief staff officer to the Duke of Connaught. He relinquished this post in 1910 in order to take up the command of the troops in Egypt. At the beginning of the war Lady Maxwell wrote a very striking appeal to aid enlistment, which ran somewhat as follows: "Must we feel ashamed to be English women when we see you skulkers watching football and cricket matches and lying in the sun on the grass as if you fondly deluded yourselves into the idea that no danger could come to you while your fellow countrymen are shedding their blood on the battlefields? Awake! I am a woman, alas! and I cannot go but my man has gone, and had I ten I would send every one of them to fight for England's sake."

It is true the man has gone a-fighting. He is now at his post in Egypt, where, now that Turkey has insisted on having its neck wrung, he is likely to see more bloodshed. General Maxwell can keep his own counsel. He not only knows the Egyptians and Soudanese, but he is known and respected by them as a man of firm will and indomitable enterprise, one who is not to be trifled with and one who knows how to lead his troops to victory. He was one of Kitchener's original discoveries. Kitchener has tried him in many capacities and still retains him. Kitchener does not keep failures.

Red Cross Forwards Comforts.

LONDON, Dec. 31.—Canadian Red Cross officials here have within the last few days sent over 2,000 mufflers and pairs of socks to Salisbury camp. Thirty thousand cigarettes and many thousand packages of tobacco were distributed among the soldiers in camp hospitals. Red Cross officials here, while giving due regard to present necessities of the troops at Salisbury, are prudently looking ahead to the time when the men will be at the front, and are endeavoring accordingly to conserve their resources until that time.

EFFECT OF ROUMANIA'S CO-OPERATION WITH RUSSIA—The Roumanian army, in addition to taking the Austrian armies on their flank, whole east half of the Austro-Hungarian empire, assisting the advance of the Russian left wing for invasion of Germany.

THE BUSINESS OF FIGHTING---YOU GO ABOUT YOUR JOB WHETHER IT RAINS RAIN OR BULLETS

CALAIS, France, Dec. 20.—I have just come from a point as near to the firing line in northern France as the ordinary non-combatant can get.

A new phase of the war has arrived. Daily fighting in the trenches and from village to village has brought it about. This new phase is that fighting is now a business. The soldiers' work on the firing line is a job. Nobody thinks about heroes any more. To the layman they'd all be heroes—Belgian, German, Britisher and Frenchman.

A hail of bullets is like a rainstorm to a farmer. Either you quit till the storm is over or you go out in the field and get wet.

If the storm is too severe to do anything you all get under shelter and joke or cuss about it. So it is now on the front in northern France.

I was resting by the roadside the other day when an officer on the English engineer corps came along. He was grimy and muddy from heel to cap peak.

We sat and talked. The village fighting, he told me, is almost worse than trench work. "We sappers have to go right down each street, blowing up every house in turn, to smoke out the snipers," he said.

"Sometimes our men are at one end and the Germans at the other, and sometimes each takes one side.

"The German snipers hide everywhere and have to be regularly hunted out. In the end very few get away. Once our men had cleared out almost the lot when they found about a dozen at the top of one of the last houses firing away as hard as they could.

"An officer and an interpreter walked up and shouted to them that if they would surrender no harm would come to them.

"They replied by shoting them both dead as they were talking. Our men were wild, and did not want to wait until we brought the house down with a charge of dynamite. When it fell about our ears the snipers were dug out, curiously enough, unhurt.

"After being medically examined they were tried by drumhead and shot there and then.

"We always lose a lot of men in this work, but it is their own fault. They are as cool as cucumbers. I saw a company set out its kitchen in the middle of a street when the place was being bombarded.

"They cooked their dinner as quietly as if in barracks, and were eating it laughing and joking. A shell fell, however, plump in the middle of the party, killed four, and wounded half a dozen more. Do you think they took shelter after that? Not a bit! They merely moved about a hundred yards further down the street and finished their meal as if nothing had happened.

"When we take a village we never dare go boldly in, as the Germans always have a picked lot of snipers behind. We have to blow holes in the walls and take house by house as well as driving tunnels underneath the roads to get across without being shot at.

"But here again our men will never use the underground, and whilst the bullets are whizzing like hail you will see a man stroll across the street with a kettle full of hot water or some such thing wanted on the other side.

"One thing the public does not seem to hear much about is the work of the stretcher bearers. They do more dangerous jobs than anybody, and are at it night and day.

"We never pick up our wounded. That is their work, and they have to bury them sometimes and always to take their names and numbers, when frequently there is nothing much else left of a man.

"It was they who had to look after the men, killed and wounded whilst eating, of whom I told you just now, and they were there for half an hour, being sniped at with more shells coming."

PETROGRAD (By mail to New York).—A Russian Sister of Mercy named Yevgheneeya Korbesnah, has been decorated with the band of St. George and a medal in recognition of her remarkable bravery and devotion in moving, singlehanded, a field hospital under fire.

Miss Korbesnah was working in a Russian hospital in the neighbourhood of Soldau, East Prussia. When the Germans attacked the Russian position she remained all alone in the hospital attending to the wounds of officers and privates. WILL NOT SEIZE FOOD

Germany Promises Justice to Belgians For a Time

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31. — Germany has informed the United States she will not make requisitions for food supplies in Belgium "while the International Commission is sending in food, and for a reasonable time after the last delivery."

This concession was obtained from Germany personally by Ambassador Gerard. In reporting the act of Germany to the State Department Ambassador Gerard says that he "acting not officially, but as one of the chairmen of the Belgian Relief Commission," called, with the Spanish Ambassador and the Netherlands Minister, on the German Under Secretary of State. Mr. Zimmerman That official gave the requested assurance.

Mr. Gerard's despatch was very gratifying to officials of the State Department. While Mr. Gerard has reported the facts very briefly, it is understood here his argument to the German Government was that requisitions for food upon a people who had to be sustained by foreign aid could not be made with equity.

The Department officials are especially gratified over the guarantee that Germany will not make any requisition until "a reasonable time after the last delivery" of food.

This is interpreted to mean that Germany intends to let the Belgians recuperate.

The Belgian Minister yesterday filed with the State Department a protest against the requisitioning by German military authorities in Belgium of merchandise worth about 57,000,000 francs, and which the Germans have forwarded to Germany.

RUSSIANS CONTINUE TO FORCE THE FIGHTING

Attack From the South Has Failed and Germans In Central Poland Are Waiting For a New Plan of Campaign

LONDON, Dec. 31. — Since the Russian defeat of the Austrians in Galicia, which, while not irreparable, is likely to have a marked effect on the whole Austro-German campaign in the east, there has been no important development on either front.

With the defeat of the Austrians in Galicia and south Poland and the retirement of the Germans across the Bzura, Petrograd believes that the turning point has been reached in the battle of the Polish rivers. The chief fighting is now taking place on the Pilica, where the Germans are still on the offensive and have brought up big guns.

The losses in these battles have reached enormous figures in dead, wounded and prisoners, and must have been largely added to by disease, for the men fought under dreadful climatic conditions and in mud, for which Poland is notorious.

A despatch from Lemberg says:— "The simultaneous attacks of the Austrians in western Galicia and from the Carpathians proved to be a complete failure. Unofficial reports reaching here state that the losses of the Austrians were enormous, and that the Russians have taken as many as 50,000 prisoners, including many Germans.

"Trainloads of guns and other war booty pass daily through Lemberg."

The correspondent of The Daily News at Petrograd telegraphs:

"The destruction of the enemy's combination in the southern campaign is enabling the Russians to regain the initiative and inflict on the German-Austrian line the break which was projected of the Nida and the Vistula, just inside the southern border of Poland, in Galicia.

"All the Austrian forces below this line have been so scattered that the Hungarians alone have to face Russia's southernmost army. Columns moving across the eastern Beskiden into Hungary often are entirely without artillery, which they have lost or abandoned in the hurried retreat.

"The main German forces in central Poland are awaiting a new scheme of operations. They have evacuated Opocsno and remain comparatively passive from exhaustion. To the north of the Bzura, Field Marshal von Hindenburg is expected to try some other shock attack.

"The new line of defence works being built are equipped with heavy artillery and deep infantry trenches on the hills. This position is six miles behind the previous outer defences."

Plot Is Uncovered

Austro-Germanic Plan to Get Supplies of Food, Footwear and Textiles is Uncovered in Italy

MILAN, Dec. 31. — Through the vigilance of the Ministers of Finance and Commerce in Rome a vast Austro-Germanic conspiracy has been unmasked. It was a plot with ramifications all over Italy, particularly in Naples, Genoa, Florence and Milan. Its purpose was to corner and smuggle contraband, foodstuffs, footwear, blankets and warm material, from some small port in the Adriatic aboard Austrian steamers and sailing vessels. One of the principal firms concentrating its activities on this contraband traffic turns out to be a big German concern, which has its chief establishment at Bergamo. The haul made by the customs guards at Genoa consists of a $400,000 consignment of military clothing intended for transit to the belligerents of the central Empires.

Two Men Arrested.

ROME, Dec. 31. — In connection with the German contraband scandal, Dr. Fiore and Signor Castrignano, a customs officer, have been arrested. A search of Dr. Fiore's house by the police revealed that he had been in close touch with the German embassy and that the embassy officials had been sent here to organize contraband traffic. Several of these officials have been requested to leave Italy. Compromising documents have also been found in the houses of both the arrested men, also $750,000 sent from Germany for the purchase here of rice, which is largely replacing wheat in bread-making in Germany. Signor Castrignano attempted to bribe a customs official with the object of smuggling rice through Italy and offered him $30,000, representing a commission of 10 cents per quintal. This proves that this enormous quantity of rice was intended for Germany, and that the latter was prepared to pay a high price for it.

FIRST BOYS' CONFERENCE OF METHODIST CHURCH BROUGHT TO CONCLUSON

Auspicious Gathering at George St. Church Last Night—Young Men Pledge Themselves to Carry on the Good Work.

SPLENDID TOAST LIST

The first Methodist Boys' Conference in Canada, held in the George Street church during the past three days, was brought to an auspicious close last night, when at six o'clock a splendid banquet was tendered the delegates from the various districts. The conference was an earnest and inspiring one in the broadest sense of the words. The words that the speakers gave to the young men were filled with splendid counsel for the delegates, and light before them the glorious paths trodden by those who gave themselves up to work for others. The speeches were replete with effective exhortations to the young men to take their stand for Christ and to crystalize their good into action and service for others. The four-fold standard of mental, physical, spiritual and serviceable [illegible] and development for every young man, was explained in a manner which struck the chords of youth in the character of the outside and local delegates.

The conference, too, will no doubt have a far reaching effect. The young men who spent three days here listening to the advice and the representations of the various speakers to obtain "training for service" go home to their various constituencies with the promise of great things to be done on their lips and the fixed purpose of winning men to Christ in their hearts. The conference seems to have filled a great need in the great organization of the Methodist church in Canada, and the result will be local "echo conferences" in several of the places who were represented at this one. This city is fortunate, too, to have its name associated with this, the first convention of young Methodism, irrespective of what organizations of the church they are connected with.

The Executive committee, composed of the Rev. R. A. Whattam, Orono, President, Rev. Chapman, Canton, Secretary, Rev. Peever and the officers, deserve much credit for the success which they planned and carried out the conference and made every preparation for the arrival, billeting, meeting and entertaining of the young men from outside towns. On Monday night the young men were banquetted in the George Street church, on Tuesday dinner was served in the Charlotte Street church, Wednesday they were the guests of the ladies of St. James' church for dinner, and last night they again were the subjects of the hospitality of the George Street church.

During their stay in the city the boys and young men were taken to some of the leading factories of the city, and were given the opportunity of seeing the Lift-Lock and other points of interest.

The ample accommodations provided by the ladies of the George Street church for the banquet last night were taxed to the limit by the large number of delegates who took advantage of their kind offer. The Rev. R. A. Whattam of Orono, presided in his usual happy manner, and at the head of the table on the platform of the Sunday school room, were the speakers and officers of the conference. The spread arranged by the ladies was a generous and delightful one, and was done ample justice by the young men. The eatables vanished with much rapidity, showing that in their zeal to help the other fellow none of the delegates had forgotten their appetite.

At the conclusion of the meal was a very interesting toast list. The toast to The King was honoured with the singing of God Save the King, and Mr. Brown of Havelock proposed the toast to the Hosts. This was responded to in a neat speech by Mr. Hunter Lewis. "The First Boys' Conference" was the subject of the following toast which was proposed by Mr. C. D. Daniels, and responded to by Mr. Rose Laing. "Our Pastors" were honoured in a neat proposed by Mr. Lee. Cooper and was responded to by the Rev. H. G. Peever, Higgs, H. B. Kenny, Geo. Brown, Irwin, J. N. Clarry, Clark, Wicket, R. G. Lewis, C. E. Cragg, R. Samforth and Cobb. The toast to the speakers was proposed by Mr. Tucker of Orono, and responded to by Dr. Stephenson, who said that the conference had been an inspiration to all of the speakers. The vote of thanks to the Executive committee was responded to by the Rev. J. F. Chapman.

After the toast list had been completed the commitment exercises were held under the direction of Mr. Taylor Statter. The various district secretaries were called upon to read the resolutions which had been made by the delegates from their respective constituencies. Practically all of the delegates pledged themselves in these resolutions to stir up the young life of the various churches when they returned home, to the necessity of bringing in the outside boys and of increased organization in connection with the work inside of the school. Most of the districts had determined to adopt the four-fold efficiency tests, and some announced their intention of holding echo conferences in their respective cities.

THE CHIMES WILL BE RUNG

The "Old Year, out" and the "New Year in" will be rung from the tower of St. John's Church on the "Peoples' Chimes" to-night, from 11.45, p.m., 1914, to 12.15 a.m., 1915. They will also be played on New Year's Day at 10.30, after the morning service. —Rich. J. Devey, Chimes-master.

Mr. Duncan Replies to Writer's Insinuations Re Workmen

To the Editor:

Dear Sir,—The letter in your paper last night signed "Workingman Voter" is a rather mean attempt to injure me in the eyes of English ratepayers. He wrote, "As for getting value for money expended does he mean by that to employ Italians in preference to British subjects?" Rumour this summer said he stated that Italians were far better than Englishmen." The insinuation is so unfair it scarcely deserves a reply, but to set aside all doubt you would oblige me by publishing this statement.

One of the foremen on sewer work reported to the Engineer that some of the English and Canadian workmen would not work with the Italians, and the foreman stated his opinion that they were not as good for that kind of work as the Italian labourers. I repeated this in Council and since then "rumour" has twisted it to make it appear that it was my own statement. You kno wthe Engineer engages the men, and the foreman's duty is to see that the work is carried out. Personally I do not knew the labour qualities of the men who put down the sewers, for I have never followed them as foreman, nor as city engineer. That is outside the duties of the chairman of the Board of Works. I do know that the general opinion is that both English and Italian labourers as a class are good workmen, but I know nothing of the merits of the particular case which I related in Council. I simply told the members of the Council the explanation that had been given to me.

I feel sure that as far as the number of workmen is concerned there were more English labourers employed during the past year while I was chairman of the Board of Works, than there was during either of Mayor Buller's years in that position. In the first place there was more city work going on, and secondly there were more Englishmen thrown out of their regular employment, and rather than be idle many of them found jobs in the city's work. I am not trying to take any particular credit to myself in this regard. Circumstances had possibly as much to do with that condition as I had. The Mayors that I have been in the Council with all encouraged Italian labour, but in good years the Englishmen had better employment and did not need to fall back on city work. But there have been Italians who have worked for years at sewer and water work and there is positively no reason why any workingman should attempt to injure me now by hinting that I would discriminate against Englishmen.

Our Italian ratepayers who have their homes here and are paying taxes deserve consideration and they have received it as far as I know, and I believe they will continue to receive the same treatment under future Mayors. It is only fair to them that they should be so treated. However, I do not want an undue rumour to spread and that I should be blamed for a statement which I gave as an explanation coming from a sewer foreman. I am making an appeal to the common senses of the ratepayers. This rumour is both baseless and senseless. I did not make the statement from which the rumour arose, and suraly it will not be believed that I "stated that Italians were far better than Englishmen."

Thanking you, Mr. Editor.

George H. Duncan.

To the Editor of The Examiner, City:

Peterborough, December 31st, 1914.

Dear Sir,—I am a candidate for the Board of Education and seek election on the ground that a different kind of administration should be inaugurated. The Board of Education now owes to their Bankers, $17,000, although they had approximately $95,000 to spend this year and were granted something like $85,000 for the building of the East and West Ward schools. The rate this year was 9.75 mills on the dollar, which is almost the largest rate of any of the City Municipalities in Ontario.

I contend that the meetings of the Board of Education should not be held in the back room of any Corporation's offices, but should be held in the City Hall Buildings where the public and the press can see how money by the thousands of dollars is being spent and used. If I am elected I will see that no private gain goes into the pockets of the members of the Board and that no members of the Board deal with the Board of Education in a business way.

Time and again the press has been excluded from meetings of Committees of the Board of Education, and these meetings are held behind three doors where it is practically impossible for the public to find out the location of them, and to ascertain what business is being done.

A certain ring has existed for years, which it has been almost impossible to break up, and I am out to smash this ring if I can.

In a canvas, an attempt has been made to injure me, on the ground that I went into the City Council seeking a position. I never sought any position, but when Mr. Hall resigned the City Solicitorship, then I was appointed Solicitor for the City Council, and I have never met any person who did not agree that I have carefully and energetically performed my services as City Solicitor.

A certain pot-hunter who may be injured financially if I am elected, has circulated the story that I am seeking the Solicitorship for the Board of Education, which I do not want and would not take, as the interests of the Board of Education and the City may be in conflict, and my view is, that one man should not act for both.

If I am elected I will see that no straw men are put up to sell supplies to the City without tender, when the profit goes to the principal. I will also see that expensive deputations do not go out of town on the people's money, with the suggested object of improving the knowledge of the deputation in educational matters, when the benefit to these members is nil. My platform is for strict economy, purchase by tender, no profits on contracts or business transactions to go to any member of the Board which has the right to make contracts.

It has been suggested that I am after the scalp of some Appointees of the Board of Education. This is absolutely untrue. I simply seek an administration along business methods, which the people of Peterborough are entitled to as never before.

Yours truly,

G. N. GORDON.

GOD'S WILL

"And God * * * seems to countenance this awful carnage, massacre, murder. Why permit rivers of blood and tears? He must perceive thousands of men, mowed down, mutilated by their fellow men—their brothers. He must see their widows, the fatherless, in sorrow, destitution, despair. He must view the destruction, the desolation. To what, end?

"I cannot believe that God delights in such tragedies of humanity. I cannot believe that He sanctions such cruelties, such horrors, and this heartless, relentless war. I cannot believed that he would allow the extermination of such peoples upon the face of the earth. Yet if so—why does this 'all-loving' God, this omnipotent and omniscient Being, not effect a reconciliation between the contending powers? Why did He not suppress all this bloodshed and sorrow? Why does He not interfere upon the prayers of Catholicism and Protestantism?

"I ask, do you wonder that people begin to doubt His existence? Do you wonder that people begin to think that religion is, after all, but the invention of the church, the clergy, and superstition? The foregoing are sentiments [illegible] me by one who signs 'A Free Orthodox.'"

THE LINEUPS FOR TO-NIGHT'S BATTLE

All arrangements have been completed for the benefit game at Brock Street rink to-night between the Peterboro High Old Boys and the local junior O.H.A. team. Fred Kelly will handle the bell and will get the teams under way at 7.45 o'clock sharp. The following line-ups are announced.

Old Boys		Peterborough
Dernsher	Goal	Legros
Matthews	R. Defence	Long
Cavanah	L. Defence	Smyth
Hamilton	Rover	Knapman
Smith	Centre	Jackson
W. Stratton	R. Wing	O'Connell
R. Stratton	L. Wing	Richardson

Substitutes will be allowed and the Old Boys may spring surprises. Rumour has it that Jerry Coughlin, now of the Irish Americans, New York, who is home for the holidays, may be on the line-up. As it is the visitors have a team that will take a lot of beating. The defence is particularly strong, and Wilfrid Stratton is a forward line in himself, while the R.M.C. boys who are with him will give the local defence all kinds of trouble. The game will give the fans a good line on the capabilities of the local juniors.

The proceeds of the game and skating will go towards the Salvation Army home.,

Aston Villa's Appeal to Their Players

In every way Aston Villa, like all football clubs, has shown the real patriotic spirit in this period of national stress They have undertaken military training, they have subscribed generously to the relief funds and they have done their utmost to encourage recruiting among both their players and supporters. Now they have issued the following letter to every player in their service:

Dear Sir,—In handing you the enclosed circulars from the Football Association and the Voluntary Recruiting League, I and my fellow directors desire to particularly emphasize the call for men therein made, and to remind you of Lord Kitchener's appeal for "Men and Yet More Men."

We ask you to let your thoughts dwell for a moment upon the terrible devastation and destruction wrought by the cruel Germans in Belgium and Northern France, and to try and picture the sufferings and misery of those thousands of innocent men and women, and little Helpless children, who have been ruined, rendered homeless, and driven destitute and starving from their native land by the Kaiser's callous hordes of soldiers

And remember this: If the Germans are victorious, then our own beloved country will surely be invaded, our towns and our homes will be destroyed, and our kindred and children will have to endure far worse horrors and sufferings than have even fallen to the lot of the French and Belgians, for they will have no country to which they can fly for safety or protection.

Let every man ask himself these questions: Does my Country need my help? Ought I to be serving with the colours? And let each one answer as his conscience dictates. For our part we repeat what we said to you in the early part of the season, that, in our opinion, the best means of helping the country is by way of joining the colours. And we again promise to pay half the wages of any players who care to enlist.—On behalf of the directors, yours truly, F. W. Rinder, Chairman.

O. H. A. Executive Refuse Local Player Permission To Play

TORONTO, Dec. 31.—An important meeting of the O.H.A. Executive Committee was held last night at the Telegram Office, with President Chas. Farquharson of Stratford in the chair, and the following members present: J. Ross Robertson, Jas. T. Sutherland, Kingston; Sheriff J. F. Paxton, Whitby; A. E. Copeland, Midland; C. L. Macrae, Orillia; G. E. Dawson, Sarnia; Frank Hyde, Woodstock; H. M. Glover, Peterborough; Robert Hamilton, Hamilton; H. E. Whitehead, Berlin; Dwight J. Turner, and Secretary W. A. Hewitt.

The Committee decided to issue an order prohibiting any hockey player practicing or being allowed out with regularly constituted professional teams, under penalty of expulsion. Such a state of affairs will be construed prima facie evidence of professionalism.

No one who has played in soccer football with or against players who have been paid for their services can play with or against any O. H. A. man in either competition or exhibition games. This will debar Pete Bauer of the Shamrocks, and every other N. and B. player who desires to play hockey.

Wilbert Beatty was granted a certificate to play with Midland, for whom he has played for some years.

Jack Brown was declared ineligible to play in Toronto under the residence rule.

The residence of Allan German was declared to be Port Colborne. Weitland also claimed him.

W. Adams and R. C. Armstrong were refused certificates to play with Orillia juniors under the residence rule.

E. C. Langman was granted a certificate to play with Belleville.

Certificates were granted to L. J. Ruppel, Otto Weichel and Harry Heimbecker to play with Elmira.

Ritchie Corbett was 11 days late getting to Toronto, and consequently will not get a certificate with Aura Lee.

Certificates were refused to Ernie Freyer and Jack Burns to play with Collingwood.

A certificate was refused Lewis King to play with Oshawa Juniors under the residence rule.

Cyril Giroux was refused a certificate with Peterborough.

A certificate for T. E. Lovelace, a Junior of Belleville, was refused under the residence rule.

St. Mary's club was ordered to pay $45.75 to Seaforth before January 8.

Target Tips and Hunting Helps by Alfred P. Lane

Send questions to Mr. Lane, care of this paper.

E. L. V., Macon, Ga.:

1. Is there any way to keep a gun from rusting?

2. After using a gun a few years does it affect the choke any?

3. Are smokeless shells better for a gun than any other kind?

1. No gun will rust if properly taken care of no matter how old it is. A rusty gun or rifle is a sign of a careless and indifferent hunter. A shot-gun should be thoroughly cleaned every day it is used with a good nitro-solvent oil. A stunt which a number of duck shooters are using is to coat their shotguns with grease before going out. It isn't necessary to have the grease all over the gun in great gobs, a very thin coating is sufficient.

2. The number of years a shotgun is in use does not indicate the amount of wear it has been subjected to. An enthusiastic trap shooter will burn up more shells in a month than the average field hunter will use in years. A modern shotgun barrel from any of the best American manufacturers will stand up to more than one hundred and fifty thousand shots without any appreciable decrease in shooting qualities.

3. Smokeless shells are no better and no worse than black powder shells in any properly made gun, provided the bore is adequately cleaned when the shooting is over. I mean by this that the wear on the barrel is no greater with smokeless powder than with black, but if the barrel is neglected when the former is used it will rust and corrode faster than with the latter.

H. V. J., Lexington, Ky.:

What is the best size load of powder and shot to use in shooting at ducks at 50 or 60 yards?

Assuming that you mean a twelve gauge shotgun, the most popular load is three and one-quarter drams of bulk smokeless powder or its equivalent of dense, and one and one-quarter ounces of number four, five, or six shot. Sixty yards is a pretty long distance to get very consistent results, however.

L. A. W., St. Louis, Mo.:

1. I am interested in finding out what can be done with a .22 calibre repeating rifle at say twenty-five yards?

2. Is there any rifle made which will hit the same spot every time at twenty-five yards if pointed exactly the same each time?

3. I have heard that it is best not to shoot .22 shorts in a rifle chambered for .22 long-rifles. Is this true and if so why?

4. A friend of mine says that a .22 calibre rifle shooting the .22 long rifle cartridge is more accurate at twenty-five yards than a high power hunting rifle, while at two hundred yards it is just the other way. This doesn't seem possible to me. Please explain it.

1. A good .22 calibre repeating rifle or single shot rifle will make groups of ten shots which will all cut into a half inch circle, that is, the distance of the two shots farthest apart in the group will usually not be over a half inch. These results can only be obtained by the use of a machine rest or by a very expert shot.

2. Emphatically no.

3. You were correctly informed. The reason is that the .22 short bullet when used in a .22 calibre rifle chambered for the .22 long rifle cartridge has to jump a short space before it strikes the rifling and while it is doing this, the hot gases rush past it and cause "gas-cutting" which results in a scarred and pitted chamber. A few "shorts" will cause no trouble, but it is best not to make a practice of using them.

4. Your friend probably based his conclusions on conditions which would be present ordinarily when a trial was to be made which would include a wind from some direction which would blow the light .22 calibre bullet farther from its course at two hundred yards than the heavy, high powered bullet.

A. R. T., Memphis, Tenn.:

I am going to buy a new revolver and before I do I want some advice. I want to do target shooting but at the same time I want a revolver which can be used as a side arm for hunting purposes. Will you please answer the following questions which will enable me to decide just what I want:

1. Does the length of barrel have anything to do with the accuracy of the weapon?

2. I have always believed that the sights should be very fine to secure the best results at the target. What do you think?

3. What is the best trigger pull to have on a revolver to be used for the above-mentioned work?

1. Length of barrel has very little effect on either the accuracy or the penetration when smokeless powder is used. I would recommend about a six-inch barrel for all around use.

2. I have found coarse sights not only more accurate, but they are much easier on the eyes, especially when the light is poor.

3. The trigger should be so adjusted that it will lift at least four pounds without releasing the hammer and should be "clean," that is, without any creep or drag.

HOCKEY GOSSIP

The intermediates and juniors had a lively work out last night. Both teams had a full squad out. Dwyer and Janes had a turn in the nets for the intermediates and both will get a chance in to-morrow night's exhibition game in Toronto.

The juniors will hold their final practice before the Port Hope game on Saturday afternoon at 5.30 o'clock. Every player is expected out sharp on time for this workout.

Thanks to the change in the weather there will be a good sheet of ice for the game between the Old Boys and juniors to-night. There will be skating until midnight after the game.

The Petes Will Play In Toronto To-morrow

The Peterborough intermediates will play an exhibition game in Toronto to-morrow night against the Toronto Rowing Club. The team will be without the services of Fred Kelly in to-morrow's game. The left wing man is laid up with a cold and will be greatly missed. Janes and Dwyer will be used in the nets and Morrow and Knapman of the juniors, and Cavanah, the former Peterborough junior who is attending Woodstock College, will also be used. The team will leave on the 7.50 C.P.R. train to-morrow morning. The following squad will be taken: Dwyer, Janes, Hunter, Pedrick, Park, Halpin, Morrow, Knapman, Cavanah.

Junior Church Leagues.

Last night a meeting of the Junior Church League was held in the Y.M.C.A. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted. It was agreed that all churches must have their lists of 12 names each, in the hands of the secretary by January 8th, on which date they would also have the money for the rinks. All teams wishing to play in the practice games next week must have five dollars, at least, in the hands of the secretary-treasurer, by next Tuesday, Jan. 5. The schedule for the first three games is:

Jan. 12—7 to 8—Mark St. vs. Knox.
Jan. 13—6 to 7—George St. vs. All Saints'.
Jan. 13—7 to 8—Charlotte St. vs. St. John's.

Board of Street Railway Elects New Year's Address Gone ... evening, ...

A BRAVE SOUTH AFRICAN GIRL

CAPETOWN (By mail to New York).—All South Africa is ringing with praise of the bravery of a young woman at Winburg, Orange River Colony. When the town was occupied by the Boer rebel General De Wet and his followers some of the men hauled down the Union Jack from the court house and trampled it in the dust. The young woman, Mrs. Elisabeth Pienaar, rushed out into the street and forcing her way through the group of rebels snatched up the flag and bound it around her waist like a sash. The men demanded to know what she intended to do with the flag. "For the present I carry it with me," she said, "and you dare not touch me. When decent people return they will hoist it again." The rebels abused her, rudely, but did not touch either her or the flag, which was promptly hoisted again when General Botha reoccupied the town.

Peterborough Building Record For Year Just Closed

Record Did Not Exceed That of Previous Year Which Was A Record Breaker—Buildings To The Value of $452,340 Erected During The Twelve Months—Three Hundred and Three Permits Issued

Building permits for the year ending to-day show a decrease amounting to $36,200.50. A total of three hundred and three permits were issued during the year. This is eight less than last year. The decrease in building operations is not so much as the figures would indicate when it is considered that last year's totals were swelled by the commencement of the Turnbull building and other buildings that were not completed until this year. There are very few cities in Ontario that will wind up the year without a decrease. According to reports received from outside sources, Peterborough ranks among the best as a building centre. It will take more than a European conflict to retard progress in this line, especially when it is justified by increasing trade conditions and industrial expansion.

The figures for 1914 and also those of the preceding year are given below:

1915 Licenses Will Cost More

Provincial Sec'y Hanna Announces New License Regulation for 1915—Special Power Provided

TORONTO, Dec. 30—The Hon. [illegible] Hanna, Provincial Secretary, announced that the Ontario Government had decided to tax motors according to their horse-power. The license year of 1914 has been extended until January 31st, 1915, to allow the Provincial Secretary's department time to get out the new schedule of rates. It is expected that the new license rates will provide an additional revenue of over [illegible]. The revenue from motor licenses in 1914 was $140,210.45, and this will therefore be increased by over $60,000.

The rates for motor vehicles announced by Mr. Hanna are as follows:

25-h.p. or less, $6; motors of 25 h.p., and up to 35-h.p., $15 to 50-h.p., $20; more than [illegible] $25; electric vehicles, $5, with the exception of trucks.

Commercial cars, used only as and motor trucks having a carrying capacity of two tons and less, a car with a charge of $3 a ton all over two tons.

Motor-cycles are left at the same as last year, $3.

If registration for a car is applied between October 1 and December of any year the license fee will be cut down to half the rate, as the department recognizes that it is not right to charge a man the full fee when he can only use his car during the remaining three months of the year.

Manufacturers and dealers, including five sets of makers, $25. This means that manufacturers and dealers can have licenses for five cars for demonstration purposes at the above fee. For each additional set a charge of $5 will be made.

Motorcycle dealers with five sets of makers, $10

Special Power Given.

The new regulations will provide that the Provincial Secretary may make special determination of the horse power of any motor vehicle for which registration is sought, but in general and until otherwise determined the horse power of gasoline automobiles will be fixed according to the formula adopted by the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers which is as follows:

Horse power equals bore multiplied by bore multiplied by number of cylinders divided by 2.5 (2 1-2).

Despite the request of the motorists that the revenue from motor cars be "earmarked" that is, kept in a separate fund and used on good roads, the new regulations make no provision for this

GERMANS INTERVENE.

They Are Striving to Prevent an Austro-Italian Conflict.

ROME, Dec. 31.—Italy's momentous move of occupying Avlona and the surrounding hill country has aroused intense irritation and discontent in Austria-Hungary. A Secolo correspondent telegraphing from the Austrian frontier says that the Germans have intervened in Vienna in an endeavor to prevent a possible Austro-Italian incident at this delicate juncture. Count Berchtold, the Austrian Chancellor, had a lengthy conference with Emperor Francis Josef on the matter, and on returning to the Foreign Office the count at once sent for the Italian ambassador, who, it is reported, was requested to procure from Rome a fresh statement of Italy's declaration in October last that the latest move was merely a police measure for the time being applied in virtue of the decisions of the London Conference.

LONDON, Dec. 31. — There is as yet no confirmation of the report that a German army corps has been sent to the Italian frontier but it is reported from several sources.

MISS K. Wallis Writes Home From Paris Hospital

Says Authorities Are Pleased to Have Canadian Nurses

An interesting letter has been received from Miss Katherine Wallis, who is well known in Peterborough, and who is now nursing in the "Canadian Hospital" in Paris She writes: "There are about forty-four patients here with frozen feet. In our Ward there are eight patients—two English soldiers with frozen feet, a little Frenchman, who has been shot in the thigh, three Arabs, who are nice enough, but a bit wild; then there are two lieutenants, one has been shot in the foot by a dum-dum bullet and you never saw such a thing. They say that most surgeons would have amputated, but this Dr. Fauze is going to make him walk again. He suffers a good deal. The other lieutenant is splendid. He had his arm shot, in the morning, and held it up all day and kept his place; in the evening he got the most awful wound in his thigh, and his foot broken, and was jolted in a waggon over the fields. He had been four days without having his wounds dressed. He is getting on splendidly and never a word out of him. They say the authorities are pleased to have Canadian nurses. Every one has been so kind to me, and the English boys are happy to have me. Every one except the English boys (who call me "Sister") calls me "Miss".

BRITISH BATTLESHIP FORMIDABLE TORPEDOED BY SUBMARINE

ONLY 151 OF CREW ACCOUNTED FOR

Britain Depressed at Loss of Battleship "Formidable" Sunk in Ten Minutes After Having Been Struck by Submarine

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Eng., Jan. 2.—No naval disaster of the war to date, has so depressed Britain as the loss of the second line battleship Formidable. It is now considered certain that she was torpedoed by a German submarine. The naval experts unite in declaring that while such losses must be expected, they again direct special attention to the apparent uselessness of British submarines, and many of the critics openly ask why they much under surface irritation and bitter criticism of the Admiralty still withholds the complete have failed as guard vessels. The Admiralty details of the disaster.

The latest reports received to-day show that only 151 of the Formidable's crew have been accounted for. ...ay be brought in by fishing boats,

There is still slight hope that others ...was torpedoed fore and aft, and practically her entire bottom blown out. but this is very faint, as the warship ...es.

BATTLESHIP FORMIDABLE IS BLOWN UP

Hit a Mine and Was Target of Submarine Off Sheerness, England —Nearly All the Crew Reported Lost

COST $5,000,000 IN 1898

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Jan. 1—The destruction of the British battleship Formidable in the English Channel to-day by a mine or a submarine boat, which, although it is one of those events that the people of Britain now realise must be expected so long as the British navy is compelled to keep to the seas, has caused widespread grief.

This is due not so much to the loss of the ship, which was fifteen years old, and cost about $5,000,000, as it is for the men who went down with her. She carried a crew of 750 men. A report at mid night places the number of saved at 150, though the first official repo... gives the figures at 71.

The British Admiralty has not given the locality where the disaster occurred and declares that it is unable to say whether the ship struck a mine or was torpedoed.

Trawler Lands Survivors.

The midnight despatch referred to says:

The Torbay trawler Providence has landed 70 additional survivors from the battleship Formidable. They were rescued by the trawler during a terrific storm this morning. This makes the aggregate number of saved, so far as is known, 150.

Another despatch gives the following version:

Not more than 80 of the 800 men aboard the battleship Formidable were saved, according to the first official list of the survivors issued by the Admiralty to-night. Fourteen officers and 66 men were rescued, says the Admiralty. The survivors were landed by a trwler this morning during a terrific storm, according to a report to the Exchange Telegram Company. The point at which they were landed is deleted by the censor.

The text of the Official Bureau's statement follows:

The battleship Formidable was sunk this morning in the Channel, but whether by a mine or a submarine is not yet certain.

"Seventy-one survivors have been

MONDAY'S MUNICIPAL CONTEST IN MONAGHAN UNUSUALLY INTERESTING

Contest for Every Position and Candidates Have Used All Their Time Canvassing in the Township and City

The electors of North Monaghan display an interest in its municipal affairs that might well be emulated by Peterborough's citizens. At the nominations in the township hall there was a crowd as large, if not larger, than the attendance of citizen ratepayers in the Council chamber on the same day. And our country cousins are keeping alive their enthusiasm by following the nominees in probably the most strenuous canvass the township has witnessed in years.

With two candidates for reeve, three for deputy and six for the council, there is a merry scramble for positions. The results will be awaited almost as eagerly in the city as in North Monaghan, so intimate have grown the two municipalities in recent years. At the same time, many citizens hold lots in the township for which they have been pinched a little more during the past two years. And the candidates have overlooked very few of them. They invaded the city personally, and besides have sought support by election cards. In every respect, therefore, North Monaghan should have a decidedly keen little election of its own on Monday.

Reeve Howden is something of an old campaigner. He has been going over the 'back forties' making a big bid for re-election. And by the way he is not overlooking many of the citizens who have votes at their disposal. The Reeve is blamed for financial shortsightedness, to put it mildly, and they say the roads have been running to dust and ruts. Some of the people along river blame him for not getting certain drowned lands money from the government. As Billie — thats what everybody calls him—says, "all the balme is heaped on the Reeve. His reply to complaints on the score of short finances is that the war hit the whole Empire, and it did not let Monaghan escape. But the reply is that this is the second offence, and the ratepayers do not want overdrafts to become the custom of the Council. And to this the Reeve replies that the Council was bent on keeping within its credit this year,—but circumstances arose which were epochal and the good intentions were held up.

But they come back at Reeve Howden, charging extravagance, claiming that the universal financial stringency is not wholly explanatory of a deficit named at $700. It is not that his personal honesty is impugned, but something, they say, remains to be shown to the ratepayers by way of explaining the deficit.

The Reeve says the township is growing, expenses are naturally increasing and the old days for the township as it is now constituted, are done. To the drowned lands complaint he reads a letter, penned by Mr. Burnham, who blames the war's demands on the government, but the people declare the alibi a poor one, and say the money should have been secured before the war clouds broke. And as for roads, the Reeve calls attention to the automobile traffic, new highways near the city opened up, and the usual work all to be done on a grant that has not been greatly increased. Hence, Reeve Howden smiles that Mona Lisa smile of his and intimates that every question cannot be answered in a few words, and that if returned he will give the township his best attention. The Reeve is good natured to those who have complaints to register and says, put me back on the job again and we will straighten things out.

His opponent, John McIntosh, has had a lengthy experience and knows the Council workings. They call him a hard-headed Scotchman, and Mr. McIntosh declares that he is out to cut down, or at least prevent further additions to the tax bills. He says the Council, with Wm. Howden at the head, has been extravagant, and all he has to do is to point to the bills of recent years for substantiation. Admitting that the township is growing and its expenses proportionately, still in spite of all that the Council has been extravagant. So there are the two candidates for the reeveship.

The Deputy Reeve.

The township has attained the importance of possessing a deputy-reeve and three hands are stretched toward it. In addition to home honours it opens a seat on the County Council Robert Dobbin, Herb Foster and J. Young are the contestants and it seems to be anybody's race. Go down to Ryerville and some will tell you that "Bob" Dobbin will not lead the hunt home. Further out he is in his own country, so to speak, and among friends. Foster has been working like a Trojan and declares that he is as good as elected. Mr. Young is a careful, conscientious farmer with a substantial following. He made a good showing last year in securing a Council seat.

For the Council.

In the Council race there may be surprises. William Stevens and Arthur Vass are Byersville, representatives; Harold B. Rye lives in the Reeve's vicinity in the exhibition grounds district, and Joseph lives near Crawford's Grove. In the remote section of Monaghan Wm. Robson and John Clark are the offerings. Each voter may select three men and it is generally admitted that there will be considerable plumping. The real farmers, those from the further concession lines, say that Byersville may not get a man. Near town the assertions run the other way. At any rate the contest is an interesting one to those who are intimately aware of the conditions. It may mean the complete closing of control from the town hall vicinity, and if it proves to be the case, especially if the farmers' interests are at all neglected, there is almost bound to be a strong agitation for severance of the Byersville and Clarady suburbs. In any case the farmers say they will not be beaten, although they claim McIntosh will be elected. Should they be swamped all down the slate—well, the dog will sacrifice his tail, and it believes the stump would be cheaper. Out the town hall way you hear them say that they will not be the "goat" for those who want to live near the city but escape its taxes. Then you come back to the old agitation from the proximate residents who feel they might as well pay city taxes and get all that goes with them because the township's bills are beginning to creep up. It is plain, therefore, that it is only a question of time until a situation will arise that will effect some change in the township.

Monaghan Has An Overdraft of $1300

John McIntosh Calls Attention to Figures Which Reeve Howden Has Included as Assets

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Mr. Howden has gone to some trouble in an attempt to present figures which appear to be favourable to his administration. He has published this statement that the township's assets show a balance of $1,606.62 over its liabilities, and then sits back and says, "isn't that fine." As a matter of fact the Council faces an overdraft of $1,300, and I want the electors to feel that I am sincere when I say the Reeve has been extravagant and is now trying to let himself down easily.

In the list of assets for Monaghan he quotes:—Town Hall and furniture, $800; road machinery, including stone crusher, $1402.21; gravel pit, $250.

Now these are not available assets to pay off the townships taxes. They are not liquid assets, and they should not appear in this list, but they are included to make a showing to catch the electors. In addition to this, the township owes some $600 or $700 for road divisions and altogether there is an overdraft of about $1300. That is subtract the non-liquid assets I mentioned from the total assets claimed by the Reeve and you find the liabilities exceed the assets by $645. Then there is the $600 debts for road work and you get a total of $1300.

I trust the electors will not overlook this statement A careful examination of the sheet published by the Township, showing a financial condition will bring out an understanding of the real state of affairs.

Yours truly,
John McIntosh.

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

He was tall and under his faded coat his rather lean figure fell into an attitude of well-muscled strength despite his fulness of years. His face though calm, even thoughtful, was more in cut of feature than in expression the face of a man of tense emotions and warlike readiness in quarrel. Indeed, features moulded for antagonism and expression of reflective composure seemed paradoxically at variance.

Instinctively her mind flashed back to a bit of remembered description with which five hundred years before a French writer had quaintly depicted another tribal chief whom the lawa could not curb, the portrait of the Irish King MacMurrough. . . . "He was tall of stature, well-composed, strong and active; his countenance fell and ferocious to the eye—a man of deed."

Then she heard the man's voice, bland and ingratiating. "'Evenin', ma'am. No, I hain't a-goin' ter light, I jest heered thet Brother Talbitt war a-comin' over hyar an' I wanted speech with him."

The missionary nodded. "All right, Milt," he said; and the girl knew, as she had already suspected, that she had before her the second of her chief enemies.

"I reckon ye all knows what happened last night," she heard him saying slowly. "Hit war a-pity, an' I hears thet ther Haveys are a-chargin' hit up ergin me. Thet's nat'ral, I reckon. They 'lows thet I'd walk plumb acrost hell on a rotten plank ter do 'em injury. Ef they stopped ter reason hit out a spell they'd recollect thet I went over thar ter Peril an' let a Jedge thet didn't own his own soul an' a Jury they hed done packed, clar one of their kin folks fer killin' a cousin of mine . . . an' thet I never raised a hand. I reckon they didn't hardly hev no call ter figger thet I was skeered of them. I done what I done because I wanted peace. I was fer lettin' ther law take hit's co'se, even when I knowed the Co'te war crooked es a drunkard's elbow."

He paused and no one spoke, so at last he went on again.

"But Little Nash McKay war young an' hot-hearted. He couldn't hardly see hit in ther light of wisdom and he didn't come ter me fer counsel. So he jest went hell-splittin' over thar with some other boys thet he'd done over-persuaded—an' he didn't come back. . . . I'm sorry. . . . I was right fond of Little Nash, but I hain't complainin' none. He started trouble an' he got hit." Again the dark giant paused; then he came to his point. His voice was regretful, almost sad, but tinged with resignation.

"So Little Nash es a-layin' dead down thar, an' no McBriar durstn't venture down ter fotch his body home." He waved a hand toward the west, and the faces of his escort lowered. They seemed the faces of men who "durst" go anywhere, but their chief went on. "I knowed, Brother Talbott, thet ye sarves Almighty God, an' thet thar hain't no word ye carries but what all men will listen ter ye, so I've done come ter ye, in behalf of Little Nash's maw an' his women folks. I 'lowed I'd ask ye ef ye'd ride down thar and fotch home ther body?" The missionary nodded and though he was travel-stained and very tired, he responded, "I'll start right now." Then Milt McBriar continued, "An' ef ye sees fit, ye kin tell Anse Havey, thet I hain't a suin' fer peace, but thet I hain't a blamin' him, nuther, an' thet ef he wants ther truce ter go on I'm a-willin' ter heve hit thet-away. I hain't holdin' no grudge on account of last night."

CHAPTER X.

Juanita's eyes grew a little misty as she thought of that desolated cabin where a mother and sisters were grieving for the boy who had been "hot-hearted." Even the sight of his older kinsman who sat his horse with such composure while his eyes wandered off to the purple haze of the far mountains, stirred in her an emotion of sympathy. Of course she knew nothing of the ten acres of "bottom land" which were to be little Nash's when Cal Douglas should have ceased to breathe, nor how it was covetousness and cold thrift rather than a hot heat that had sent him out with his rifle in the night. She did not know that Milt McBriar had torn up several unsigned deeds when the murder squad had failed to earn their contingent fees. She only heard the McBriar say, "I'm much obleeged," and saw him turn his cavalcade east. The tired missionary started his mule west again, and she herself followed the Widow Everson into the house which was for the time to be her home. She went into the tiny but scrupulously clean room where an ancient bed was gayly spread with a gaudy home-made quilt and where a cracked pitcher and bowl and a broken mirror adorned a home-made washstand, and then as the widow left her, she rummaged in her saddle-bags and drew out a small leather case. She sat for a long while silent, in her shuck-bottomed rocking chair, gazing wearily out at the west where sunset fires were beginning to kindle, and where an old-rose haze was drowsing over the valley and glowing more brightly in the twisting ribbon of a far-away stream. But her eyes came often back from the panorama out there to dwell a little wistfully on a photograph in the leather frame, and it was the picture of the man whom she had sent away. She was an appealing little figure of loveliness, too frail and flower-like it seemed for hard places, and the present wistfulness of clouded eyes and drooping lips only made her the more appealing, like a bruised blossom whose petals are dust-blown, which needs to be lifted again to the sun and dew. Had the man of the photograph been there just then, when her courage and determination were at ebb tide, and had he stretched out his arms, perhaps she would have shaken her head wearily on abstract resolves and come into their embrace. But he was not there.

In the quaint conversation of the Widow Everson and her sons, Juanita found so much of the amusing that she had to school herself against too great an appreciation of their utterly unintentional humour. Though she was a "fotched-on woman" to be taken on probation it was only a matter of hours before the family capitulated, as people in general had a fashion of doing, under the spell of her graciousness and unself-conscious charm. Jerry Everson, whom men accounted surly, for the first time in years brushed his shapeless hat, and remembered not to "hang it on the floor" and Sim Everson hied him into the misty woods at dawn and brought home squirrels for her first breakfast in his house.

When from the front porch, where the morning-glory vines had been carefully cut away in accordance with the country's distaste for "weeds a trailin' all over the God's blessed face of a dwellin'-house," she saw the mists of the next morning dissipate, she already felt at home. She soon came to recognize that instead of going back east after a cursory inspection to draw plans for school-houses, she must stay here, and as a condition precedent, win her way naturally into the confidence of those whom she sought to influence. As the widow looked out under her sunbonnet, and the two boys nursed their knees on the edge of the porch, staring at her until she grew painfully conscious of her silk stockinged ankles and short gingham skirt, she knew that even if she could remove all the ivied and towered walls of her own university and set them down as "fur from here as a man kin fling a cow by hit's tail" she still would be no nearer success than she was at this moment. First she must be trusted by a race distrustful of strangers.

In the forenoon of her first day she left the house and, crossing the tiny garden where the weeds were already growing tall and rank enough to hint of future ragged victory, she made her way by a narrow trail that led to the crest of the ridge. The Everson boys watched her go up the steep path and nodded their heads with grins of approval. "Thet gal hain't stringhalted none," observed Jerry, and Sim replied hotly, "Stringhalted, hell! Thet gal's plumb supple."

Juanita was steering her course for a patriarchal poplar that sent a straight shaft heavenward at the rim of the crest, opening its verdure like a great flag unfurled on a mighty parapet. She knew that up there she could look two ways across the divide and that her battle ground would be spread before her.

But when she reached the place her breath came fast with delight for she found there a natural observatory where save for the single poplar, and a few crest plumes rising from the slopes, she had the timber tops all beneath her. There was only open sky above with the world spread out in mosaic below. It was such a place as made one resentful of the lack of wings, and eager to reap upward into the unbroken blue to soar with the hawks and eagles. So at least it seemed to Juanita, but Juanita was imaginative. She had clung to her faith in fairies past the ordinary years of such belief and she still found a fairy-like companionship in the spirit of flowers and trees.

She looked to the east and line after line of hills went over and melted into the sky. She looked to the west and there, too, they rose phalanx on phalanx to dissolve in a smoky haze that effaced the horizon. It looked as is in a majesty of relentlessness they reached from sunrise to sunset, and so, as far as the locked-in-life of their people went, they might.

With precipice and torrent they shut out the world, sweeping away roads and all the changes that roads bring.

They offered sanctuary to the refugee, and safety to their sons in crime and secure eyries to their eagles.

In them all, so far as she knew, was one person, and that person her weak self, who stood for altering them. As she gazed down to the west, she saw the thread of smoke that went up like a contemptuous challenge from the house of Bad Anse Havey and the square brick walls of his fortress-like abode. Then she looked east and down there, where a creek bed caught the sky like a splinter of blue glass, lay another [illegible] with open space about it and cornfields stretching farther away. It was a squat building of logs, and she knew from its size and its blockhouse staunchness that its thread of smoke went up from the hearth of the [illegible] McBriar.

Resolutely, she threw back her slender shoulders and quoted some favourite verses.

"It [illegible]
As morning on hill and stream
And tree,
In the morning in the young knight's heart;
Only the [illegible]e castle moodily
Rebuffed the gifts of the sunshine free
The season [illegible]oomed by itself apart;
[illegible] up in brimmed all other things
Full as the [illegible] rain fills the pitcher plant's cup."

She nodded again. "And her head and looked ed to herself, 'the castle,' she declared. Neither castle [illegible]ha'n't go on rebuffing. for." That's what I'm here

She knew that it was only two hundred miles east fro[illegible] dred miles to the blue line of [illegible]n where she stood and that between [illegible]the Atlantic coast Virginia, Mother of [illegible]y the culture of rich smoothness of the Blue Grass where the brethren of[illegible] people had won through these same the "settlements of Old [illegible]nd founded But nearer at hand on either [illegible]aintuck." and infinitely more potential[illegible]r side, the brick house where a long [illegible]stood Havey had owned negro slaves, [illegible]dead the log house where a McBriar [illegible]and other years had cried for abolition of and between them the war was [illegible]t yet ended.

BRUGES.

Bruges I saw attired with golden light
(Streamed from the west) as with a rope of power:
The splendour fled; and now the sunless hour,
That, slowly making way for peaceful night,
Offers the beauty, the magnificence,
And sober graces; left for her defence
Against the injuries of time, the spite
Of fortune, and the desolating storms
Of future war. Advance not—spare to hide,
O gentle power of darkness! these mild hues;
Obscure not yet these silent avenues
Of stateliest architecture, where the Forms
Of nunlike females, with soft motion glide.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEBER

GRUNTERS: The famous Doctor Holmes stated, many years ago, that the best possible insurance of long life was for a young man to be rejected by a life insurance company. A young person is seldom concerned about matters that pertain to health. It takes a severe jolt to awaken them to a realizing sense of what good health means.

A friend of mine, a near neighbour who had practiced medicine for over fifty years, who recently died in his 87th year, once told me that when he was 25 years of age a consultation of physicians pronounced his case hopeless and told him that he must not marry because he would in all probability die within six months and could not possibly live more than one year. He attended all of their funerals and his children and grandchildren are all healthy, robust people.

Here is a little editorial from the New York Times that gives some very good illustrations along the same lines:

"The battle for existence is not to the strong, as shown by the case of the woman of Trent, Pa., a lifelong invalid, who died last week aged 101. President Victor C. Vaughan, of the American Medical Association multiplies instances of great mortality among strong, busy men and women suddenly attacked by disease. They are not prepared for its trials, they put forth their strength in sickness, and they are conquished. Those who are threatened before they are stricken live long. They may even attain vigorous and lasting health. The case of Theodore Roosevelt, who was a sickly child, is in point. Horace Fletcher, a prey to a complication of diseases, awoke to his danger when rejected for life insurance at 40, and by taking thought grew younger until Director Anderson of Yale gymnasium pronounced him more strong and enduring than his young athletes. John D. Rockefeller, who seemed a hopeless dyspeptic many years ago, has just rounded out his seventy-fifth year in god physical condition. The mystery of sickness is the mystery also of discerning health. Even the most desperate cases have rallied—note that of the woman who a year or so ago pleaded that the doctors put her to a painless death because she was doomed to lie, without moving hand or foot, a lifelong burden to herself and her family. Press despatches proclaimed the other day that she recovered and was no longer an invalid. Life itself is a reaction against external forces that threaten it, and a conversion of those forces, or part of them, into weapons of defence. In such emergencies pluck, grit, and coolheadness count for much and when they have extricated their displayer, make his life still more useful to those about him."

Courage is one of the great factors in the battle against weakness and practice of common sense methods of living is another. I could refer you right now to a number of people who are living in comfort, doing their daily tasks with ease and pleasure but whose lives had been given up by a council of physicians. Best of all the method of restoring them to health is of such a nature that it keeps them in good health; merely complying with and observing nature's laws and using nature's remedies, the good old-fashioned herbs and roots with natural food, the cleansing and sterilization of the bowels and temperance in all things. Won't you let the Home Health Club help you to live in comfort and health to a comfortable and happy old age?

What Women's Institutes Are Doing

THE Women's Institute is one of the livest organizations in Canada. The Women's Institutes in Ontario have long been a power for good. From the most remote rural communities to our largest towns, branches of the Women's Institute are doing valuable work in the interests of good home making and good citizenship, and are fast becoming indispensable. Mr. George A. Putman, who is superintendent of both Women's and Men's Institutes in Ontario, has publicly admitted that "the Women's Institute is the more progressive of the two, and is making greater progress all over the province."

The branches that have made the most progress are in the small towns and villages where people can get together easiest. In the case of villages, women from the farms around frequently comprise a large percentage of the membership. The work that these centrally located Institutes are doing now is but a foretaste of the work that real rural Institutes will be doing once they become generally established. Farm and Dairy recently corresponded with the presidents and secretaries of Institutes that we knew were "doing things." and the replies received have thrown much light on the line of work followed.

Patriotic Labors

Much of the work this winter will be of a patriotic nature. "When the war broke out we decided to do away with our regular program and work for the soldiers," writes Mrs. A. D. McArthur, president of the Morrisburg W. I., in Dundas Co., Ont. "We have followed the directions of the Red Cross Society and have already sent forward a substantial contribution of the articles required. We are still meeting once a week and working for the Red Cross. This week we are taking up a donation for the Belgians, who are in such dire straits. It will consist principally of clothing." Other work mentioned by Mrs. McArthur that will be prosecuted by this patriotic Institute is the running of a Red Cross Lyceum course of four entertainments the proceeds to go to the patriotic fund.

At Gravenhurst the members of the Women's Institute have a very ambitious undertaking on their hands. It is nothing less than an Institute building, designed to give an evening home to the homeless, and provide a centre for gymnasium classes, literary meetings, and so forth. "We call our building 'The People's Institute,'" writes Mrs. D. B. Abbey. "This building has been free to everyone for one year. Anyone may use the phone, piano or sewing machine. A matron is employed who lives right in the building, and it is open from 8 a.m. until 10.30 p.m. Its object is to provide a place for those who have no homes to spend their evenings. Entertainment was provided in the evenings in the form of lectures; debates, science classes and gymnasium. We do not yet know if it will be possible to keep this building open another year, but it has done good work."

The Banner Institute of Halton

"For many years the Burlington branch of the Women's Institute has been the banner Institute of Halton county," proudly writes Miss Ethel A. Fowler, its secretary-treasurer. "It is our ambition that it shall always be first, and at present a membership contest is being carried on. Two sides have been formed and the one which obtains the largest numbers of new members within two months shall be given a banquet by the losing side. This contest affords lots of interest and pleasure, besides enlarging the society.

"For the past three years we have been interested in improvements in the public library," writes Miss Fowler in connection with the work of the Institute. "We have made the rough plastered interior walls attractive by tinting them. We have effected minor improvements such as buying window blinds and carpeting the platform. The library board paid all costs, over $50. Our monthly meetings are held in the reading room of the library, and we are not asked for rent. For our own convenience and for that of a pleasure club which uses the building in winter, we have had two large cupboards and a table placed in the basement. We also have a coal oil stove, and intend buying some kitchen utensils.

"We try to have our meetings interesting to everyone," concludes Miss Fowler. "Above all, we aim to cultivate friendliness, especially with strangers. We try to bring into our society all newcomers to the town that they may become acquainted and not feel the loss of old friends."

For Better Citizenship

Another live Women's Institute is that located at Port Credit, Ont. "More especially we aim to foster better citizenship," writes Miss Mary Gates. "While not unmindful of educational and social problems, interest has largely focused upon attempts to improve the health and beauty of our village, and at the same time to further a sound community spirit in which all denominations and all organizations can help to forward the movement towards improved village conditions."

Good work has been done at Port Credit in keeping the village clean. Peelings and waste paper, always an eyesore and a nuisance, have been done away with by providing special dust bins for the street. The medical inspection of the school is a matter in which the Institute has cooperated. Their greatest desire at present is to establish a permanent district nurse and money has already been raised and promised for the expenses of one of the Victorian Order of nurses. An interesting source of revenue for this cause was the catering for the Port Credit Bowling Club tea on July 1st, and from which $26 was realized.

Garden Interest Stimulated

Another good line of work is described by Miss Gates as follows: "There are many charming gardens in the neighborhood and many more in the course of making. Local interest is great in horticulture, and the Women's Institute has played an important part for years in fostering this interest. Flower shows are continually held, usually under the trees on the lawns of private grounds of great beauty. Two gold medals have been donated and are open for competition in classes for hardy, herbaceous perennial flowers, and for collections of vegetables grown by those who employ only occasional help. There were 125 entries for the last show held in September, at which additional classes were opened for two bronze medals offered for displays of fruit, vegetables, flowers and potted plants. These summer shows are enjoyed by the men as well as the women. In September the vegetable classes were auctioned off for the benefit of the Women's Patriotic League, $26 being raised for this object."

After all the greatest good that is being accomplished by the Women's Institute is not the actual work done, but the supplying of a new ideal to the women of our land. Particularly in the rural districts do women need to get together more and to have their mind taken off their own problems in the broader ideal that they are given of community work and citizenship. What better organization could we have to effect this object than the Women's Institute?

HOW PAT GOT EVEN

Pat was over in England working with his coat off. There were two Englishmen laboring on the same railroad, so they decided to have a joke with the Irishman. They painted a donkey's head on the back of Pat's coat, and watched to see him put it on. Pat, of course, saw the donkey's head on his coat, and, turning to the Englishmen, said, "Which of yez wiped yer face on me coat?"

PRO-RUSSIAN SENTIMENT BOASTED IN BOHEMIA

GENEVA, via London, Dec. 15.—As the veil is lifted from life in the interior of Austria-Hungary it becomes more and more evident that there is not, and never has been, that unanimity of purpose with regard to the war that has been painted by the official agencies. There is much unrest in Hungary, but not until now have details of the "passive resistance" revolution by the Czechs of Bohemia been revealed.

A correspondent who escaped from Prague to Italy tells in the Journal de Geneve of what possibly will be Austria's last reign of terror over her Czech subjects.

Many pro-Russian demonstrations took place in Prague when the Russian mobilization was announced. The Austrian authorities retorted by throwing into prison scores of prominent Czech leaders, including the well-known radical deputy, Klofa, who was accused of high treason. Another arrest was that of the wife of the Polytechnic School's rector, because she was reported to have said: "Would to heaven the Russians were already in Prague."

At the end of August the news of mutinies on the battlefield by Czech regiments reached Prague, and the population became more and more excited. These troops, who had been sent against the Serbs, contributed by their passive resistance and revolts to the Austrian defeats at Ahabatz and Loznitza. The Austrian government was about to proclaim martial law all over Bohemia, but Prince Thun, the Lieutenant-Governor, checked this measure by warning the Vienna Cabinet that it would cause a general revolution. His exact words are reported to be: "To-day there are only two kinds of Czechs—those that are openly Russophile and those that are secretly Russophile. It is best not to provoke the second class."

Prepare to Welcome Russians.

Nevertheless, the hostility of Austria became more open after the defeats of Lemberg and Grotch. At the end of September the most popular song in Prague was one which may be translated: "Get the geese roasted for the Russians, so that we may please our little father, the Tsar."

The people laughed openly at the military communiques, and some of the men prepared to enlist in Russian volunteer corps as soon as the Russians entered Bohemia.

Repressive measures served only to increase the pro-Russian sympathies. Several more deputies were arrested, including leaders of every party, from the right to the extreme socialists and anarchists. Many journalists were imprisoned and all the socialist and some of the radical newspapers were suppressed. Three editors who were sentenced each to three years' imprisonment during the 1909 campaign against the anti-militarists were again arrested.

The police discovered at Prague a lithographed newspaper containing war news reproduced from one or two Russian and French papers smuggled across the frontier. Copies were found in railway waiting-rooms, post offices, trains, and other public resorts. After a long inquiry it was shown that the journal was edited and printed in the municipal offices at Prague. The Councillor and several other municipal employees were at once imprisoned and accused of high treason.

But it is among the Czech troops that the disaffection has been most marked. As the third territorial battalion of the twenty-eighth regiment of the line was leaving barracks to be transported to the front, the commanding officer saw a white and red flag—the colours of the Kingdom of Bohemia—with an inscription on it. And the words were heard: "Little red handkerchief, turn about; we are going against the Russians, and we do not know why."

Regiment in Revolt.

The colonel ordered a corporal to take the flag from the soldier who carried it and to destroy it. The corporal pretended to obey, but passed the flag on to a soldier in the last rank. The officer was about to order the immediate punishment of all three men, but at that moment the whole battalion began to load their rifles. The colonel was then obliged to dismount and promise the mutineers that they would never be sent against the Russians. They were sent back to barracks, but during the following night they were marched to the station by means of a ruse. It was reported that they were afterwards "decimated"—that is to say, one man in every ten was shot.

A similar mutiny occurred four days later when the fourth battalion of the same regiment was being marched to the station. The soldiers, who were mostly men between thirty and forty and fathers of families, had all decorated their caps with the tri-colour Slav flag. There were no Austrian flags. As they marched they sang the national hymns and the Slav hymn, "Hej Slavane," with additional lines, which, translated, ran: "The Russian is with us. Whoever is against us will be swept away by the Frenchmen."

A large crowd was watching, and from all parts came cries of "Don't fire, you will be cowards if you fire on the Russians. Surrender as quickly as possible!" And the soldiers replied, as they pulled white handkerchiefs from their pockets, "See, we have the white flags ready!"

The officers wer pale with rage, but could do nothing, knowing that one arrest would have ben sufficient to cause an active revolt among both military and civilians. The policemen retired discreetly, and it was only this prudent attitude that prevented a rebellion in Prague. This battalion is also believed to have been "decimated."

An official proclamation posted up in the towns of Eastern Moravia declares that any one found in possession of one of the manifestos dropped by Russian aviators over Moravia and Bohemia will be punished by death.

From other sources there are reports of an agitation in Hungary and Bohemia for a separation peace. Altogether the prospects for the Hapsburg line, not one of whose Emperors have ever been popular outside Austria itself, are the reverse of rosy.

He Had Suffered.

Izri Jacobs boarded an East Side car with his son. The youth was tall and ungainly. He looked at least 12 years old, but when the conductor called for the fares the father slowly counted out five pennies.

"Look here," said the conductor, "where's the fare for the boy?"

"Vy, he ain't five—"

"Five!" growled the conductor. "Go on! he's 14 if he's a day."

"Och, nö," pleaded Izri, in true Yiddish fashion. "He can't be five. He—"

"Well, he looks a good deal older," the conductor insisted.

"Certainly," said the older Jacobs. "Certainly, Vy shouldn't he? Hes had a lot of trouble!"

Roumanians as Fighters

Battle of Plevna, Where the Roumanian Soldier Outshone the Russian.

Battle of Romans and Dacians (Ancient Roumanians), as Carved on the Column of Trajan, in Rome.

By Richard G. Conover.

He heard it, but he heeded not—his eyes
Were with his heart, and that was far away;
He reck'd not of the life he lost nor prize,
But where his rude hut by the Danube lay,
There were his young barbarians all at play;
There was their Dacian mother; he, their sire,
Butcher'd to make a Roman holiday.
—Byron's Childe Harold, CXLI.

GLADIATORS slain in Roman arenas two thousand years ago were the fighting forefathers of the present day Roumanian soldier. This valiant lineage is still proudly and definitely traced by the battler of the Carpathians. The spirit of the ancient sword and shield warriors, who thrilled tiers of hurrahing thousands ere they sank to death in the sand, has descended in heroic heritage, deep and strong through the centuries. All of the warring nations respect the prowess of the little Balkan kingdom, and from the moment the first gun of the great European conflict was fired the diplomatists of the opposing Powers began to seek the Roumanian alliance.

Famous battlefields form the foundation of the regal or imperial structures constituting the larger nations of the world. Small as she is, a battlefield is the base of the Roumanian status of today. In one night the valor of her soldiers raised her from a principality of two old-time provinces to the dignity of a country ruled by a king. Thirty-seven years have passed since that memorable date, and every one of these years has expanded the name and fame of the descendant of the Dacian to boundaries never hoped for.

On the ramparts of shot-battered Plevna, as dawn broke September 12, 1877, the one hundred thousand fighting men of three nations beheld the royal standard of Roumania proudly floating in the breeze of battle. Planting the shell-torn banner on the stronghold of the Turk during the night had cost thousands of Roumanian lives. But so gallant and grim was the performance that the fighting nations of the earth agreed the deed had earned the glory and honor of a kingly throne. This was the most valiant epoch of Roumanian history, and it is the very sufficient answer to all queries as to what manner of fighting man the Carpathian soldier has shown himself to be.

Consider the achievement of Roumania's battler at Plevna, in the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-8 in its detail and the more remarkable it becomes. Mighty Russia was outdone by this little Black Sea principality. The Tsar's army had marched through her territory en route to the Sultan's boundaries. Permission had been asked to pass her frontiers, but in a joking sort of a way, like a big mastiff might say to a tiny black and tan that he'd just like to walk by him on the front lawn. Roumania thought it best to consent to the passage of the big Russian army—it is easy to see why.

King Charles I., the Hero of the Russian-Turkish War of 1677, to Whom Plevna's Defender, Osman Pacha, Surrendered.

Mirtschea, Famous Soldier and Diplomatist of Mediaeval Roumania.
From "The Balkans," by William Miller. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Copyright, 1896.

The Ancient Roumanian Soldier Was a Gladiator.

But as the tramp, tramp, tramp of the Tsar's soldiers sounded on Roumanian soil officers were keenly observing the enormous increase in Roumanian military strength and efficiency. Prince Charles, the little principality's ruler, thought it worth while to show troops and troops and then more troops in evolution as the invaders of Turkey passed through. The Russian officers remembered what they saw when, a few weeks later, they met with reverse after reverse on the road toward Constantinople and were finally reduced to a desperate plight before Plevna.

August 5, 1877, the Grand Duke Nicholas, commanding the Tsar's troops, telegraphed a historical call to help that made Roumania a kingdom. "Hurry over the Danube to our aid and you can make your own conditions as to reward! Come quickly, that the reward may be greater! We are the centre of a circle of Turks! Hurry!" This was the substance of the telegram, and Prince Charles, smiling grimly, advanced to meet opportunity.

Thirty-five thousand Roumanian troops were mobilized immediately. They were armed and equipped to the very top notch of efficiency and readiness as a result of eleven years of effort. More than one hundred cannon of modern pattern were assembled for the army. The Roumanian advance began at once and they swept victoriously through Califatu, Nikopolis, Smordanu and Rahoba. Finally they reached the junction point with their Russian allies and they looked with proud eyes into the defeated faces of the Tsar's soldiers. Then began memorable Plevna.

Overshadowing everything else connected with the defeat of the brilliant Osman Pacha is the capture of the celebrated Grivitza redoubt and it was captured by the Roumanian soldiers. This redoubt was known and feared as the most formidable of all the Turkish defences before Plevna. It was called by the Russians "the dreaded redoubt." And they had cause to call it so, for they had been hurled back from its lines time after time, leaving their dead in piles. The Roumanian soldier looked it over, gripped his gun tighter and got ready. This is how he took the redoubt:—

At half-past two o'clock in the afternoon of September 11, 1877, eight battalions of Russians and three battalions of Roumanians attacked the redoubt. They were repulsed with great slaughter. At half-past five o'clock, with a new Roumanian force in the lead, followed by two Russian regiments, another attack was made. Bayonets clashed and crossed in desperate struggle after rifles had been emptied, and finally the redoubt was carried. At seven P. M. the Turks made a counter charge and recaptured the redoubt. Prince Charles and the Grand Duke Nicholas consulted, and the Russian commander believed it was useless to risk another attack.

But the Roumanian King knew the Roumanian soldier better. During the night he formed a Roumanian brigade and conceived a separate enterprise for the glory of the Carpathian battler. A third assault was made in the dark. The attackers never flinched from what was demanded of them. Straight up to death they ran—and won. Four guns and a standard were among their trophies. They did not brag of their achievement, and when the sun came up there was the Roumanian flag flapping over the contested zone.

The interior of the redoubt was piled high with the dead, dying and wounded. Writhing and groaning they lay in one indistinguishable mass. The fierce fire levelled against the spot had prevented surgeons getting near, and for many hours there was no ambulance aid nor water for the survivors. Veterans of other wars contemplating the awful scene declared it evidenced the fiercest fighting known to history. And there was no one with a chance to dispute the glory of the victory with the Roumanian soldier. He had done it, and done it so well and effectively that his flag, at the hottest point of battle, clinched his claims.

After the war Roumania proclaimed herself a kingdom, with Prince Charles as her first sovereign, assuming the title of King Carol I. And mark the recognition of the valor of the Roumanian soldier. The crown placed upon the brow of the new King was made of the iron fashioned from the Turkish cannon captured by troops he personally had commanded at Plevna. When the nations met to talk over the peace conditions it was unanimously agreed that the capture of the Grivitza redoubt was the immediate cause of the Turkish surrender, and that no one had approximated the valor of the Roumanian soldier in the three assaults made.

During the double Balkan war of 1912-13 the kingdom of Carol I. demonstrated that its prestige was superior to that of any of the other States of the peninsula. It absolutely refused to become part of the Balkan Confederation for war on Turkey. It is even said that a secret understanding was had with the Ottoman government whereby Roumania pledged a watchful inactivity. And this refusal to take part in a movement that was popular worked no harm to the Roumanian people, as might have been supposed in most circumstances. Instead, the avowed neutrality of King Carol was esteemed a favor by Bulgaria, Servia, Greece and Montenegro, who would have been dismayed to find Roumania arrayed on the side of the Sultan.

It may be gathered from this that the Roumanian soldier in lifting his country to a commanding place in state affairs has been aided not a little by the Roumanian diplomatist. In fact, the treatment of the entire Balkan clash of 1912-13 fully demonstrated the ability of the little kingdom to meet the emergency of aggressive war or of strict neutrality, with profit to the country from the maintenance of either attitude.

While Greece, Servia, Montenegro and Bulgaria were fighting Turkey to a successful finish the Roumanian soldier hummed a war tune, polished up his sword and oiled his rifle lock. When each of the confederated nations had captured and occupied the Turkish capital that was the goal of its individual campaign, the Roumanian soldier raised his brows and looked toward the Roumanian diplomatist, who smiled sagely and shook his head, "Not yet." Then the trouble began. Bulgaria wanted the lion's share of the spoils, deeming herself the lion in the war successfully ended. She had met and defeated the main forces of the Turk and had occupied Adrianople, the principal city in the war zone. Her diplomatists assumed an arrogant offensive against her recent confederates and demanded about all of Macedonia for her reward, either through outright annexation or as the result of a craftily proposed Macedonian autonomy.

Bulgaria's recent allies refused to take the scraps and leave to Tsar Ferdinand the carcass proper. So finally the smouldering discord burst into flame, Servia, Greece and Montenegro were at Bulgaria's throat, with Bulgaria, feeling it because of her late victories over the Turk, ready to mix it up. Just before the first blow was struck Roumania entered.

King Carol's diplomatists contended that as Roumania had done the late allies a service by not taking arms against them some of the spoils of war were due her also. It was privately intimated to the diplomatists of Bulgaria that if the piece of long-desired shore line on the Euxine were ceded to Roumania then King Carol's soldiers would fight beside the battler of Ferdinand to obtain the inclusive Macedonian frontier Bulgaria desired. Together the two countries could have won from Servia, Montenegro and Greece. But Bulgaria felt her prowess too keenly. She mistakenly supposed she was a match for the entire Balkans. So she rejected with scorn the Roumanian scheme and struck the first blow in the second or aftermath war fought by the peninsular States.

On June 28, 1913, Bulgaria ended all attempts at diplomatic settlement of the spoils dispute by suddenly attacking the Servian position on the right bank of the River Zlatovo. The Servians had occupied most of the positions held by them at the end of their successful campaign.

Desultory fighting had occurred between the Greeks and Bulgarian troops in the Pangalion district.

Also around Salonica. All through May and June this had gone on because the negotiations for the division of territory had strung out so long that the troops became restive. June 30 the Greeks and Servians made an attack on Bulgaria along the lines of the new frontiers each claimed. The Roumanian diplomatist turned to King Carol and said:—"It is sufficient. It is the recess hour for diplomacy. The time of the bayonet has come. Advance!"

Roumania mobilized her army July 3. War against Bulgaria was declared July 10. Silistria was occupied the very next day. Then followed a swift, conquering march through Tsar Ferdinand's territory. Whatever opposition there was was swept aside decisively. Day after day the advance was only limited by the physical powers of the Roumanian soldier in marching—fighting only hurried him faster. By July 31 the Roumanian outposts were within twenty miles of Sofia, the Bulgarian capital.

This remarkable progress was too much to overcome. Ferdinand cried armistice, and armistice began that very date. Twenty-four hours longer and the Roumanian soldier would have been in the Bulgarian soldier's chief city.

Tsar Ferdinand had no other way. The Greeks faced him at Kocana Pass and the Servians had forced him back at Ishtib and Kotchana. The second Balkan war was over. Roumania got her strip on the Euxine, and Salonika, ardently coveted by Bulgaria and only jointly occupied by her, is still fifty miles from the Bulgarian frontier as newly marked.

Next to his desperate fighting and brilliant showing at Plevna the Roumanian soldier points with pride to the glorious battle of Giurgevo, fought August 13, 1595. The Roumanian ruler was the celebrated Michael the Brave, still sung in ballad and story as the great conqueror and welder of his country. This battle was fought in a narrow defile and has been called the Thermopylae of Roumania. It was the Turk—it is always the Turk in any Balkan fight—who advanced upon the little Roumanian band posted near Bucharest. The Grand Vizier who led the Sultan's forces unfurled the standard of the Prophet to incite Ottoman valor.

Michael performed prodigies of bravery, with his single arm slaying nearly a score, the annals have it. Every Roumanian soldier conducted himself like a hero. Three Pachas were killed and the Grand Vizier himself narrowly escaped death in the marshes on the retreat. The Sultan was so impressed with the fighting qualities of the Roumanian battler that he was glad to make peace, and in the following year sent a splendid embassage to treat with the Prince he could not conquer.

This great victory was not the first of Michael against the Turks by any means. Roumania's ruler was always claimed for vassal by the successful Sultans. In 1593 an army of 40,000 was sent to depose him. The Roumanian soldier smashed it, and twice afterward the same fate overtook Turkish troops sent to impose punishment and disaster on the Wallachians, as the men of the province were more often called. Once, in fact, Michael anticipated an invasion, and learning of the distant approach of the Sultan's army crossed the Danube on the ice and routed the enemy utterly. In this battle, aided by the Moldavian Prince Aaron, he took great booty, and consternation reigned in Constantinople.

Another militant ruler and diplomatist of whom the Roumanian soldier is proud was Mirtschea the Old. After the famous battle of Nikopolis of 1396, in which the Turk gained a great victory over the mediaeval Balkan and other confederate peoples, the Sultan sent an army into Wallachia. It was supposed that the defeated and disheartened condition of the Roumanians would make them easy prey. Under the stirring rallying cry of Mirtschea they turned on the invaders and drove them back over the frontier. Another ruler held in high repute was Stephen the Great, who led the Roumanian soldier from the Moldavian province to a complete victory at Racova in 1475, the Turk, as usual, being the enemy.

The Dacian or Latin descent of the Roumanians is highly regarded by these spirited people. They trace it back through the carvings on the Column of Trajan at Rome, which is an epitome in marble of the conquest of the Roumanian. There are nearly 3,000 human figures on this column, all relating to the ancient people of the little Balkan kingdom. Trajan's legions were left as a buffer against the inroads of Goths, Huns, Tartars, Turks and Mongols. They married the Dacian women, who were already famed as the mothers of the mighty men of brawn and courage who became trained gladiators for exhibition in the Roman arena.

This was A. D. 105. Trajan celebrated his triumph over Dacia and its annexation to the Roman Empire with games that lasted 123 days, during which 11,000 wild beasts and 10,000 Dacian gladiators, made prisoners during the invasion, were killed. The descendants of these Dacians have held their ground on the spot where they first met the Roman legionaries. They are proud of the blend with the conqueror, and point out that they are of Latin and not Slav ancestry for nearly twenty centuries. They give Latin names to their children. They celebrate many ancient Roman holidays, wearing robes in imitation of the world conquerors. Even their oxen and horses are frequently called Cassius and Brutus and Caesar. There are bridge piers still standing that supported bridges constructed over the Danube by the Romans, and on a road along that river there is still a bronze tablet setting forth the achievements of Trajan.

The present day proficiency of the Roumanian soldier is due in a great measure to King Carol I., He was chosen to rule the country in 1866 when he was Prince Charles of Hohenzollern, whose father, a member of the non-reigning branch of the great family, was cousin of Kaiser Wilhelm the Great of Germany. His grandmother was a Bonaparte. From the moment he ascended the Roumanian throne King Carol devoted his chief attention to the training and improvement of his army to the point where, man for man, it would be the equal of the best troops of any nation in the world. It is conceded that he has well accomplished his purpose. Plevna proved it, eleven years after this Prince, who is of an army drilling race, began his great task.

Immediately subsequent to the fall of the Roman Empire the Dacians, who had blended with the legionaries and now held themselves radically Romanised, were swept hither and thither with the varying conquests and invasions and raids of succeeding hosts of barbarians. Out of it all there gradually emerged, in this particular district, the two areas or provinces Moldavia and Wallachia. Each of these had its ruler from time to time, who always had his hands full fighting some outsider who led a lot of looters with no ambition toward a nationality. In turn, Russia, Hungary, Poland and Turkey held these two provinces as their nominal territory. None of them, however, ever completely subdued them or ever obtained more than a temporary submission.

At last political expediency forced the other nations through their more weighty troubles to generally accede to the suzerainty of Turkey over the provinces. But the Roumanians themselves never agreed to this. They were whipped now and then, but "came back" with a good whipping for the former whipper. In 1774, after having been ruled intermittently by her own brave princes or head men for four or five hundred years, the country consisting of the provinces of Moldavia and Wallachia was placed under the protectorate of Turkey. This lasted until 1848. Then the wealthier land owners, called boyards, began to send their young men to Germany and France to be educated in the universities.

Following the Crimean War an agreement was made between Moldavia and Wallachia to consolidate. In 1859 Colonel Alexander Couza was made ruler. He reigned until the night of February 23, 1866, when the military leaders of a cabal formed against him, burst into his room and forced him to sign his abdication proclamation. Then he was hurried over the border and a home made for an acceptable sovereign.

The peace strength of the Roumanian army is 95,000 men. The reserves number 100,000 men. The total war strength of the country is put down at 500,000 men, with 175,000 additional available for duty but unorganized. The population of the country is 7,000,000 and the area 52,760 square miles. Thus the spirited little kingdom can put in the field, all told, about one man in every eleven persons of her population.

LUCILLE LOVE
THE GIRL of MYSTERY

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Work of a Thief.

THE girl listened silently to the ranchman's gratitude, then watched him as, following the captives, he entered the house to which they had been brought. It took but a little while for the sentry to emerge. Then she caught her breath with a cry of delight as she recognized a young officer whom she had known in the Philippines. He beckoned her silently, seating himself at his desk and writing busily for a moment before nodding briskly that she should speak. A dancing imp of mischief was in her eyes as she uttered his name.

"Lieutenant Carmody, don't you remember me?"

The young officer's eyes opened as wide as his mouth.

"Lucille Love!" he gasped, half rising from his seat—"Lucille Love or her ghost!"

"A very tired and hungry ghost," she laughed delightedly. "Just try me and see."

As he summoned his orderly and gave him instructions to bring instantly some canned stuff Lucille hurriedly sketched out her adventures to him, eagerly persuading him when his face showed that he half believed she had taken leave of her senses. His expression was very grave when she finished.

"I suppose you know that Gibson was permitted to resign and nobody knows where he went?" he queried.

"Hugo Loubeque showed me the newspaper," she nodded. "And father"— Her tone was numbed at being brought into such close contact with one who could realise what all these things meant.

He Got Her Some Proper Clothing.

"The general is under a heavy cloud of suspicion. He has requested an inquiry into his own conduct in the affair. The messages were most important—in fact, their sale could harm us greatly."

"And the people think that I"—

"You have long since been given up for drowned. Harley told of taking you aboard the Empress. The wreck is common knowledge, of course. I must reassure them immediately."

"No," she shook her head decidedly. "I have gone this far, and I firmly believe some influence is at work on my behalf, helping me to do things better than any man could do them."

"But"— he protested.

"No," she shook her head firmly. "You have no idea how dangerous a game it is working against Hugo Loubeque. There is every chance that he may yet defeat me; that I may be killed or injured before I succeed. Father would demand my return, papers or no papers. Can't you see what it means to me? Can't you see that the man who has ruled and ruined nations, who has compelled thousands to do his will, has every chance of success against anything a man could do?"

The officer smiled a superior smile. Lucille merely took the diary of the spy from its hiding place and placed it in his hands, watching the swift changes of expression upon his face as he read. Finally he returned it to the owner.

"Please eat," he said quietly, motioning toward the end of the desk where the orderly was spreading a cold repast of canned meats and vegetables and steaming coffee, "and forgive me if I can't talk now. I must think what is best to be done."

Lucille smiled as she devoted her attention to the repast. She finally finished to find young Lieutenant Carmody staring fixedly at her, his brow clouded.

"It's too much for me," he muttered.

"Of course it is," she laughed heartily. "But I firmly believe that I will win."

"But why?"

"Because," and all the mirth had gone from her face, all the laughter from the eyes that were reverently lifted, "because everything I have done has been done for the sake of love and because love has watched over me and helped me. That is the reason, Lieutenant Carmody, Hugo Loubeque can never be beaten or brought to justice because of fear or hate, for his own powers in that direction are greater than those of nations."

"Well?" The officer unwillingly agreed. "What do you propose doing? Isn't there some way in which I can help you?"

"Yes," she answered promptly. "You can let me have money. You can tell me how to dispose of one of these valuable rubies, or all of them, and you can help me catch the first train for San Francisco."

Carmody whistled aloud his amazed delight as he regarded the marvelous jewels in the necklace she laid upon the table. Then he loaned her the money he had and insisted upon her lying down and resting until he could skirmish up some proper clothing and find out about the trains.

It was dawn before she wakened, and, though she felt alarm lest he had allowed her to miss a train, his reassurance and the sight of the clothing he had found for her made things seem much brighter. Then, too, the ninety odd dollars in currency seemed far more than even the rubies about her neck. Several hours later she boarded the train, assisted by a worried looking young officer, her heart light and gay, for she felt within herself that the journey that had been so long and so hazardous was finally nearing an end; that the familiar, dear faces would surround her on every side.

With every clamping of the wheels upon the frogs of the track her heart gave up a song of confidence, for Hugo Loubeque had put forward his own strength against her and, added to this, the strength of a portion of his organization. He had imprisoned her in two apparently impregnable places, and still she was here, all unbeknownst to him, speeding toward his house, intent upon beating him once and for all.

And in the compartment at which she stared with unseeing eyes Thompson regarded her in the mirror, his own eyes glittering with malicious triumph and with avarice.

Thompson crouched back in his compartment, feigning deep slumber while the colored porter made up his bed. Immediately the porter disappeared he became the incarnation of energy. His hands nervously fumbled with the lock of his grip, opening it finally and disclosing a secret trap in the bottom, from which he took an atomizer, a pair of nippers and a bottle of pale viscid fluid.

For an hour he waited, motionless, not even his fixed eyes blinking as he regarded the curtains of the berth Lucille occupied.

He was swift; he was certain; he was sure. Deftly parting the curtains, he looked down upon the sleeping girl. No atom of pity was in his heart. All the thief now, his eyes glittered as he allowed them to rest upon the glowing strand of stones about her neck.

Swiftly he leaned over, applying his pincers to the gas jet and unscrewing it so that the odor of the gas slowly began filling the stuffy section. Then he gently sprayed the ether across her face, never moving when she unconsciously stirred to fight off the anaesthetic.

Her breathing became heavier while her lips took on a bluish tinge. The gas was becoming stronger, and he knew her condition would be ascribed to asphyxiation when she recovered from the effects of the ether. Stooping, with no appearance of care now, he unfastened the rubies from her throat. A moment he waited, slipping them in his pocket, then he slipped back to his own compartment.

Carefully he repacked his grip, tucking the necklace in his breast pocket. Against the door he crouched, waiting.

No trace of anxiety he showed. He was confident of himself. Came a clamping down upon the ties as the air brakes worked. Thompson threw open his window, looking out to discover it was opposite a tiny station. With a pocket knife he cut out the screen that separated him from the tracks.

Cautiously he looked up and down the track. The train was slowing down. He tossed his bag far out from him, then slipped partially through the window. The lights of the station were almost in his eyes when he jumped, landing on his feet and regaining his balance with an effort. Then he permitted himself the luxury of a smile.

The next train through would be time enough, and the booty in his breast pocket was worth many risks.

* * * * * * *

Lucille felt herself struggling with a desperate enemy, one whose fingers were of steel as they fastened themselves about her throat, grasped at her breath and held it despite her utmost efforts. Even in the effort to waken, unsuccessful though it was, she seemed to recognize the calm, imperturbable, businesslike features of Thompson.

Then she felt a sensation of ease and comfort and peace such as had not been hers for a long time, and she allowed herself to drift away upon the gentle flowing river that hummed its song in her ears.

She awakened to find herself being shaken violently by the conductor and a porter, whose ebony face had changed to a saffron shade. Her head ached so fearfully that she pressed her feverish palms to her temples to keep it from bursting. Her throat and mouth felt as though she had been subsisting upon a diet of cotton soaked in oil.

She staggered to her feet and stood, dazed and bewildered, in the aisle of the car. The conductor turned her over to two women, who stood with her upon the platform, supporting her trembling figure while the fresh air drove away the fumes of chloroform and gas to which she had been subjected.

First she felt the rush of the train, the dotting of lights in the distance, the rush of the train past the lights, only to come upon a new cluster. And she was rushing, rushing, rushing, just like these lights to a cavernous blackness which she could not describe even to herself.

Suddenly the reason for her being upon the train came to her, and her hands sought her breast, then her throat. With a little cry she staggered back into the arms of the women.

"Robbed!" she gasped. "I have been robbed!"

The women looked at one another pityingly, then incredulously and finally believingly as they caught the pallor and sanity on the girl's face. Summoning all her strength, she turned the knob of the door and sought the conductor. He looked incredulous at the girl's charge, but investigation showed that the light had been tampered with. Nothing, however, could be done before reaching San Francisco except a search of the car.

Lucille went with him from place to place, scanning every face. But she knew who had done this thing. When she fought against the fingers of the drugs they had been the fingers of Thompson. When she had slipped from peaceful slumber into the drugged stupor it was Thompson she had been bravely fighting.

But Thompson—where had he disappeared? What had become of the man?

"We know who the thief was, miss," reported the conductor a little later. "He had the compartment facing your section. The screen is cut out. He must have dropped out the window after working his game."

Lucille smiled faintly.

"A medium sized man, rather dark, plainly dressed, with features that nobody would notice especially and—a livid scar across the side of his face," she murmured.

The man looked at her in surprise.

"Thompson," she murmured. "Yes, it was Thompson. I was positive from the first."

As the conductor corroborated her description of the thief she lay back against the dusty cushions of her seat idly watching the train charging across the landscape. She had started badly, but she clinched her teeth firmly. Her purpose was firm as ever, her rage a bit higher.

* * * * * * *

Hugo Loubeque cursed profoundly to himself as he paced up and down the floor of his San Francisco house. From below came the sounds of his servants searching into every nook and cranny of the mysterious house for the packet of papers and documents he knew Lucille had hidden here.

He frowned heavily as he went to the window and looked down upon the street, deserted now save for the old woman who trudged toward the place. She carried a basket of fruit over her arm and Loubeque smiled grimly as she disappeared from his sight, then reappeared after being turned away from the door by the servant.

As he idly studied the woman something about her caught and held his attention. She moved slowly, but there was an affectation about that slowness.

Loubeque's eyes were fastened, like those of a hawk now, upon the old woman. She had stopped beside the alarm box on the corner lamppost. Suddenly the bent form straightened and he read the impulsive resolve of youth in every movement of the ill-attired old woman. Her hand groped upon the ground. He saw her pick up a stone and smash the fire alarm.

Came the sound of fire engines rolling down the street. Loubeque watched the woman. She dashed toward the captain as he darted up in his light buggy, pointing eagerly toward the house of the spy, her eyes glowing with excitement. Then Loubeque smiled as he pressed a bell and ordered the search to stop immediately.

Before the rush of firemen with their hose the door opened. Their heavy feet slumped upon the stairs, throughout the house. But Loubeque did not move. He watched Lucille as she tossed aside the habiliments she had worn over her girlish clothes. She looked swiftly about to make certain no one was in sight. Then she swiftly approached the extra truck upon which the slickers and hats of the firemen were laid. Once more she looked about her, then flung herself into a long rubber coat and jammed a helmet over her head.

Swiftly Loubeque peered over the stairs. Without an instant's hesitation Lucille had sped to the basement. He tiptoed to the room that had been assigned her when he held her captive here. Pressing a button, one wall of the room opened. He peered below, watching her as, below, she searched feverishly for the papers.

Loubeque quietly moved back to his own room. Slowly his fingers reached out. Came a slight clink of machinery. Then the spy stepped below and received the assurance of the fire captain that everything was well. His smile was that of a man quite positive that everything was more than well.

POULTRY POINTERS

Dampness in the hen house is a serious proposition at this time of the year especially, and is one of the surest means of promoting disease.

Examine vigorous males from time to time and note condition of spurs and toenails. Sharp points and, particularly, sharp edges on toenails of the males may result in torn backs in females. You can't afford to take chances of losing one of your best breeders through such injury.

PARALYZED LIMBS.

To-day it is dizziness, headaches, digestive trouble and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Rosenburger, 10 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

6983

Tête de nègre was chosen for the serge dress of the illustration, with black satin for the deep girdle and tête de nègre chiffon for the collar and sleeves. Small jet buttons fasten the front and ornament the sleeves, the latter being particularly graceful in chiffon, gathered at the back of the arm below the elbow. This gathering softens the effect and is becoming to everybody. Do not fail to note that the plain skirt is circular in cut, the new "flared" skirt, as it is called. The pattern for this dress, No. 6,983, can be had in six sizes, from 34 to 44 bust measure.

Poplin is another fabric that is very stylish for this kind of a frock, and usually it can be found in the same colors as serge. It is a little more wiry in texture, and for that reason does not lend itself so well to folds, but for this particular design it will do very well indeed. For more dressy purposes nothing this season can compare with velvet, used in the plainest possible way, to show off its beautiful sheen and softness. Among the silks suitable for this sort of a dress are crepe meteor, crepe de Chine and faille, but satin is above all the chosen fabric just now.

Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

MUNICIPAL NOMINATIONS

Acclamations the Order of the Day—List of Results

MILLBROOK, Dec. 31 — Monday last being nomination day, the electors in this part of the County decided to bury the hatchet and re-elect former Councillors, in many cases. There has been a feeling towards this course of action so that war year might be offset by peace in the home sphere. There seemed little disposition to find fault, and in Cavan, Manvers and South Monaghan the old Councils are again returned; also Reeve Doak of Millbrook, and the three retiring Trustees, Messrs. John Allen, A. A. Smith and A. T. Armstrong.

The cost of holding elections in all minor municipalities should as a consequence be voted to the Patriotic Fund. At the after-meeting in Cavan ex-Warden Kelly occupied the chair, and Reeve Tohrne and Deputy Reeve Henderson, and the Council of 1914, gave an account of their stewardship.

In Millbrook Mr. L. S. Clarry was nominated to the chair at the evening meeting and Reeve Doak and the old Councillors in the running and the new aspirants addressed the electors. That Messrs. J. C. Kells and Dr. Deyell had decided to drop out, gave openings for the new men on the list and there is material for a progressive Council for 1915.

Manvers elected Mr. J. R. Armstrong again for Reeve, Mr. R. Stevenson for Deputy with the former Councillors for the Board. South Monaghan gave the old Reeve, Wm. Waterman another year of office without opposition which speaks well for honest Willie. The Council also were handed out acclamations.

The list below gives the results:

Manvers.

Reeve—James R. Armstrong.
Deputy Reeve—Stephen W. Sisson.
Councillors—Mm. A. Corbett, Wm. J. McMaster, Richard Cairns.

Cavan.

Reeve—George S. Thorne.
Deputy Reeve—. J. Henderson.
Councillors — H. Baptie, W. R. Shield, Fred Clarke.

South Monaghan

Reeve—Wm. Waterman.
Councillors—T H. Perrin, M. Willan, N. Breckenridge, Ed. Dawson.

Millbrook.

Reeve—R. J. Doak (acclamation).
Council — G. E. Burnham, W. J. Fisher, Chas. Thorndyke, C. W. Richards J. J. Fair, I. E. Needham, W. Coombe.
School Trustees—A. A. Smith, A. T. Armstrong, John Allen.
In the list nominated for the Millbrook Council all are remaining in the field with the exception of Mr. Coombe.

Hope.

For Reeve—Greenaway, H. B. Lawson.
For Deputy—R. F. Beatty, Mont. Wilson.
For Council—Dickinson, Harness, Walker, Colwell Dickson, Gist.—Millbrook Reporter.

THE GALWAY NOMINATIONS.

At the nomination meeting, held Monday, Dec. 28th, in the Township of Galway, the Reeve and Councillors were elected by acclamation for 1915, as follows:

For Reeve—Chas. Coben.
Councillors—Jas. Allen, John Clark John McKinley and Ed. Grieves.

ELECTED REEVE OF HASTINGS.

Walter M. Fowlds was elected Reeve of Hastings by acclamation.

Letters From The Trenches

Aeroplane's Aim Poor.

A captain in the Army Service Corps writes:

We've had a lot of work of late, as we've had snow, and so we have to find straw, coke and coal to send up to the trenches to keep the poor devils there as warm as possible. We have moved again and are in a village in which the Germans and English had a big fight. We are billeted in the doctor's house, as he was here during the German occupation. He has given us an acount thereof, first hand. They shot ten men capable of bearing arms. Excuse given was that they had borne arms. The doctor himself was made prisoner and sentenced to be shot, but as he tended the German wounded he was released. They looted all the houses and put a machine-gun into the church tower, as they said that the English would not shoot at churches.

The photo sent you was taken at Ypres, and so the obtaining of further copies is impossible; Ypres is, I believe, a mass of bricks now. We were there for the first night's shelling, and mighty glad we were to leave the place. The window of our car, which was standing outside our house, was smashed by a shell, and all the windows of our house. We nipped out like greased lightning.

I had a very curious presentment that evening at 7 p.m. Acting upon it I went round to my men and moved all my men and horses. I then came home and told my servant to put my bed down on the basement floor. At 12 p.m. the first shell arrived. One of the very first landed plumb in the middle of the very place from which I had moved my men and horses, and a bullet from a shell came bang through the window of the very room in which I had always before slept, which is a curious psychical phenomenon. Also I went to bed at 9 p.m. with this strange feeling on me, which I told to the other fellows living with me.

Every morning for five days previous to this we had aeroplanes trying to drop bombs on us. They all fell within 50 yards' radius from where I was standing. Seeing the aeroplane coming, then seeing it bang above one waiting for the bomb to drop was no pleasant ordeal.

The comparative smallness of effect also was curious. In five days we lost only five horses and five men of the transport, and yet every bomb dropped among us, and one bomb wounded six Frenchmen who were in a hospital at one end of the field. We had altogether about a dozen to fifteen dropped at us; but these experiences are so very feeble when compared to the appalling things the fighting troops have had to endure, that one hardly likes to tell them. They, poor devils, had 12 days and 13 nights absolute hell, as the line of Ypres had to be held at all costs. Our division were the original defenders, and they kept out many times their number, hence the casualties. The only consolation is that they did hold on, and the German casualties must on, and the German casualties must those 12 days alone. It was there that Colonel Loring was killed.

The Coldstream Guards.

A letter sent home by a Bolton soldier mentions a tribute paid to the work of the Coldstream Guards by Brig.-General the Earl of Cavan, in the following communication to the officer commanding the regiment:

I should like to put on record the fact that for those last four weeks, October 28 to November 20, they have held their line intact under hardships and strain that it is impossible to describe. Since October 31, when I was ordered off to protect the right of the British line with Grenadier and Irish Guards, the two battalions (second and third, with first temporarily attached to third) have been under Colonel Pereira, as Colonel Fielding was wounded. It is not too much to say that the whole safety of the line has depended on their staunchness, and truly worthily have they held it (their trenches being on a hill full of water above their knees) for twenty-three days. The gale of about November 2 cleared the wood in which there were of every particle of cover, the trees having been all pierced through by shrapnel and bullets. Hand grenades thrown at them were, on one occasion when they did not explode, picked up and hurled back again. They finally rejoined the brigade on the right flank of this part of the British line on November 17, in as good heart as the day they left England. I am prouder to be their brigadier than any words could possibly express, and I owe to them undoubtedly, with their comrades of the Grenadier and Irish Guards, the satisfaction of handing over our line to the French intact and unconquerable. (Signed) Cavan, Brigadier-General-Commanding, Fourth Brigade, November 20.

In a communication on the same date to the Officer Commanding the 2nd Battalion Grenadier Guards, ordering the men to move back for a rest, Lord Cavan writes that "they leave the line intact, and, in spite of great loss and untold sufferings and hardships, they fought the battle of November 17 with as good a nerve as the battle of the Aisne. . . I can never express what I think of the great courage and endurance shown by officers and men during the defence before Ypres. . . They have kept up a respectable appearance, which has been an example, considering that it has been absolutely impossible to change an article of clothing for four weeks."

The Farmer's Ice Harvest---It's Housing

F. C. Nunnick, Commission of Conservation, Ottawa

A GOOD supply of ice is more important in the country home than in the city home. People in the city can purchase perishable food supplies as needed, while, in the country, it is often necessary to use canned, corned or smoked meat products during the summer, when the table should be supplied with fresh meats. Ice could be used to preserve meat, butter and other perishable products for the table. The production of high grade dairy products on the farm is almost impossible without ice. Many markets require that, before shipment, the milk be cooled to a degree attainable only with ice. There are many excellent and healthful dishes that may be prepared for the farm table if a supply of ice is at hand.

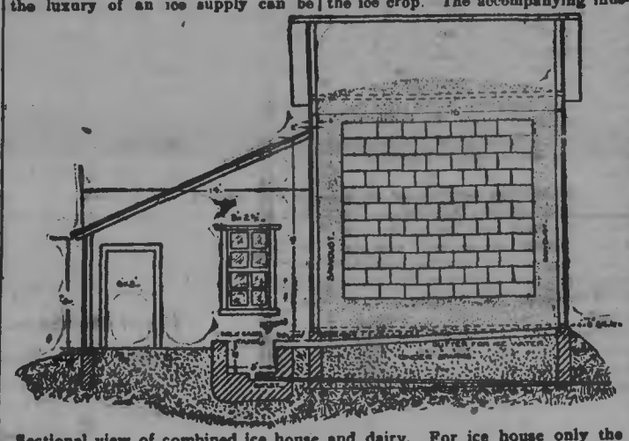
In many sections of the country, the luxury of an ice supply can be had for the gathering; the cost of harvesting and storing is small, compared with the utility.

Farmers in the neighborhood of summer resorts may, with considerable profit, undertake to supply ice to the residents during the summer months, or, when harvesting their own supplies, may fill private ice houses in the winter.

In selecting a stream or pond from which the supply is to be taken, care should be exercised to obtain ice free from contamination or pollution, and free from decaying vegetable matter. The latter is very objectionable because, as the ice melts, it will be left in the ice box, rendering it filthy and dangerous to health.

For the proper storing of ice several points must be carefully considered. (1) Expose as small a surface as possible to the air or to the packing material, that is, have the ice piled so as to form, as nearly as possible, a cube; for example, a mass of ice 12 x 12 x 12 feet exposes less surface than the same tonnage piled so as to cover a larger area. (2) Good insulation is necessary; that is, the ice should be protected from external influences such as heat and air. (3) There should be good drainage because the lack of it interferes with insulation. (4) The ice should be packed so as to prevent the circulation of air through the mass.

The more solid the mass of ice can be made, the better will it be preserved. An expensive structure is unnecessary for the purpose of storing the ice crop. The accompanying illustrations show the construction of a simple ice house, as also a combination of ice house and refrigerator room. These are very simple and may be erected by any farmer.



Sectional view of combined ice house and dairy. For ice house only the lean-to section and lower drain may be omitted.

On many farms, there are places in the buildings which could be used for storing ice. A silo which has been emptied by February might be used. Ice can usually be stored at a time of the year when there is little other pressing work on the farm.

Full particulars regarding ice cold storage on the farm are contained in Bulletin 207 of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, and may be had by applying for same to the Department at Toronto.

picked up by a British light cruiser, and it is possible that others may have been rescued by other vessels."

Was Acting Flagship.

The Formidable had asigned to her, according to the British navy list for December, various fleet officers, and consequently she undoubtedly was acting as a flagship at the time of her destruction. Her Captain was Arthur N. Loxley and her Commander Chas. E. Ballard. Captain John C. Deed was in command of the marines on board, while the Fleet Surgeon was Godfrey Taylor, and the Fleet Paymaster, P. J. Ling. The Chaplain is given as Rev. George D. Robinson. On board the Formidable were also 16 midshipmen.

Ten Killed In London Wreck

Thirty Seriously Injured When Great Eastern Was Hit

LONDON, Jan. 1.—Ten persons are known to have been killed and thirty were seriously injured to-day when a swift-moving express train on the Great Eastern Railway crashed through a heavily-loaded local suburban passenger train within 100 yards of the crowded railway station platform at Ilford, Essex, a suburb of London. Six bodies already have been recovered and one report is that the dead may reach twelve.

The accident ocurred at 8.30 this morning. The engineer of the local attempted to pass the crossing ahead of the express, instead of waiting for the latter to pass, as usual. The express train was late and was running at high speed.

Eye-witnesses Transfixed.

As the express rushed down upon the local train thousands of holiday passengers on the Ilford platform stood transfixed with fear. Although the brakes were set on the express, the momentum was so great that it crashed through the rear of the local, smashing several of the rear carriages to matchwood.

The engine of the express train rolled down the embankment, carrying with it the forward carriages. Hundreds of persons in the carriages had difficulty in extricating themselves, and many women and children were terror-stricken by the sight of the dead and the cries of the injured.

Henry W. Thornton, an American, formerly General Superintendent of the Long Island Railway, is Manager of the Great Eastern Railway. He was appointed in March, 1914.

RHEIMS SHELLED FOR TWO MONTHS; USED TO IT NOW

WITH THE FRENCH ARMY AT RHEIMS.—One can get used to almost anything—even to being bombarded. For more than two months now, the inhabitants of this city have been shelled intermittently, hundreds have been killed and wounded and still the life of the place is going on about the same as usual.

Our party had Thanksgiving dinner at the Hotel Du Nord which a Madam De Camp is managing in the absence of her husband at the front. A 16-year-old waitress was ladling the soup for us. A shell landed in the street almost directly in front of the hotel and exploded with a deafening crash. The windows rattled. But the waitress' hand, poising the brimming ladle, never trembled. The soup went into the plate quite as if nothing had happened. Not a drop was spilled.

"Madame," said a captain of dragoons, "why don't you close your hotel and get out of danger?"

"I employ a number of girls here," she said simply. "And though we are not quite making expenses nowadays I don't want to throw them out of work."

As we left the hotel we heard the shells whistling overhead, most of them falling in the direction of the cathedral which we had permission to visit. As we emerged upon the street a shell burst two squares down to the right. A little boy, perhaps 7 years old, was standing near where the projectile fell. When the explosion came he ran forward, grabbed up a little dog, and scurried to shelter under the arcades forming the sidewalks.

A woman was delivering milk from a push cart near by. She escaped death. But two of the milk cans were punctured and the milk poured out upon the sidewalk. When we came up she was scoring the German "barbarians" as she called them, in her picturesque Champagne dialect.

"They stop at nothing," she exclaimed, pointing at the great puddles of milk now spreading to the gutter. "Louvain, Antwerp, our belle cathedral," and then with a wonderful anti-climax—"and now look at that!" "But such is war," she said, sighing.

ELECTORS OF THE RICH WEST WARD! STAND SOLID FOR ALDERMAN GREEN

Make Sure of His Re-Election ——— He is Too Good a Man to Lose

Reports From Battlefront Tell Of Renewed German Drives

Thousands of Reinforcements Have Been Brought Up, Forcing a Withdrawal in Alsace, Where Germans Are Being Strongly Pressed--Allied Army is Engaged in Entrenching Itself in New Positions--German Prisoners Take a Gloomy View of the Situation.

LOSS OF H. M. S. FORMIDABLE

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

GERMAN TRENCHES DEMOLISHED

PARIS,, January 2, 1915. — Mining operations by both sides have featured the operations on the battle front during the last 36 hours. The Germans, operating with veteran sappers, succeeded in demolishing the French caissons in the region between Beaumetz and Achicourt. The French managed to demolish a line of German trenches at Villieres and in the forest of Selle. It was admitted to-day that on New Year's eve the Germans attacked in force at numerous points along the battle line, but the war office states that they were everywhere repulsed. The violent artillery duel continues in the dunes at Nieuport, at Sonnebeck, and in the regions of Arras, Albert and Roye. The French artillery has silenced the enemy along the Aisne as well as in the region of Rheims, and a material advantage has resulted. By a series of bayonet charges, the French have been able to attain new advanced positions in the wooded region of Perthe, and have regained part of the ground that was previously lost in the Argonne. Slow, steady fighting with small gains are reported in the Woevre region. In Alsace, while the fighting continues with unabated ferocity at Steinbach, the French are slowly pushing down the hill and now dominate the main road and most of the villages.

LONDON, January 2.—In another lengthy review of the operations at the front issued by the press bureau to-day, it is stated that for the last several weeks the extension and construction of new trenches have been the most pressing problem. Excavations have been made in all directions, until the entire front now presents a labyrynth of confused intersecting trnches,resembling a huge grid-iron.

The earth in the vicinity is plowed by shells, bombs and mines. Even when there is a lull in the actual fighting the troops are kept busy straightening out their trenches and improving the sanitary conditions. Many times the spades turn up ghastly relics in the form of bodies and parts of bodies of slain soldiers.

The war office report says that some of the German prisoners who have been taken have a gloomy view of the situation, and blame their officers, but the majority are more cheerful.

ARTILLERY DUELS

PARIS, January 2.—Along the lines on the allied left wing the artillery duels continue. The allies have failed in another attempt to take the German positions at Labassee, but in turn, prevented the Germans from gaining any ground in a series of bitterly contested counter attacks. It is believed by the military experts here that the present fighting along the line from Argonne to the Vosges marks a second period in the present campaign.

Convinced that the allied armies can hold the Germans everywhere in the north, General Joffre is believed to have initiated a driving movement which has for its object the forcing of the enemy from French soil.

His latest reserve armies which have been sent to the front from the southern centres, have all been sent to the centre and the right, leaving the veteran French corps and the British and the Belgians to hold Von Kluck in check on the left.

Stay-at-Homes Never Elected Anybody. Refute on Monday the Assertion That the Best Thought of Peterboro' Permits the Worst Thought to Choose its Civic Representatives.

THE MUNICIPAL CAMPAIGN WILL CLOSE TO-NIGHT

Seven Out of Twelve Candidates Are to be Elected—This Year's Municipal Elections Are Free From By-Laws of Any Kind

VOTE EARLY

On Monday next the fate of twelve candidates now aspiring for municipal honours, will be decided by the electorate. Seven are to be elected and the remaining five relegated to the past tense. There are between five and six thousand qualified voters in the city. That is voters who are qualified to participate in the election of councillors. Upon these voters will devolve the responsibility of completing the selection of a Council for 1915. From a field of six candidates they will have to select a chief magistrate and two aldermen. One to represent the West Ward and one for the North. Some would say that the responsibilities of the present electorate was light as other years they have had to select a full slate besides having a greater number of candidates to chose from. Be that as it may, the issue is before the electors. By the time the returns are in, five of the present crop of candidates will be in the minority column.

No By-laws This Year.

From all accounts considerable interest is being manifested in the elections small though they seem. There is every reason to believe that a fairly large vote will be polled. Last year the Mayoralty vote was as follows: G. A. Gillespie—951, William Buller—1,511, and J. J. Hartley—900. The two Maporalty candidates may each be expected to poll a larger vote than was recorded for an individual candidate last year.

The contest for the two aldermanic vacancies, and also four members of the School Board will likely occasion considerable interest when voting day rolls around. It is some time since the municipal elections were free from by-laws of any kind. Last year two were voted upon. One to authorize the expenditure of $78,000 for a new bridge at Dalhousie street, and another money by-law authorizing the expenditure of $6,000 for the purchase of a motor driven chemical engine. Both of them were defeated.

Get Out and Vote.

On Monday Peterborough will go to the polls to complete the selection of its 1915 Council.

Your vote is important.

Staying away from the polls is neglecting a duty.

Be a voter.

The candidates have been favoured by good campaigning weather.

Your vote may be the one your favourite candidate needs.

Do not neglect to vote.

See that your neighbour votes.

Do not wait for someone to call for you with an automobile. Go yourself and vote.

The good citizen uses his vote.

Your vote is just as good as that of any other voter.

Register your vote early.

RE-CALL TO ARMS

Is Meeting With a Gratifying Response in Peterboro'—Military Police Will be Stationed Here.

ON PATROL DUTY

The call for recruits for the Mounted Rifles and the Infantry Company which is being formed in Peterborough, is meeting with a gratifying response. By to-night it is expected that at least thirty men will have been accepted for service in the Mounted Corps, and about half that number in the Infantry Corps.

Major Walker announces that recruiting for the infantry will continue to-night at 8 o'clock, and on succeeding days from 3 to 5 and from 8 to 10 p.m. It should be understood that the pay for the recruits commences from the date of enlistment; that is to say the men who enlisted last night will receive daily $1.10 pay and 75c. a day rations allowance.

Military Police.

Owing to the fact that between three and four hundred soldiers will be quartered in Peterborough for some time, the Militia Department is taking steps to co-operate with the local Police Department in the preservation of order.

It has been decided to place, besides the regular guard, two soldiers on police duty. They will patrol the streets each day. While no serious disturbance, or breach of the law is anticipated either by the civil or military authorities, the above action means simply the carrying out of regulations in force in other centres where troops are being mobilized and quartered.

BROWNING CLUB ON MONDAY NIGHT

The Browning Club will meet at the Y.W.C.A. on Monday next, January 4th, at 8 p.m. Owing to Thursday proving an inconvenient night for many of the members, Monday has been fixed for the weekly meeting from now on. The subject for the first meeting of 1915 is "Cleon," the companion poem to "Karshish" on the effect of Christian doctrine in the pagan world. Karshish was an Arabian scientist contemporary of Tagarus; Cleon is a Greek poet and artist contemporary of St. Paul. In the interests of English poetry and its lovers, the Management committee offer a cordial welcome to guests and visitors at the weekly meetings.

EDGAR GROSE ON TRIAL FOR THE MURDER OF WM. O'BRIEN

POOR ENCOURAGEMENT FOR THE "WHITTLING DOWN" POLICY ADVOCATED BY BERNHADT

Only One Battleship Destroyed in German Coast Waters in Five Months--The Admiralty Has Succeeded in Preserving England's First Line Naval Strength

Special Cable to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, January 2.—J. W. T. Mason, the war expert of the United Press, says that the battleship Formidable is the first capital ship to be sunk in the English Channel or the North Sea since the war began. All the other warships that were sent to the bottom of those waters were of secondary importance. The Formidable alone among the other victims possessed first line armament, although even in her case her pre-dreadnought design lessened the emphasis of her name.

One battleship destroyed in German coast waters in five months is not an encouragement for the "whittling down" policy urged by Bernhadt. This is the paramount lesson of the Formidable's loss, the Germans have failed in five months' warfare to make any important inroads on Britain's naval preponderence.

The loss of the Bulwark was an accident, as improbable of duplication as the self destruction of the German cruiser Yorck. The Audacious incident, too, was a chance affair and was not the result of scientific calculation which can be repeated frequently enough to threaten England's command of the seas.

The British Admiralty has succeeded in its paramount duty. It has preserved England's first line naval strength on which the security of the British Empire and the success of the allies' cause essentially depend.

Greetings From Salisbury Plain

At 8.45 p.m. Thursday night, the folowing cable was received from Capt. George Bennett, and which carries the greetings of the Peterborough boys back to their relatives and friends at home. This was sent in reply to the greeting and sheaf of signatures forwarded to the men as a Christmas reminder that they were not forgotten:

London, Dec. 31st, 1914.

To F. H. Dobbin,
Peterborough, Can.

Autograph letter joyously received and well understood. Encouragement is duly appreciated.

Convey our sincerest gratitude and the season's best and most cordial greetings to all in Peterborough. From "A" Company.

Exit 1914--Enter 1915

1914.

The year when the Great War broke out, is gone. It has shaken us has this old year, but let us hope it has only shaken us awake—shaken the faults and the false out of us and made us ready to continue our climb from imperfection towards perfection, in the hundreds of years of peace that are to be.

In this upward climb, the aim of "The Examiner" is not merely to surpass all others—it is to surpass ourselves; to keep hammering away at our own imperfections, and to rise on these stepping stones to the higher functions of a perfect newspaper.

It has often been remarked that "The Examiner" is an accurate criterion of the industrial and financial condition of this important and progressive city. Judging by the wholehearted support and enthusiasm the people of Peterborough have shown us this year, we feel confident that the happy, bright and prosperous New Year we wish you will surely come.

1915.

As we turn our backs on the old year and stretch out hands of greeting to A.D. 1915, let us all look forward with confidence, thankfulness and good cheer to the long days of peaceful prosperity—the ultimate good which must be ours as the result of the present evil.

May this new year prove to us all one of abiding happiness and prosperity.

Old Father Time deputes us here before ye,
Not now to preach, but tell his simple story.
The sage, grave ancient coughed and bade us say:—
You're one year older this important day.

For our sincere, though happy, weak endeavours
With grateful pride we own your many favours;
And howsoe'er our pen may ill reveal it
Believe our glowing bosoms really feel it.

We wish you all again, a good New Year—Jan. 1, 1915.

PETROGRAD, Jan. 2.—The War Office report say that Von Hindenburg's advance into Poland is now definitely and finally checked.

BORDEAUX, Jan. 2.—One new French Dreadnought and two new cruisers made their trial trips this morning.

Prisoner Hands Statement to P. C. Kidd—Medical Testimony as to Cause of Death Was Heard This Morning

MR. GRAHAM'S STORY

Edgar Grose, charged with the murder of William O'Brien on the night of Thursday, December 24, came up this morning for preliminary hearing. Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton conducted the prosecution and Mr. G. N. Gordon acted for the defence. The court room was crowded.

John O'Brien, father of the young man, who it is alleged was killed by Grose, was the first witness. On the night in question he was called to the White House about eleven o'clock, and there, in the kitchen, he saw the body of his son. He was dead. Deceased was 21 years of age.

"What state of health was your son in prior to the accident?" asked the the Crown Attorney.

"I don't think you could get a man in a better condition," was the reply.

"Had he complained to you regarding his health."

"No."

Here Mr. Gordon objected to that question as heredity evidence. Magistrate Dumble overruled the objection, however, and accepted the evidence.

Attracted by Scuffle.

Mr. Chris. Graham, proprietor of the White House was the Crown's second witness. His hotel was [illegible]. On the night of the 24th of December he was in the office of the hotel.

"Did you see the prisoner there?"

"Yes."

"How long have you known him?"

"For 15 or 16 years."

"Did you see the deceased there that night?"

"Not until I was attracted by the noise of the scuffle and found these two boys in a clinch holding each other's arms."

"Who were the two men?"

"The prisoner, Grose, and Wm. O'Brien, the deceased."

"Where were you when this scuffle took place?"

"At the telephone. When I heard the scuffling of feet I ran out of the office and down the hall to find the two men in a clinch."

"Could you see the two men from the 'phone?"

"No."

"Then you had to go from the office to the hall?"

"Yes."

"When you came into the hall what did you see?"

"I saw the two men clinched near the south door leading into a room off the hall. O'Brien's back was to the wall, and they appeared to be holding each other's arms."

"Did you go down there quickly to them?"

"Yes, at once."

"Is there an electric light in the hall?"

"Yes."

"What did you do?"

"I grabbed hold of Grose and pushed him into the first room on the left."

"When you separated them did O'Brien fall?"

"No, he was standing against the wall."

"When you pushed Grose into the room what did you do?"

"I went back to put O'Brien out the other way, but when I got back I found O'Brien toppling over. I and others who were there tried to keep him from falling. I could hear O'Brien making sounds as though he was smothering. I said 'turn him over on his back and give him some air.' He seemed to be gasping for breath, so I pulled his collar and tie off. We got ice water and applied it. He was unconscious."

"Did you give him any stimulants?"

"Not then. He didn't seem to be coming to as fast as I liked so we took him outside so that he would get more air. I called several doctors, finally getting Dr. Gallivan."

"Did you succeed?"

"No."

"Did you do anything else?"

"Yes, I 'phoned the fire hall to get the pulmotor. It came a minute after the doctor arrived. The doctor pronounced him dead."

"He didn't have any violent fall then?"

"No. I didn't see or hear him fall."

Was Ordered Out.

Witness in the meantime, had ordered Grose to get out of the hotel at once. He, and a party of his friends, went out. The idea was to get him away before O'Brien came to, so as to avoid another scuffle.

"I then telephoned the police and asked them to notify the coroner," he said.

"Were there many in the house that night?"

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, JAN. 2, 1915

A SERIOUS BUSINESS.

The citizens of Peterborough during the past year have faced serious business and other situations bravely, and have handled a very serious problem with courage and effectiveness. They are now confronted with the most serious business, that, come what may, will be presented them in the year 1915—the choice of a mayor and Council and, in part, a Board of Education.

Nobody except — and that goes without saying—the interested candidates, can teach the electors how to mark their ballots; but one can urge them to reflect upon the solemnly important character of the action of voting. Every elector is voting for the good of himself and the collective body of electors. A candidate's personality does not count, except in so far as it helps form an estimate of his efficiency as a servant of the people. If the electors go to the polls tomorrow with the idea of making fitness for office the only qualification of a candidate worthy of recognition, and vote accordingly, the best of the men presenting themselves will be elected.

NEED FOR ACTION.

We cannot rest assured that, in spite of the "understanding" said to exist between the Canadian Government and the United States refineries, Canadian nickel will not find its way to Germany. Only a day or two ago, the vigilance of the Denmark authorities prevented a big shipment of copper from being smuggled into Germany. Of course, the favourite weapon of Germany—fraud and falsity, a false manifest—was used; and but for accident, Germany would have been strengthened by a big shipment of copper. If it had been one of Canadian nickel, it would have been all the same. It would seem that drastic remedies are needed to circumvent an enemy that cannot be expected to "play fair." If total prohibition of the exportation of Canadian nickel matte, is necessary, it might be enacted. Of course, it might cause considerable industrial and economic disturbance; but, the importance of weakening Germany by shutting off nickel supply, would justify a liberal compensation arrangement. The home Government and the Canadian Government are spending money lavishly for purposes that would not so greatly hamper and weaken Germany as the shutting off of the supply of nickel; so that compensation for loss of employment and profit, might be money well spent.

FACTORS THAT COUNT.

Germany is putting up a bold front in waging war, yet the indications are that she is being pressed hard. She is doing a good deal of whistling to keep her courage up. In keeping with the policy of lying used to justify her creation of the war, she lies about, or keeps concealed the real conditions in her own country. The latest information given out by competent financial authorities, is to the effect that she is becoming hard up; that the problem of financing is becoming more difficult of solution every day. Her internal financial affairs are in no roseate condition. German currency is greatly depreciated. Leading journals have been forbidden to publish exchange figures, and extraordinary efforts are made to disguise the fact that there exists a premium on gold. A proclamation has been issued to prevent the purchase of gold for export. With money tight everything else shares the depression. Without money, munitions of war will be lacking, and without arms the soldiers that can be put into the field will be comparatively useless. To soldiers badly armed will be added soldiers badly fed; for with supplies from abroad practically shut off, the accumulated domestic supply will soon become exhausted. The difficulties of Germany are being intensified daily. She is losing ground in all directions. She is wasting men in a desperate attempt to stem the progress of the campaign of three of the most powerful nations in the world, and weakening her powers of resistance at every movement. Beginning the war as a triumphal progress she has been thrown on her defence. The Allies are becoming the aggressors with their powers of attack, being strengthened every day. Three of the greatest nations of the world have in one sense only fairly begun to show aggressive efficiency. While they will increase Germany will decrease. They have all plenty of money, and the ways for food supplies are open. Not only are the chances, but the certainties, against Germany. We begin the New Year with every prospect of continuous progress towards the goal of peace, a peace founded upon the humiliation of a power that has arrayed itself against the world of civilization and humanity and human freedom. Whether this accomplishment will make the year 1915 a happy New Year; the accomplishment will come. And it may be in the year 1915. As great an authority as Francis W. Hirst, editor of the London Economist, thinks that the food and financial factors will bring Germany to an appeal for terms of peace in a comparatively short time.

TORONTO'S MAYOR.

Toronto should take in her sign—"Intellectual Centre" of Ontario. If this great city votes as it prays, it must say the Lord's prayer backwards. Toronto is a great Tory city; and in its union of Church and State it has evilly travestied the worst traditions of the family compact. The electors have taken "Tommy" Church seriously. It is hoped that his election will not be a serious matter for the city; it is hoped that the ratepayers will not have to pay too high a price to the piper that furnishes music for the "dancing dervish" of the civic life of the city.

The action of the electors of Toronto in regard to the choice of a mayor should be a lesson to the electors of Peterborough in their choice of civic and school board representatives. It should bring a realization of the fact that the use of the vote is a serious matter. It should bring home the idea that, only one consideration should influence its employment—that of deciding upon the best men for the several positions sought. The relations of a candidate to the effective charge of his duties should be the ruling factor. His personality, his relation to this or that influence should not be allowed to count. Promise of good service should be the real test.

WOMEN IN CIVIC POLITICS.

Amidst Toronto's mayor voting folly on New Year's day, there is one bright spot—a lady was elected a member of the Board of Education—Dr. Caroline S. Brown. It may not be the best taste to make remarks about a lady's appearance, but a glance at the picture of Dr. Brown, printed in the Globe, showing an aggressive chin, giving point to a firm set jaw, indicates that the lady representative for the Fifth Ward won't be a cypher in the figuring out of the problems or educational administration. Gradually, the right of women to exercise an active influence in civic politics is being recognized, and why not, especially in educational matters? Women who bear and rear children and have the greater responsibility in regard to their mental and physical development, and character formation, must gain a knowledge amounting to intuition, that especially fits them for supervision of the educational processes by which the education of the child is accomplished. When a woman has good sense, she is much more sensible than a man. If such a woman makes up her mind to do the right thing as a member of a board of education, she is sure to succeed. Why shouldn't women have the franchise? If all the women in Toronto on Friday had had the vote they couldn't have abused the right as much as 6,000 male electors did.

KEEP THE CANADIAN DOLLAR AT HOME.

Keeping the Canadian dollar at home is very much a matter of the wholesale dealer who buys in carload lots.

No matter what retailers and individual customers may decide to do as a national self-interest campaign, the jobber is the man who very often controls the situation. The wholesale dealer has a wide-angle vision. He has customers far and wide; not in one province, but in many. His parish is often as large as that of the manufacturer. His business has a national scope. To the wholesaler the general welfare of Canada is of more direct importance than it is to the retailer or the individual.

Naturally this country looks to the wholesaler to help along the Made-in-Canada movement because it is going to be in his best interests to offer the retailer the goods his customers are demanding, and in his position of buying in carload lots he can do a great deal to help or hinder people in carrying out the Made-in-Canada sentiment.

The wholesaler who buys his goods from a foreign country is letting the reservoir leak without pumping into it. Every carload of goods bought outside of Canada means the value of a carload taken away from the purchasing power of the Canadian people which depends directly on the business done by Canadian factories quite as much as on the proceeds of Canadian firms and mines and fisheries.

We all realize the insanity of killing the goose that lays the golden egg. The golden egg in this case is the ability of the Canadian people to buy goods, and the ability of the Canadian people to buy goods, and the ability of the Canadian manufacturer to supply them, as well, if not better, as cheaply, if not more cheaply, than any other nation now competing for business.

THE NEW YEAR.

Upon the eve of the most trying experience which will come to us through the war—the season when the debt-paying power through the export of goods is at its ebb—there is reason for much courage and hopefulness. Financial and commercial Canada stood the shock of last July without flinching and without panic. At the end of five months we find ourselves becoming adjusted to conditions new in the world's history, reasonably proud of our part in the recent past and surer of the future. We have attained a relatively stable and confident outlook upon a new stage of our national life and with the conviction that whatever reverses the development of the country may sustain we will ultimately emerge the stronger for the ordeal.—Globe's Financial Service, 1914-1915.

HEWLETT IS SAFE.

Flight Commander Says He Is Sure He Hit a German Warship.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The experience of Flight Commander Francis Hewlett during the recent aerial raid on the German naval base at Cuxhaven are described in an interview with the aviator, transmitted to Reuter's Telegram Co. from Amsterdam. Commander Hewlett, who was believed to have lost his life until it was learned yesterday that he had been picked up by a steam trawler and landed at Muiden, Holland, says he believes that he hit a German warship with one of the bombs which he dropped. Describing his escape Commander Hewlett said:

"I was unable to find the British fleet. My motor was running hot and I was compelled to descend. I was picked up by a Dutch trawler, but destroyed my motor and sank the hydroplane before I boarded the trawler at 10 o'clock on Christmas morning. I stayed aboard the trawler six days during a terrible storm."

TURKS LOSE HEAVILY.

Russians Defeat Them In an Engagement In Transcaucasia.

PETROGRAD, Jan. 2.—Describing recent fighting in Transcaucasia, which the Turks appear to have invaded, the General Staff of the Russian army in the Caucasus, in a statement issued last night, says:—

"At dawn of Dec. 30 we bombarded the village of Verkhni, near Sarikamysch, which the Turks had defended obstinatey for three days. Afterwards our volunteers set fire to a house in an advanced position in the village, while two companies of a Caucasian regiment made a bayonet charge. In this fighting the Turks lost heavily in killed, among their dead being a general. We captured more than 20 officers and 1,900 soldiers.

"The conflict at Ardahan, Transcaucasia, continues."

NEW NOTE TO BRITAIN.

U. S. Officials Are Preparing a Second Message on Contraband.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—State Department officials who conduct the legal affairs of the Department are busily engaged in the preparation of the new communication to Great Britain on the subject of contraband. Also they are fortifying themselves for the American rejoinder to Sir Edward Grey's reply to the American note already forwarded, if the British answer shall still for further discussion. It is anticipated that it will.

The American note on contraband, it is said, will lead to discussion not only by Great Britain, but by France and Russia, as each of these nations has its own list of contraband and conditional contraband.

Emperor Francis Joseph Well.

GENEVA, Jan. 2.—(Via London.)—A Swiss diplomat who returned here yesterday from Vienna, where he saw Emperor Francis Joseph Christmast day, says the monarch looked physically well, but seemed sadder and more anxious than usual.

Four German spies were arrested Thursday at Delle, France, near the Swiss frontier. They were taken by train to Belfort for court-martial. It is said that compromising documents were found on the men.

Buffalo "News" Says Peterboro's Incinerator Is A Fine Asset

A letter in the Review of Thursday says "Alderman Duncan lauded an incinerator on the City which is practically worthless." In this connection an interesting item appeared in the Buffalo News and written by a special correspondent, which illustrates just one of the advantages this same incinerator has brought to this City. The item is as follows:

Peterborough, Dec. 28—(Special).—A civic incinerator's value as an aid to the Fire Department, has been amply demonstrated by the experience of this municipality during the past two years.

Last year's fire loss reached $17,690 for 150 fires, with the incinerator just opened and the work of garbage collection put into operation. This year there were only 120 fires for a loss of $10,000. In spite of the growth of the City the number of fires has diminished, and the loss is reduced almost fifty per cent.

Fire Chief Howard states that this condition is primarily due to the regulation of the garbage and the inspection by his department of premises to prevent the collection of combustible material, particularly in the mercantile district. This latter work was attempted before the incinerator was erected but was not a complete success. Then the City built a huge burner with a capacity for garbage from a city much larger than Peterborough, with the result that the authorities have to get all the refuse offered to keep the fires burning properly.

In this way and by the co-operation of Fire Chief Howard, cellars, alley-ways and yards are kept free of combustible material, which in former days invited fire and often was the cause of conflagrations. Peterborough is a good example of what an incinerator will do for the prevention of fires.

This reference speaks for itself, and indicates that the incinerator built while Ald Duncan was Chairman of the Property Committee, has been a decided asset to the Fire Department and, incidentally, has an influence in reducing the fire insurance rates in Peterborough.

TWO POLES ARRESTED.

They Are Charged With the Murder of Countryman In Toronto.

TORONTO, Jan. 2.—The murder mystery of Mount Pleasant Cemetery has apparently been cleared up. The dead Macedonian who was found with crushed skull half covered in snow, near the old Belt Line tracks, late Tuesday night, has been identified as Bogoira Trendo, 24, laborer, married, 121 Niagara street. Under arrest are two Russian Poles: John Zioiko, 23, 693 West Richmond street, and Thomas Scichocki, 21, 111 Elizabeth street. They will face a charge of murder in the police court this morning. The former is rumored to have made a statement tantamount to a confession, in which he admits having induced the victim to go out with him and Scichocki, having seen Scichocki striking the blows that killed Trendo, and having helped hide the body.

The alleged theft of a shovel, and Zioiko's dismissal, the alleged tatling of Trendo and rumors of the size of his savings—which had accumulated in order to bring his bride from his home in Zeglova, Macedonia—are said to have been the beginnings of the affair.

IF KIDNEYS ACT BAD TAKE SALTS

Says Backache is Sign You Have Been Eating Too Much Meat

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about two ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

A French scientist has succeeded in freezing water under pressure into ice so heavy that it will not float.

War News Continued!

SAYS BRITISH FINANCIAL SHIFTS HARMED AMERICA

Mr. Moreon Frewen, in a letter to the Morning Post, says:

"I entirely sympathise with the American opinion that our contemptible financial shifts have made their position well night intolerable. Through the moratorium and because we failed to suspend the bank charter act our government endeavoured to create an artificial vacuum to collect American gold, a hemorrhage which over there would lead up to finacial collaspse."

Mr. Frewen proceeds: "It is in our own interest most important to foster America's exports to ourselves and neutral nations. Only by these exports can she pay us what she owes. If we force her to pay in gold instead of goods we just torpedo her finance, and that is an effect of the moratorium. It is on the strength and the security of American finance that we must rely in the anxious days now at hand."

PARIS, January 2. — Meagre reports from the battle front to-day tell of renewed German drives against the French in the Argonne region and between the Moselle and the Meuse. Thousands of reinforcements have been brought up forcing a withdrawal in Argonne, where the Germans are being strongly pressed; despite their best efforts they have been unable to make any distinct gains, according to the latest reports.

PARIS, January 2. — The announcement of the loss of the British battleship Formidable was made here to-day. The reports indicated that she was torpedoed by a German submarine while off the main British naval base of Portsmouth, 18 miles south-east of Southampton. Survivors of the Formidable describe their escape as miraculous. So soon as the vessel was struck they realized that it was doomed. A signal was immediately given to launch the life boats and launches, but the sea was so high at the time that the few on board were badly smashed as they were put over the side. One cutter alone floated, the survivors say.

MILITARY DECORATIONS

OTTAWA, January 2. — In the list of recipients of the new military cross decoration appears the names of two Canadians: Second Lieutenant Chas. Shergold, of the Royal Canadian Engineers, is a Toronto soldier. He was recently promoted from non-commissined rank to a second lieutenancy, and was mentioned in General Sir John French's despatches for "coolness and bravery under fire." Captain E. J. W. Spread, of the North Lancashire Regiment, is a graduate of the Upper Canada College, and the Royal Military College, Kingston. He was promoted to his present rank after being mentioned in despatches. On September 17 he was reported as missing but was later said to be wounded, and in a French hospital. He also wears the Carnegie medal for rescuing 29 women and children in the Troquois Theatre fire, Chicago, in 1904. The Military Cross ranks next to the Victoria Cross.

MISSION A FAILURE.

Count von Buelow Has Not Been Able To Influence Italy.

PARIS, Jan. 2. — According to a special correspondent of The Temps, who has just returned from Italy, Count von Buelow's mission at Rome has failed. "It is untrue," says The Temps, "that Von Buelow offered Italy any concrete compensation for intervention in Germany's favor, or, at least, disarmed neutrality. He only made vague promises to induce the Italian Government to show a less friendly attitude to Britain, as Britain is the sole enemy of Germany.' His mission was principally to convince Italy that her interests should be with Germany, as once Britain was ousted from the Mediterranean Italy might become a large Empire."

The Temps adds that the Kaiser sent Von Buelow to Italy charged with such a difficult mission with only a vague hope of success. The Emperor's idea was to exploit Von Buelow's popularity in Rome in case it might lead to the actual benefit of Germany, or, should he fail, to let Von Buelow bear the whole responsibility.

New Year Quiet In Berlin.

BERLIN, Jan. 2.—(Via London.)—Berlin at the passing of the old year showed strikingly for the first time since the outbreak of the war that life of the city is not proceeding in its normal channels. The customary celebrations to welcome the advent of the New Year were almost entirely lacking.

No horns were blown and no bells were rung nor could any other noise-making contrivance be heard.

Re-Elect

ALDERMAN

C. WALTER GREEN

FOR 1915

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE WEST WARD

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I have had the honour of being your representative in the City Council during the past two years. If my actions have been such as to meet with your approval, I will be pleased to have your endorsement of the same by re-electing me for 1915.

Thanking you for the confidence you have already reposed in me and wishing one and all the Compliments of the Season,

I am,

Your Obedient Servant,

C. WALTER GREEN

Candidate in North Ward for Alderman

To the Ratepayers:

Ladies and Gentlemen, — Having been nominated as a candidate for a seat in the Council for Ward No. 4, I would solicit your vote and influence in my behalf. Having had five years experience in the Council, and having been Chairman of the Power and Property Committees, I feel that I could be of benefit to the ratepayers.

When I left the council five years ago the rate was 19¾ mills and now it is 26 mills, an increase of 6 1-2 mills.

I am in favour of employing our own citizens on all City work, and I am not in favour of letting contracts of City work to outsiders. I believe in paying our own people a good, fair wage. I think the affairs of the City could be managed in a more economical manner than they have been. Our times are becoming burdensome, and it behoves every member of the Council to economize and to get the best value for the money expended, and, if elected, I will use my very best efforts to serve the ratepayers to the best of my ability and will be as careful of the ratepayers' interests as I would be of my own.

Wishing you all a prosperous and happy New Year.

Yours truly,

A. A. McINTYRE

To The Electors Of North Monaghan.

Ladies and Gentleman,— You know that the present year has been the most critical in the history of our country. Financial conditions have never been like the present. In spite of the stringency we show a balance of $1,806.42 over the townships liabilities, showing our finances in good condition.

I am soliciting your support again for Reeve, feeling confident that my efforts in your behalf have been appreciated. We have guided the township through a most strenuous year, where other municipalities are in difficulty.

If elected, I will continue to give North Monaghan my most careful attention, and at the same time provide for the progress of our township.

Wishing you all a Happy New Year, I am,

Yours sincerely,

W. G. HOWDEN

To The Electors Of The Township Of Smith

Ladies and Gentlemen,— Having been honoured with the nomination for Deputy-reeve of the Township of Smith, I have accepted the nomination and respectfully solicit your vote and influence.

The ratepayers have always considered it wise to have a representative in each district of the Township, and at present three of the districts will be represented, by the election by acclamation of three councillors; but Bridgenorth and the Communication Road, which is one of the leading roads to the City, will not be represented unless you endorse this same policy and elect me your Deputy-reeve.

Hoping that my three years' service in the Council has met with your approval, and wishing one and all a Happy New Years, I remain,

Your obedient servant,

J. A. JOBE

Board of Education

THE Ratepayers are entitled to know why the Board of Education, which had nearly $100,000.00 to spend in 1914 and had $85,000.00 raised for it to pay for the East and West Ward Schools, has, to-day, $17,000.00 Overdraft in its bank account. Whose mistake of judgment this was that this indebtedness is created is something which should be explained.

A Vote for G. N. Gordon will probably bring this to light.

WM. LANGFORD, Jr.

FOR ALDERMAN NORTH WARD

To the Electors of the North Ward:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—Having been nominated for re-election as Alderman, I respectfully solicit your vote and influence in my behalf. The past two years has given me a knowledge of the city's affairs and has placed me in touch with present conditions. I have endeavoured while your representative in Council to exercise care in the expenditure of the city's money, recognizing that present conditions call for careful management, and if re-elected will continue this policy in the future. I have lived in the city all my life and any interests I have are here, consequently I have a deep interest in the progress, improvement and economical management of the city's affairs.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, I remain,

Yours respectfully,

WM. LANGFORD, Jr.

Card to Electors

LADIES and Gentlemen,—Having been nominated and having accepted the candidature for election on the Board of Education, I hereby solicit your votes and support. I think I recognize the importance of the interests this Board has to deal with. If your support results in my election, I shall make it my business to give, to the best of my ability and judgment, the service that will insure the ratepayers the fullest possible advantages from the large expenditure made for purposes of popular education.

If elected I pledge my best efforts to promote, in educational matters, what I wish to all—a happy and prosperous New Year.

Yours faithfully,

Roland Denne

Card to the Electors

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—

I believe I deserve your confidence and votes in the Mayoralty contest, because—

I have the time to give civic matters every attention. I am not tied down to any position.

I have had the necessary experience in the conduct of civic business.

I am fully acquainted with the various problems that have to be dealt with.

I have been successful in my private business and believe the same qualities would guide me as your representative.

I have no loud-sounding platform, but will give to every question a full measure of attention.

I know Peterborough from end to end and I am deeply interested in its progress.

If elected I will not misuse the trust you would place in me.

Wishing you a Happy New Year.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Service, Not Vain Glory, Alderman Green's Record

He Generously Offers Free Sites For Encouraging New Industries and Assists the City in Procuring Valuable New Gravel Lands

Peterborough wants more public-spirited men like Alderman G. Walter Green. He is a good type of citizen, a man of sterling integrity, with considerable municipal experience, and the electors have another opportunity of securing his services for another term.

Peterborough also wants all the assistance it can secure towards the encouragement of new local industries. Alderman Green is one man who has devoted attention to the large issues of the City, such as the attraction of new industries to Peterborough. He has not only brought the Council into touch with new manufactories looking for locations, but has generously offered to give free sites to new industries that would not conflict with any other already established in our midst.

Alderman Green has no other motive for his generous attitude in this respect than the [illegible] of the City's interests. He has faith in Peterborough's future, and being a large manufacturer himself, knows what helps and will help him also.

Alderman Green is not in the field for vainglory, but for service, and this is the true spirit of public service when a man is willing to risk his own personal means to advance the public weal.

Alderman Green's dealings with the questions that have been settled in the past will best define his attitude towards the questions that remain to be settled in the future.

Some months ago the Rexall Drug Co. were looking for a new location to manufacture their special lines of goods. When they approached our Council with their proposition, it was discovered that the City could not legally give any assistance to a concern that was already doing business in Ontario. In order to get over this difficulty Alderman Green offered a free site to the Company, and agreed to become one of a syndicate who would put up the necessary buildings in order to secure this industry. The Company, however, finally decided to locate in Ottawa as being more central for their Maratime business. But Ald. Green's offer of free sites still holds good to Peterborough.

A short time ago, when it was found that new gravel pits close to the Corporation limits were likely to be lost to the City, Alderman Green personally secured the land, and allowed it to be turned over to the City without any one making a single dollar on the turn over. Mr. Green would be willing to give double the purchase money to secure these lands to-day, if they were still on the market.

When Mr. Green was asked as to the tax rate he added: "To raise the tax rate in a time of depression should be entirely out of the question. Peterborough can afford to wait a while before improvements that will increase the debt of the City are undertaken. One year of retrenchment won't hurt; and I am convinced that is a policy any sane man would adopt under present circumstances."

CHILDREN HAVE BEEN BENEFITTED

By The War—Superintendent Kelso Says Parents Are Attending Better To Offspring

That since the outbreak of war parents in Ontario have attended more to the welfare of their children is the report of Mr. J. J. Kelso, superintendent of the Provincial Department of Neglected and Dependent Children. Mr. Kelso says that it is very noticeable that the children of the province are looked after in a much better manner than before Britain went to war. The reason for this is that parents are not wasting their money on drink to the same extent as formerly and the necessities which the children were denied are now provided with the money at one time squandered.

A great many children have become wards of the Children's Aid Societies within the past few months. Mr. Kelso does not think that the circumstances in which they were found was due to neglect on the part of parents. Many of the children were orphans.

"The unemployed seem to be looking after their children despite the lack of funds," said Mr Kelso. "I do not approve of the idea of giving meals to children, because if they get fed outside of their homes I'm afraid that there'll be a tendency to allow them to go without food at home It is much better to assist the parents and in that way help the children."

Oil King Aids Belgians.

CHICAGO, Jan. 2.—The Rockefeller Foundation has bought 6,000,000 bushels of wheat in the Chicago market within the last month for the aid of the inhabitants of Belgium, it was announced here yesterday. This mark was reached when 475,000 bushels of Chicago-owned grain was sold from Portland, Ore., for immediate shipment. Most of it brought $1.30 a bushel.

The grain will be milled in Belgium in order to give employment and to provide the bran and chaff for live stock food.

ELECTORS OF THE WEST WARD

IF you wanted a man for a position of trust, would you select an untried man, or would you consider it wisdom to select a tried and trusted man, who has left a record of useful service? If so, Re-elect, G. Walter Green as your Alderman for another term.

EDGAR GROSE WAS COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

"Yes, quite a number."

"Had O'Brien been in the house much that day?"

"I don't remember having seen him."

"Would he have to pass the office to get into the bar?"

"Yes."

"Did anyone call your attention to this scuffle before you went there?"

"No, I just happened to hear the scuffling of feet."

"Were there no words spoken?"

"No, I didn't hear anything at all."

"Were there many people in the hall besides these two?"

"Yes, a few."

Witness was cross-examined by Mr. Gordon.

"William O'Brien was quite a stout man wasn't he?"

"Yes."

"Weighing around 180 pounds would you say?"

"I guess he would weigh 165 or 180 pounds."

"What kind of a collar was he wearing Mr. Graham?"

"A linen collar and a four-in-hand tie."

"You fore them open to give him air?"

"Yes."

"Had they been disturbed before you touched them?"

"No."

"Did Grose object when you separated him from O'Brien and put him into the room?"

"No."

"Did he resist?" asked the Magistrate.

"No."

When witness separated the men Grose said: "He had it in for me?"

"When you took hold of Grose to separate the men did O'Brien follow?"

"I couldn't say. I broke the grip."

"When you saw them they were holding each other apparently by the arms?"

"Yes."

Medical Testimony.

Dr. Gallivan was the next witness. "Do you remember the night of the 24th of December?"

"I do."

"You got a telephone message I understand?"

"Yes."

"To go to the White House?"

"Yes."

"What time was that?"

"About 10:30 o'clock."

"Did you go at once?"

"Yes. I found the deceased, William O'Brien, lying on the floor of the kitchen of the hotel. He was dead."

"Did you make an examination that night?"

"I did."

"Were there any means to restore him used while you were there?"

"Artificial respiration and the assistance of the pulmotor."

"Was there any result?"

"No result."

"I understand you made a post mortem examination in company wth Dr. Eastwood?"

"I did."

"When was that made?"

"On the following afternoon about 16 hours after death."

"You made a written report I believe for the coroner?"

"Yes."

The report was put in as evidence.

"What did you find?"

"That the junction of the spinal chord with the brain, disclosed the hemmorhage. Also round the thyroid gland of the neck very greatly enlarged. The upper two-thirds of the pleura of the left lung, adhered to the covering of the heart. It was also adhering to the inner lining of the chest cavity. We discovered also the present of the thymus gland. There were no signs of external violence."

"From the post mortem examination what do you find was the cause of death?"

"A hemmorhage at the base om the brain, throwing out of action the centre for reapiration and heart. This would cause death in a very few seconds—almost instantaneously."

"What would likely cause it?"

"Undue force spent at that particular point. Either external or internal force could produce it."

"In the event of death being practically instantaneous, would there be any discolouration?"

"No."

"Would the adhesions of the lungs have anything to do with the death?"

"No."

To Mr. Gordon Dr. Gallivan said that if a man were jammed against a wall it would cause the rupture of the blood vessel. The injury would not be caused by a man falling against a wall.

Dr. J. H. Eastwood, who with Dr. Gallivan conducted the post mortem examination, corroborated Dr. Gallivan's evidence.

Grose's Apprehension.

Sergeant Kidd was the next witness. He said that at 8:10 p.m on Christmas evening the prisoner came into the Police Station and said: "I believe you are looking for me." The witness took Grose into the muster room and charged him with the murder of O'Brien. He cautioned Grose that anything he might say might be used in evidence against him. He was sober and said: "I didn't think it would be murder I'd be charged with. I'll tell you how it happened. I was in a side room having a drink. I went out into the passageway. O'Brien was there and said something. At the some time he raised either his knee or his foot. I can't tell just which it was now, and made as if to strike me. I put up my hands to defend myself and struck him twice, but you could hardly call it striking. It was more of a push, as I never shut my fist. Mr. Graham then came and separated us and I left the hotel." Sergeant Brown was there during the time the latter part of the statement was made.

Grose was committed for trial.

Germans Drew Six Army Corps From Eastern Front

Enemy Cut Off Between Allies and the Sea at Nieuport End of Western Battle Line—Disappearance of Quarter of a Million Men From Poland Gives Rise to Conjectures Among Russians

LONDON, Jan. 1. — The Daily Telegraph correspondent at Petrograd in a cable says: A semi-official communication states that Baligrod was taken by storm late on the evening of the 29th. Entire companies of the Austrian troops were destroyed with the bayonet.

During assaults between the 21st and the 29th the Russians captured in the Lisko zone one regimental commander, 86 other officers, 8,500 men and ten machine-guns. The Austrians have lost so heavily that in several regiments only fifty men remain.

During the repulse of sorties from Przemysl the Russians occupied some of the hills around the fortress. The correspondent of Utro Russi says that the troops are being continually drawn tighter round the fortress. Deserters state that provisions are running short. The slackening of artillery fire shows that ammunition is also being carefully husbanded.

The garrison is suffering much through lack of warm clothing and fuel. Among the prisoners are many who have lost legs and arms through frostbite.

On the return from fruitless sorties the garrison devasted the country, firing villages and massacring many of the inhabitants. Thousands of half-clad and half-starving peasants, deprived of the means of subsistence, are coming into the Russian lines every day. The number of deserters from the forts is increasing. They come through to the Russian postions hungry, exhausted and half-frozen. According to their stories, the officers of the garrison now wink at desertion, especially if committed by the weak and sickly.

German Losses 200,000.

It is stated here that six German corps (about 40,000 men) have suddenly disappeared from this front, and speculation is rife as to whether they have been diverted for a concentrated movement on the Russian left or have been withdrawn for operations in the west. The Russians are hoping that pressure in France and Belgium is the cause of the disappearance of these troops, and that the German tide here was reached its highwater mark. The German losses since their advance began are certainly not fewer than 220,000, while many reports place them at a much higher figure.

North of the Vistula, in the vicinity of Plock, the Russians are displaying great activity, and a rumour is circulating in military circles that they are crossing the river, thus actively threatening the German line of communication between Thorn and Lowicz. It is possible the six corps already mentioned have been withdrawn to protect this line, and if this is true we may expect a temporary lull in the definite advance on the Bzura line.

Fall of Cracow in Sight.

Military authorities here believe that as soon as the German advance on Warsaw definitely fails the fall of Cracow will be merely a matter of weeks. It is reported here that the Russians in Galicia are even now resuming their advance on Cracow. Austrian prisoners are being captured almost daily, and it is believed that if the German aggressive in Poland is suspended it will so weaken the morale of the Austrians, already badly impaired, that the capture of Cracow will not be nearly so difficult as it would have been at an earlier date.

Activity in Carpathians.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 1.—(C. P. Despatch.)—The following official communication from Vienna was received here this evening:

"Fighting in the Carpathians and in Bukowina continues. In both regions the Russians developed great activity, but the situation is unchanged.

"The enemy's attacks, both day and night, at the River Biala and south of Tarnoy (both in Galacia) have been repulsed, our troops inflicting heavy losses and taking 2,000 prisoners and six machine-guns.

"North of the Vistula fog hinders the operations, but slight progress has been made there.

"In the southern war tehatre nothing has happened."

Gallant Russians Decorated.

PETROGRAD, Jan. 2. — Emperor Nicholas visited the army front on Thursday. At the quarters of the commander-in-chief he received reports concerning the war operations. Afterwards he received the line of troops, distributing insignia of honor among the soldiers who had distinguished themselves the most in the fighting and thanking the various units of the army for their service in the war.

After having received the report of Gen. Ruzsky, commanding the army of the Northwest, the Emperor departed from the army front.

THE BELGIAN WAR PICTURES

It was a large and satisfied audience that witnessed the presentation of the war pictures at the Grand Opera House, yesterday The pictures are the best of their kind and were secured with the sanction of the Belgian Government, upon condition that one-half of the proceeds would be turned over to the Belgian Red Cross Fund. Many of the pictures were obtained under fire and the photographer's escape from death is nothing short of miraculous.

Peterboro's Death Rate For The Year 1914 Much Lower Than Previous Year

Grim Reaper Pays Fourteen Visits Less—Bachelor Casualties Less Numerous—Two Hundred and Ten Couples Took the Oath of Matrimonial Allegiance —The Stork Had a Busy Year—One of a Family of Twelve

Births marriages and deaths, or the three distinctive epochs of life, are represented in the vital statistics that record respective activity of the stork, cupid and the elderly gentleman with the scythe. Now that Father Time has turned over a new leaf we are constrained to look back over the record for 1914 that has left its imprint upon the sands of time. The statistics given below are confined to Peterborough alone and do not include the surrounding suburbs, such as Browntown, which in itself represents a community of nearly two thousand people. The record of human progress from the cradle to the grave, is kept at the City Hall.

Birth Rate Higher.

A perusual of this record reveals the fact that the stork paid twenty-eight more visits during the year just closed than in the previous year. A total of five hundred and ten births were recorded. Among the list of births registered is one who lays claim to the distinction of being the twelfth member of the family. The father of this family has enlisted with the Canadian expeditionary force and is on his way to the front to assist in the protection of the Empire that guarantees to protect his little ones.

Bachelor Casualties.

That scantily clad individual, commonly known as Dan Cupid, fell short of his previous year's record to the tune of thirty-nine. A total of two hundred and ten couples were started on a matrimonial career during the year 1914 as compared with two hundred and forty-nine for 1913. It will be seen by the statistics that the balmy month of June is the premier season for marriages, although this year's figures fell off nearly one-half. There were the same number of marriages in December, 1914, as in the corresponding month of 1913.

Death Rate Lower.

It is gratifying to note that the death rate for the year was lower. The total number of deaths during the year was two hundred and seventy-eight as compared with two hundred and ninety-two for the previous year. This represents a difference of fourteen. Peterborough has been fortunate in that it can show a clean bill of health in so far as epidemics and other contingencies that exact toll in the form of human life, are concerned. A mild epidemic of diphtheria broke out a short time ago, but it was effectively eradicated with only one or two deaths to its credit.

The Figures.

The vital statistics for the year are as follows:

Would Tax Those Not Serving.

SURPRISE IN THE ONTARIO CIVIC ELECTIONS

Controller Church Was Elected Mayor of Toronto by a Majority of 6,468—Controller James Simpson Defeated

STEVENSON ELECTED

TORONTO, Jan. 2. — Toronto was treated to the biggest surprise in many years yesterday when Controller Church was elected mayor by 6,468 majority over Controller J. O. McCarthy.

The surprises in the contest for the Board of Control are the election of ex-Controller Foster, and the defeat of Controller James Simpson. The election of Controller John O'Neill at the head of the list was generally conceded during the day; his poll of 20,791 is the biggest vote ever given a controller in the city of Toronto.

Walters Wins In Hamilton.

HAMILTON, Jan. 2.—Ald. Chester S. Walters was elected mayor yesterday, defeating Controller Gardner by 1,603 majority. Although Ald. Walters had but one year's experience in municipal affairs he made a name for himself by the civic inquiry in which considerable dishonesty and graft was shown. Controllers Morris, Cooper and Jutten were all re-elected to the Board of Control, the new man being Ald. Robson, who was chairman of the Civic Investigating Committee.

Liquor license reduction was defeated.

Stevenson In London.

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 2.—Dr. H. A. Stevenson was elected mayor of London yesterday by a splendid majority.

While several things contributed to the mayoralty change, there is no doubt that the issue raised in connection with the agitation against Mr. H. J. Glaubitz as general manager of the Public Utilities on account of his nationality was the chief factor.

Dr. Hett Berlin's Mayor.

BERLIN, Ont., Jan. 2.—The surprise in the municipal elections of this city was experienced here last night, when Dr. J. E. Hett defeated Mr. A. L. Breithaupt, a well-known manufacturer, by a majority of 748, the successful candidate securing 1,699 votes against his opponent's 951.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—Capt. Leycester Ingles, chaplain of the Queen's Own Rifles of Toronto, who was attached to Bulford Hospital, died Thursday night at Netherawon Hospital. He was taken ill over a week ago and on examination was found to have contracted cerebro-spinal meningitis, to which disease he succumbed.

Capt. Inglis, who is a son of Ven. Archdeacon Ingles, of Toronto diocese, was born in 1886 at Toronto, was educated in the Parkdale Public School, at Trinity College School, Port Hope, also at Toronto Church School, then going to Trinity College. After his graduation he was Master for two years at Trinity College School. Then he took a three-years' divinity course in the General Theological Seminary, New York. Ordained deacon in 1913, he was at Coldwater for a few months, going in September to be curate at St. George's Church, Toronto, assisting Rev. R. J. Moore. COMMENT ON THE MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Dr. Morrison Makes Reply To G. N. Gordon's Statement

Sir,—In you issue of Thursday last, Mr. G. N. Gordon addresses you in a letter setting forth how, in his opinion, the Board of Education should conduct its affairs, but primarily the letter appears to be a laborious attempt to square away the general opinion that he became identified with the City Council when a plum called the City Solicitorship, was one of the possibilities.

Mr. Gordon makes some extraordinary statements which, while only savouring of venom, leaves a doubt as to whether this luminary of business acumen is as qualified to introduce "Business Methods" and "practice economy," which according to him have been an unknown quantity in the Board's operations for some time.

With a happy disregard of that care in making a statement, found in certain politicians, Mr. Gordon says that our school rate of 9.75 mills on the dollar is "almost the highest of any of the city municipalities in the province." What are the facts, sir? From the Provincial Blue Book we find the average yearly cost per city pupil attending the collegiates in the province is $60.54; Peterborough's cost $50.00; average yearly cost per city pupil attending public schools in the province, $37.46, Peterborough's cost $27.51. This is sufficient to show that Peterborough with its unexcelled school equipment, is being economically run.

The overdraft referred to was altogether in purchasing sites, completing, furnishing, etc., of the two new schools, and Mr. Gordon can satisfy himself of the value received for every dollar spent on these schools by inquiring from any reputable contractor, when he will learn that these schools were built at a very low figure and at small profit to the contractors. Mr. Gordon takes exception to the Board holding its meetings in the Board room of the Toronto Savings & Loan Company; this has been discussed more than once in the Board, and if they cared to go to the expense of office and vault accommodation, which for the purpose would be considerable, meetings could be held in the Collegiate building. That the Loan Company has accorded these privileges free for years is a matter for gratitude rather than objection, when the convenience of the location is considered.

The Press is always present at the meetings of the Board and reports the proceedings fully, together with all reports of committee meetings, and the public are welcome and have a perfect right to attend, at these meetings, but the Board meets for business, not gallery play.

Mr. Gordon objects to what he calls "expensive deputations" going out of the town at the peoples' expense. Quite right, Mr. Gordon. During 1914 a deputation of three or four members of the Board attended the Provincial Convention at Toronto for two or three days at a cost of $40.00 and later the chairman of the Industrial Classes attended the meeting of the Technical Institute, giving his time, etc., at the enormous cost of $6.00, a total for the year of $56.00.

In conclusion Mr. Editor let me say, I have been on the Board for nine years, the last two years as chairman, and am now retiring from its ranks. During that time I have applied myself to and have had intimate knowledge of its workings and I can honestly say that the men serving the city on the Board are above availing themselves of the petty advantages of which Mr. Gordon's letter speaks. All supplies, etc., are bought by tender, and I have yet to learn of any member profiting by his being a member of the Board. I have found no "rings to unleash," but have found that the men put the affairs of the school before self and by their business ability have saved the ratepayers thousands of dollars and built up an educational system that the people are proud of, and the equal of any in the province.

Yours sincerely,
M. A. Morrison,
Chairman of Board of Education.

MAYOR BULLER'S REPLY TO A SIMPLE QUESTION

The following communication was received in the Examiner's noon mail:

Would the Examiner kindly let the voters of Peterborough know whether the present Mayor, Mr. Buller, is a member of the Protestant Federation or not.

Sincerely,
Citizen and Voter.

To the Examiner, Mayor Buller gave before going to press, the following statement:

"Tell the man who asks the question to see me and I will give him my answer."

In the meantime, when it learned that Mayor Buller could not be obtained at his home or committee rooms, the Examiner called Mr. Dawson Kennedy for an informative reply. Mr. Kennedy, who was president of the Federation during 1913, said: "Mayor Buller is a member. He joined about a year ago, I think. You can safely say he is a member."

WOMAN REFERS TO MAYOR'S BACKDOWN IN WOMAN'S COUNCIL

Dear Mr. Editor,—I trust the electors will not forget the exhibition Mayor Buller gave just a year ago when he broke his election promises on the police woman question. Before the elections he came out with a big programme on the eve of the elections and among quite a number of "planks" was his proposal to meet the wishes of the Women's Council and appoint a police woman. Only a few days later he was called to stand and deliver. At the first meeting of the Police Commissioners he went directly opposite to what he had "planked." Just because Judge Huycke was against it the Mayor suddenly lost his sympathy for the idea and stated that if any girls were being followed they could run into a neighbour's house. That indicates the conception of a village mind. His platform was a joke around the city within a week after his election, and even the clergy referred to his sudden backdown. It seems to me that this action of his characterizes his whole year. He either had investigated the merits of a police woman as an official or he had not. If he had, then his promise must have been based on conviction, but his word was worthless, or his determination or will power was simply that of a weakling. If he had not considered the question previous to the election, he had no idea of his position when he included it as a platform plank. The fact is, he was vote catching. If he had only kept quiet in the first place, but he promised the women, and with splendid chivalry followed Judge Huycke without attempting to think out the merits of the question. Evidently Mr. Buller says something on any occasion, whether he knows what he is talking about or not. Well, it tricked us one, but it will not catch us all the second time.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor,
A Mere Woman.

THIS WRITER BELIEVES THE GORDON CHARGES

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In the midst of a chorus of voices calling for economy I was pleased to hear the voice of the Editor of the Review calling for efficacy in expenditure as the truest economy.

This is the proper watchword for a progressive community in its civic affairs, and I would like to be sure that it has the proper weight with our Board of Education, and it seems to me that the election of the right members to this body is of more vital import to this City at the present than is the election of the City Council, for the latter body can be, and has been more or less closely watched by the public.

Certain actions of the Board this Autumn led me to inquire somewhat closely into its constitution, methods and ideals.

The first thing which struck me was the dense ignorance of the man in the street as to these matters; few knew where the Board met, and fewer still, the dates of meeting, while to find out anything of the methods and ideals of the Board required much painstaking research. As to the result of my quest, I found that so many counts of Mr. Gordon's indictment are, to my personal knowledge, correct, that I am quite prepared to believe them all.

One of your correspondents says things have been going "too smoothly." Correct. The Board, in its own estimation, is now like the German Government, a sort of ethereal entity above the common herd, and which regards criticism as a sort of "lese Majesty," only fit to be heard when directed against more vulgar bodies like the City Council. We had thought that sort of thing had disappeared from British institutions in Ontario with the Family Compact, but here we have a small "Business Family Compact", with the same inevitable tendencies, and, like the original compact, composed of men, in other respects, admirable citizens.

Now I have to others, who are better qualified, the task of criticising the [illegible] of this matter. I am the father of a family, and it seems to me that the question of education provided for my children is of more vital importance than finances can possibly be.

In the [illegible] of the Board to the [illegible] are such as to provide the best teaching ability in the persons of teachers of the highest possible [illegible], and the teachers are encouraged to give of the best they have, knowing the Board are enthusiastic behind them, then I would overlook a reasonable amount of financial inexpertness. Has the Board always been careful to retain teachers of the highest character? I could quite refer to the dismissal of Miss Weir to answer that question to the negative. It is universally acknowledged that the Peterborough Collegiate Institute never had a teacher of equally varied [illegible] in the school [illegible]. What any effect made for [illegible] her services? On the contrary, a trivial affair in school upon as a pretext, and the proceedings towards her dismissal carried on behind closed doors, with the public rigidly excluded. Her statement of the case—the correctness of which has never been, and cannot be gainsaid—appearing later in the press, amounts to this: a conscientious teacher manoeuvred into a position where quiescence meant abandoning [illegible] of the basic principles of a life teacher's whole work. To her honour, she did not lower her colours but nailed them to the mast.

Here be "Star Chamber" methods with a vengeance. Was it much to be wondered at when, later in my investigations, I got several hints that it was unwise for teachers to discuss things in the presence of certain other teachers, lest certain members of the Board (I presume the same mentioned by Mr. Gordon as a clique) hear of matters discussed, with corresponding [illegible].

Space forbids mention of many other things I discovered, but suffice it to say, that the deeper I probed the more my nostrils were offended.

Mr. Editor, do we live in a British Dominion, or have we inadvertently drifted educationally into the land of Kultur, with paternal government "less Majesty," spy systems, and all the trimmings? How can teachers do the work of which they are capable under conditions which are the negation of the highest principles of their noble profession? Can I remain quietly at home, or at work on Monday, or mark my ballot for the old representatives, and thus consent to the continued bedevilment of matters educational by the Board as at present constituted? Can I consent to have the stream of education flowing round my family, fouled at its source by those appointed to protect its purity? A thousand times—No! I vote for the new men in the field, and I will cheerfully sacrifice a day's pay if I can help them get out their vote.

I remain,
Yours sincerely,
Peter Families.

SAYS MAYOR BULLER IS ATTEMPTING TO "RIDE TWO HORSES"

Dear Editor,—Mayor Buller has me in a quandary. Some of my friends tell me that His Worship is not a member of the Protestant Benevolent Federation, and that some of the Mayor's workers circulated this statement. On the other hand, others have told me he is a member, and his name is even on the lease for the Association's new premises. We know George Duncan is a member, but he is not trying to work any double game. His membership does not mean that he will not give all the citizens a square deal, but I have deep suspicions about the Mayor's tactics. He does not seem to be sincere in his membership, if he is a member of the Federation, and that means sincerity to no others. Give me the man who has the courage of his convictions—Duncan. But I am at a loss to understand the Mayor's double game. He will not get far trying to ride two horses.

Yours truly,
Perplexed Elector.

Here is a Boost For Ald. Green

To the Editor,—

Dear Sir,—I noticed a few remarks in the Examiner a few days ago in regard to Mr. G. W. Green. I don't know anything about Mr. Green being the first man to cut the moulders' wages, etc., but I do know if any of our west end people have sickness or trouble in their homes Mr. Green is one of the first ones to offer his kind help, both with his employees and others. I know of more than one case Mr. Green opened his pocket book too. I myself for one am grateful to both Mr. and Mrs. Green for their kindness to me in my long illness a year ago. What Mr. Green does we don't read about in our papers for the next week. I think if we had a few more men like him in our council we would be O.K. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your valuable space, I am, your very truly,
R. POWELL.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—As a ratepayer I want to say that if George N. Gordon can back up his charges when he gets into the School Board, as he surely will, the old Board will have to get out of public life, and I won't envy them their private life. But if George N. can't prove his charges, he goes out like a decayed candle. [illegible] that, George. Remember [illegible] Mayor.

Elector.

"Be Sure You're Right, Then Go Ahead"

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,— Fair-minded ratepayers will not expect me to take much notice of the anonymous scribbler who signed himself "West-Ender" in your Thursday's issue. A man who is afraid to sign his name to his statements, and has to hide his identity is not entitled to much notice—certainly is not gifted with much of that "fair play" which he professes so much to admire. When a man talks in an unknown tongue we are apt to place little weight in what he says.

Let me just suggest, however, that if any ratepayer wants to take the trouble to ascertain for himself who originated the idea of the short term debentures for carrying on our public work and keeping our workmen employed, all he has to do is to verify the same by calling on the City Clerk, who will produce the minutes of the meeting of the Board of Works at which this matter was brought up.

What "West-Ender" says the Mayor did, and what the City Solicitor did, regarding the matter, after I had made the suggestion is quite true. They simply carried out and legalised what I had proposed, as it was their official duty to do.

Had "West-Ender" asked any union moulder, he would have learned that the G. Walter Green Co.'s foundry is a "union" shop paying the union scale of wages and sometimes more. Our men could tell him that there have been occasions when we had been so pressed with work that our men were paid higher wages than the union scale called for in order to rush the work out, and that when the rush was over they had gone back again to the union scale. Was that cutting the labourer's wages? In the Council, too, I took the position that the city could not have a uniform scale of wages for its labourers, because we had to pay a higher scale to some than to others, and that ability and productivity ought to be the test. Was that cutting the labourer's wages?

I would advise "West-Ender" to put himself right with the records next time he rushes into print; and then, when he is "sure he is right, to go ahead," like a man, not like an ostrich.

Yours truly,
G. Walter Green.

THE POSTMEN ARE APPRECIATIVE

In reference to a letter which appeared in Wednesday's issue of the Examiner, under the nom de plume of "East City Giver," it might be stated that the Postmen appreciate the consideration shown them by the writer, but they are in no way desirous of allowing the impression to go abroad to the effect that they are soliciting Christmas boxes. They are thankful for what they have voluntarily received, which, considering the present condition of affairs, has exceeded expectations.

BUSINESS ABILITY NOT SENTIMENT THE VOTER'S GUIDE

To the Editor:

Sir,—I only wish to state that if Mayor Buller is elected, let it not be for sympathy, as for instance, the idea that he should be given two years. If the voter can think of some constructive work which Mayor Buller did, not some previous Mayor, then by all means vote for him on his merits. We are appointing a man to conduct the city's business, involving thousands of dollars. Now cut the sentiment out. I am not saying who I am voting for. Ex-Mayor Rush made this suggestion first, and he was the man who allowed E. F. McWilliams only one year. Sympathy and sentiment have no place in business, and on Monday you are putting your finger in the city's business. Mayor Buller has presented no platform, but simply says, "leave me in for two years."

Yours sincerely,
George Street.

SAYS MAYOR BULLER CRADLED AT JOB

Dear Mr. Editor,—Mayor Buller, or his workers, are making a big bid for Catholic support. It is not for the purpose of dragging in religious questions that I mention this incident, nor that I feel at all disappointed over it, but people sometimes forget very quickly little things that count. Mayor Buller knew that the position he obtained at the Customs House had been regarded by many as a "gift" to the Catholics, and one was usually selected. I do not agree with the idea for a minute. Pick a man for public positions on his merits would be my way, but at any rate this was the custom with that position. Did Mr. Buller try to secure it for a Conservative Catholic? He did not. He grabbed it for William Buller, with Mr. Burnham as his "angel." People will say, "You should not bring in this religious question." Why it is being worked all around town for Buller, and for the life of me I can't see what he has done more than George Duncan. If anything is going to be said on this subject trot it out from the back streets. Mr. Buller is no more a friend of the Italian, the Englishman or the Catholic or Protestant, too, than George Duncan. Some people seem to wish to be hoodwinked in this respect.

A Catholic Conservative.

Says Gordon Must Deliver Goods

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I think the charges made by Mr. Gordon in the press are of such a serious nature that an investigation should be demanded at once, and the prominent citizens implicated given an opportunity to clear themselves.

Furthermore, I think Mr. Gordon should at once turn over all information in his possession to the authorities or else there may be some danger of him getting in this inner circle himself.

"CLEAN UP."

SAID THE MAYOR SHUT DOWN WORK

To the Workingmen of Peterborough:

Gentlemen,—Do you realize the fact that when the depression, owing to the war, struck the city, that the Mayor (Mr. Buller), without authority from the Council and off his own bat, ordered all civic work to be stopped. What do you think of a man who has no more backbone than that? No more faith in his own ability to pull things together when a problem arises; and no more faith in our own great city? In fact, after spending over the Hydro money, he was up in the air, and had it not been for the fact that Ex-Mayor Bradburn discussed with several aldermen and the Mayor himself, a way out, the dear only knows where the working men of this city would have landed. I don't think a change in the Mayor's chair will do any harm.

Labourer.

LIKES MAYOR BULLER

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I s dealmost everyone in town is writing a letter, and I thought I might just as well be in the game myself. Well, I am going to vote for Buller, and I will tell you why. He has good municipal experience. He is a good safe man. He has had only one year. His interests are all here. He has done well in 1914 and deserves a second term.

Yours truly,
Early Voter.

OPPOSED TO MR. DUNCAN.

Peterborough, Dec. 29, 1914.

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Please allow me a little of your valuable space. I understand from reading the paper that Geo. H. Duncan is soliciting the votes of the citizens for the Mayoralty, and I notice he says he has lived in this city all his life and has felt a deep interest in the city, and boasts of being eight years in service as alderman and two years as chairman of the Board of Works, and at that time when a large number of citizens signed a petition and put it before the city officials opposing the dirty incinerator as a nuisance being placed at the present quarters he (Mr. Duncan), being chairman of said Board of Works, opposed said petition and went against the interest of the citizens and said that that was the place for it, and that's where it was going to be put, and we, as citizens, have had to put up with all the dirty dirt, flying around that spoils the clean clothes that the women put out the lines to dry and also the foul smell that fills our houses that at nights, in the summer our windows have to be all closed down and suffer with the saltry heat. Is this loving thy neighbour as thyself, or doing to others as we wished to be done by. There has been much said about making our city beautiful and clean, and if Mr. Geo. H. Duncan's long experience in civic affairs could do no more for our city and citizens that has been done, as a representative of No. 1 Ward, it is high time there should be men of sound judgment elected to look after the interest of city and citizens, as back numbers do not pay these days of progressiveness, perhaps. Mr. Duncan forgets about these things, but we don't.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor.

TAXPAYER.

MONDAY'S ELECTION

Editor, Examiner:

Sir,—In common with many other property owners, I am looking forward anxiously to this year, 1915, and to the result of Monday's election. Nearly twenty years' residence in Peterborough has convinced me that as ratepayers we are paying far too little attention to the management of our City's affairs, and as a result we have been electing very often the men who were anxious to get in rather than the men who were best fitted to manage our town affairs. We want our City to be a progressive — a successful City. We do not want it to be loaded down with debt, nor do we want it to be unduly taxed. A little carelessness for a few years, and we can have a burdensome debt, whereas if we go carefully now during the hard times we shall probably go on expanding and prosperity.

That our City should be a successful thrifty City, we should see to it that we elect successful, thrifty men to our Council, men who will introduce and carry out in the management of our City's business the same methods and plans by which they themselves have succeeded. But it is so often said successful business men do not want to bother with Municipal affairs. This too has been too often true, but it does seem to me that in a case where we have a thoroughly successful business man in our Council, we should do all in our power to keep him there. I am not taking any sides as to the Mayoralty contest, but think that we who live in the West Ward should not fail to re-elect G. Walter Green, who has given the city most valuable service, who is a successful business man in the management of the affairs of our City, and who is a candidate for re-election on Monday next.

Yours, etc.,
W. C. Austin.

JUNIORS WIN EXCITING GAME FROM OLD BOYS IN BENEFIT GAME

The Peterborough Juniors' and Old Boys' clash at Brock Street Rink on New Years' Eve was a lively engagement with the local youngsters emerging at the top of the heap, Referee Kelly announcing the score as 9 to 6 in favour of the O. H. A. team. The Old Boys had a rattling good team, which included Lee Dercober of Ottawa, Wilfrid Stratton of 'Varsity, Orme Cavanah of Woodstock College and Jerry Coughlin, and individually they lomed up as a mighty formidable aggregation. The Peterborough youngsters had it on them in condition and aggressiveness, while they worked better together in spite of the fact that Morrow and Richardson were absent from the line-up.

Dercober had a busy night and his good work in the nets saved the Old Boys from a worse beating. At times a fusilade of shots was bounding off the Peterborough goales, and nearly all the goals scored on him were at close range. Wilfrid Stratton showed lots of speed and was very dangerous when he got away, while Jerry Coughlin was there with his old clever stick handling. The back-checking of the Juniors gave both lads a lot of trouble. However, Matthews and Cavanah made a strong defence.

All the Juniors worked hard and gave a good account of themselves. Knapman and Jackson were especially in the limelight, while O'Connell did some fine shooting and back-checking. Harold Smith of R.M.C., who played left wing for the Juniors, was prominent in the scoring.

The O. H. A. team led at the end of the first period by 4 to 3, but the Old Boys outscored them in the second, leading by 6 to 5 at the end of the period. The Juniors finished strong, however, and won out in the last period.

The teams were:

Old Boys		Junior O.H.A.
Dercober	Goal	Legros
Matthews	Right Defence	Long
Cavanah	Left Defence	Smyth
Coughlin	Rover	Knapman
Hamilton	Centre	Jackson
W. Stratton	Right Wing	O'Connell
R. Stratton	Left Wing	Smith

Referee—F. Kelly.

Peterboro' Was Too Good For Senior Representatives

TORONTO, Jan. 2.—With two junior players on the wings, the Peterborough intermediates showed their class last night when they came from behind and beat the Toronto Rowing Club senior O.H.A. team 8 goals to 7 in an exciting game at the Arena. Billy Breen's club banged in four goals in the first few minutes before the Petes got their bearings on the big surface and got accustomed to the artificial ice. After that the visitors outplayed the seniors until the end of the piece, showing more effective team play and combination that the Rowers. The victory was a popular one with the Peterborough old boys, many of whom turned out for the battle and cheered lustily for the easterners.

A Good Combination.

The Petes displayed a much better brand of hockey than in their game against Bowmanville. The forward line broke away fast and had a snappy combination, while they checked back consistently.

Pethick and Hunter rushed beautifully and broke up the Rowing Club attack in good style. Pethick's rush for the first Peterborough goal was one of the best individual plays of the night.

Janes and Dwyer both played half the game in the nets and both showed class. Only one goal was scored on Dwyer, who played the second and half the last period. With a pair of goalers like these boys, the Petes are certainly lucky.

Long and Morrow of the juniors were in uniform and it had been planned to use them in the latter stages of the game. The first line-up travelled so nicely, however, that it was decided to let them finish, and they came through nicely. The two youngsters on the boards, Knapman and Cavanah, although both had played a game the night before, were always in the hunt, and in spite of being bumped around pretty strenuously, the pair wound up going strong. Both figured in the scoring summary, while Knapman's back-checking was a feature. Park has seldom played better hockey. His stick-handling was splendid, while he was dangerous around the nets at all times. Halpin's back-checking and rushing were big league all the way. He and Knapman were back with nearly every rush and were of big assistance to the defence.

Drew First Blood.

The Rowing Club started out with a scoring epidemic that reminded some of the Petes of the St. Michael's game a couple of seasons ago. In rapid succession they slapped four counters into the twines. Then the Petes got going. Pethick broke the ice with a rink length rush and a beautiful shot which beat Laird. A grand combination run by Pethick, Halpin and Park gave the latter a chance to score Goal No. 2 and a few seconds later another counter was hammered past Laird, leaving the quarter time score at the end of the period 4 to 3 in favour of the Rowing Club. Hunter tied it up early in the second period on a nice shot from the side, but the Rowing Club went ahead again shortly after on a fluke shot from the corner. The Petes finished the period Park, Cavanah and Knapman scoring in a row, and the period wound up 7 to 5 in favour of the Petes. In the past period with Knapman on the fence, the Toronto club scored twice and tied the count, but the Petes got the winning goal a minute or two after.

The Rowing Club entertained the boys most hospitably in their quarters after the game.

TORONTO, Jan. 23.— Peterborough won two victories last night. As a representative of Peterborough they won from Toronto Rowing Club 8 to 7 in an exhibition game at the Arena. As a representative of the O.H.A. intermediate series they won from the senior representatives. It was not a good hockey game, but the rough-and-ready style of play adopted by the teams kept the interest at high pitch throughout.

It was the first game for the locals, and they showed it. The players wandered from their positions and there was an utter lack of combination. They lacked condition, and their back-checking was weak. Manager Breen has, however, good material, and it should be a much improved team which takes the ice against St. Michael's next Friday.

Peterborough has a good team. The defence is strong both on the offensive and the defensive, and both have wicked shots. Hunter's ability is known, through his play with local senior teams in recent years. He has, however, little on his partner, Pethick. This fellow, while he lacks Hunter's weight, is much faster. He shoots hard and is quick to take advantage o fan opening.

Halpin and Parks are the best of the forwards. The former is not very big, but he is a regular "hornet." He broke up many plays by his effective back-checking. Parks is a goal getter. Kelly did not play left wing, but his substitute, Cavanagh, played well. Although the team has not had much chance to practice, they showed considerable team play. The teams:

Peterborough—Goal Janes (Dwyer); defence, Hunter and Pethick; rover, Halpin; centre, Parks; forwards, Cavanah and Knapman.

Toronto Rowing Club—Goal, Laird; ((McCrudden); efence, McLean and Sidley; rover, Burrill; centre, Farr; forwards, O'Gorman and Reynolds.

Referee—Con. Corbeau.

LINDSAY DEFEATED IN PORT HOPE

PORT HOPE, Jan. 2.—Lindsay met defeat in an O. H. A. junior game here last night by a score of 8 to 2. In the first period Lindsay scored the only goal, but at the end of the second the score stood 4 to 2 in Port Hope's favour, and in the last the locals piled up four more goals, making the final score 8 to 2.

Dougan played a star game for the visitors, while Edmunds, Emmerson, and Lowe did good work for the home team. The line-up:

Lindsay—Goal, O'Laughlin; point, Sanderson; cover, Haugh; rover, Scott; centre, Mollroy; wings, Griffis and Dugan.

Port Hope—Goal, Edmunds; point, Dareh; cover, Thompson; rover, Emmerson; centre, Hills; wings, Lowe and Bowden.

Referee—W. A. McCord, Toronto.

BOWMANVILLE, Jan. 2.—In the Intermediate hockey match played here yesterday between Bowmanville and Whitby, the home team won by the score of 8 to 3. The line-up:

FIRST JUNIOR O. H. A. GAME MONDAY NIGHT

The local Junior O. H. A. team will play their first O. H. A. game of the season on Monday night, when they meet the Port Hope Ontarios at Brock St. Rink, in what should prove a fast exhibition. Port Hope have already shown their class this season and they will give the local youngsters a battle royal. The Petes' juniors demonstrated aggressiveness and pepper in their practice game on Thursday night with the Old Boys, and they are in good shape for Monday's game, finishing their training with a practice this afternoon, while several of the youngsters had a workout with the Intermediates in Toronto last night. The line-up has not yet been definitely decided, Legros, Morrow and Long will form the defence, while Knapman and Jackson are sure starters on the forward line. The other two places have not yet been allotted, but will be announced Monday. The game is called for 8:15 o'clock, and no real fan can afford to miss the battle. A Junior game is always full of action, and Monday's engagement should be no exception to the rule.

PICTON WINS FROM BELLEVILLE BY 3-2

Picton, Jan. 2.—In the opening local O.H.A. game to-night Picton won from the Belleville intermediates by 3 to 2. The game was very fast but clean throughout.

Belleville presented a much stronger line up than that which faced Picton last Monday night in Belleville. Picton scored the winning goal one minute before full time. The line-up:

Referee—J. Moxon of Toronto.

Germany's Entry Was Too Late In The Colonization Race

Admiral Von Tirpitz hands out the same old stuff about England blocking Germany's way to a place in the sun. Sheer nonsense of course. The world is Germany's oyster if Germany wants to go the right way about it. Her citizens may settle where they will in the four quarters of the globe. They may reap all the benefits of Anglo-Saxon civilization wherever it exists. The British Empire is free to everybody. No honest man is barred. Germany can enjoy all the advantages of world citizenship without the trouble and expense of pioneer work, but that does not suit her book. Her subjects do better under any other form of government than her own, as the prosperity of Germans in Canada and the United States goes to prove. Her colonies have nearly all been failures but that does not divert her from her great plan of world conquest or downfall. Since she seems bent on downfall she will probably get it.

The plain truth is that Germany proposes to build her empire on the ruins of the British Empire, to supplant British institutions by German ones, an exchange, as it happens to which the world is not well-disposed. There is no such thing as giving a hurry-up order for a world empire. Forty years training for war and an ambition to overrun the earth will not do it. As a matter of fact, no nation has ever sat down in cold blood and said, "I will build an Empire." On the contrary, most empires, and the British Empire, particularly, have been casual and fortuitous things. They were not built. They were like Topsy—they "just growed." They grew in spite of themselves. Commerce adventured, the flag followed, the new responsibilities were regularized. It may be true that appetite increased with what it fed on and that empires of a certain size expanded more rapidly than others, but that does not alter the fact that great empires are mostly hap-hazard in their origin.

Germany had the misfortune to come into a world largely occupied by empires that were hoary with age when she was a baby. Likewise she comes into a world in which empire building, in the sense of making extensions, has gone out of fashion chiefly because there is no room for the extensions. It was Germany's luck to arrive too late for the general distribution. Still that is no reason why she should not be happy and prosperous if she will accept things as they are. By attempting to oust the present tenants she has got herself universally disliked, and, what is more to the point, has lost a foreign trade of a billion a year which she will not recover in the next generation.—Saturday Night.

Calls War Struggle To Rule The World

Dr. Liebknecht Blames Austro-Germany Secret Diplomacy For Strife

Socialistic representatives in New York yesterday announced the receipt of a letter fro Dr. Carol Liebknecht, a member of the German Reichstag, who voted against the recent war credits. Dr. Liebknecht, the leader of the German Social Democratic factions, asks for a speedy termination of the present war in Europe, which, he says, so far is indecisive. His letter says:

"My vote against the war credit is based upon the following considerations:

This war, which none of the peoples engaged therein has wished, is not caused in the interests of the prosperity of the German or any other nation. This is an imperialistic war, a war for the domination of the world market, for the political domination over important fields of operation for industrial and bank capital. On the part of the competition in armaments this is a war mutually fostered by German and Austrian war parties in the darkness of half absolutism and secret diplomacy in order to steal a march on the adversary.

"At the same time, this war is a Bonapartistic effort to blot out the growing labour movement.

"The German motto 'Against Czarism,' as well as the present English and French cries, 'Against Militarism,' has the deliberate purpose of bringing into play in behalf of race hatred the noblest inclinations and the revolutionary feelings and ideals of the people. To Germany, the accomplice of Czarism, an example of political backwardness down to the present day, does not belong the calling of the liberator of nations. The liberation of the Russian as well as the German people should be their own task."

"This war is not a German defence war. Its historical character and its development thus far make it impossible to thrust the assertion of a capitalistic Government that the purpose for which credits are asked is the defence of the fatherland.

"An early peace without victories should be demanded; every effort in this connection should be assisted. Only the simultaneous and permanent enforcement of the currents going in the direction of such a peace can bring to an end the bloody butchery before the entire exhaustion of the nations has taken place.

"Only the peace which has germinated in the soil of the international solidarity of the labouring class can be a lasting peace It is for this reason that it is the duty of the proletariat of all countries to continue also in this war mutual socialistic labour in behalf of peace.

"The credits for succour have my approval, with the understanding that the asked amount seems far from being sufficient. Not less eagerly do I vote for everything that will alleviate the hard lot of our brothers in the field, as well as that of the wounded and the sick, for whom I have the deepest sympathy.

"But I do vote against the demand ed war credits, under protest against the war and against those who are responsible for it and have caused it; against the capitalistic purposes for which it is being used, against the annexation plans, against the violation of the Belgian and Luxembourg neutrality, against the unlimited authority of rulers of war and against the neglect of social and political duties, to which the Government and the ruling classes stand convicted.

("Signed) Karl Liebknecht."

FIFTY YEARS AGO YESTERDAY

Alderman Johnston Reached His Fiftieth Milestone

On New Year's Day in the year 1865 there was established on this mundane sphere an individual who later in life was decorated with the baptismal name of William J. Johnston. Peterborough at that time was a struggling community surrounded by woods. It was no uncommon sight to see a mild-eyed bovine strolling up the main street, browsing off the vegetation that adorned the landscape. Out of the backwoods has evolved a greater Peterborough and likewise a greater personage in the character of William J. Johnston. From 1865 to 1915 is a far cry in the life of a community. It is a more distant cry in the life of a man who in that time has risen from childhood to a position of public trust. Yesterday was the golden anniversary of Alderman Johnston's birth. It is significant that the fiftieth anniversary of his career should see him entrusted with the chairmanship of the spending department of the City Council, namely the Finance Committee. To him also belongs the distinction of being the senior member of the City Council; his first election to the administrative body of this city dating back to 1904. Previous to that Alderman Johnston served for a space of six years on the old Ashburnham Council.

On New Year's Day Alderman Johnson was the recipient of a plethora of congratulations and a host of good wishes for his future welfare and prosperity.

THESE DARK DAYS

Cause Us To Notice Any Defect of Vision or Eyestrain

Many people think that an examination can only be made on bright days. This is not so, as we use a dark room and artificial light exclusively in our examinations. So we can give equally good results on dark, dreary days as on bright, sunshiny days.

WEDDING BELLS

GOODFELLOW—McGHIE.

A quiet and pretty wedding was solemnized at 496 Park Street, the home of Mr. and Mrs. John McGhie, late of Glasgow, Scotland, on Dec. 31st, when their eldest daughter, Elizabeth, was united in marriage to Mr. R. J. Goodfellow, of Belleville. The bride was charmingly attired in white silk, with over-dress of shadow lace and net, and was given away by her father. Miss Mabel Johnson, of Frqnsvillee was bridesmaid, and wore white embroidered voile with sky trimmings. The groom was assisted by Mr. Jas. McGhie, brother of the bride. The bride's present from the groom was a pretty gold pendant, set with emeralds, while he presented Miss Johnson with a handsome manicure set. After the ceremony guests to the number of twenty-five repaired to the dining-room, where a sumptuous wedding supper was served.

The bride received many handsome presents, including a miscellaneous shower from the young ladies of the Bell Telephone Company, with whom she was recently employed.

After a short stay in Peterborough, Mr. and Mrs. Goodfellow will leave for their future home in Belleville, where they will be at home to their friends.

FLAG COMMENT

Editor, Examiner:

Sir,—A few of the smaller newspapers have commented favourably, we are told, upon Rev. J. C. Davidson's flag letter.

The Mail and Empire which published the letter sent to it by Rev. J. C. Davidson, had no editorial comment on it; perhaps the reason for this was that flag flying had been recently tried in Toronto and was abandoned on account of expense. "The experiment of flying the flag daily meant frequent renewal of flags as they were torn by the wind."

The Globe did not copy Rev. J. C. Davidson's letter, preferring to keep flag flapping to Tory journals which have need of such devices.—Yours, etc.,

Reader.

TO YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN

The season of the year is now approaching when many of the young men and women who are constant readers of the Examiner make preparations for entering a business school for the purpose of acquiring a good practical education In taking this step it is of the greatest importance that they should attend only the best. The result of a course of instruction in a poorly conducted institution means almost certain failure in the duties the student wishes to assume. In the matter of a successful business school the Peterborough Business College is introduced to the favourable consideration of those contemplating a practical course of study This college is now thoroughly established, and is about to enter on its thirtieth scholastic year It is managed by experienced and practical men whose every interest is centred in the welfare of their students and the progress of the institution During the past four years it has been under the direct management of E. E. Logan, and young people intending to attend a business school would do well to consult him at once.

SERVICES ON BEHALF OF PEACE

Will be Held Throughout the Empire To-morrow—Services Here

To-morrow has been set aside both in Great Britain and throughout the Empire as a day of intercession on behalf of the soldiers and sailors, for an early and favourable conclusion of the war, and resulting in enduring peace. Special prayers for these purposes will be said in all the churches. In addition and as a climax to these, it is felt that as the matter pertains to the whole community, a united community service is appropriate, and such services will be held under the auspices of the Ministerial Association, in St. Paul's, for the centre and north parts of the City, and in St. James' for the south end.

The services will be conducted by different ministers, and will last 45 minutes. Concerned as they are with national interests and the welfare and protection of the soldiers and sailors, it is expected that there will be large congregations. Thus, the efforts of all will be directed to these all important ends.

Entertainment For Soldiers

An entertainment on behalf of a number of soldiers who are going forword to the front, was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sewell, 348 Stewart street. Report Being Circulated That is Not Running For Board of Education

There seems to be an impression gaining in the city to the effect that Mr. Vincent Eastwood is not a candidate for the Board of Education. This statement should not be given credence, as Mr. Eastwood's name will be among those on the Board of Education ballot on Monday. Mr. Eastwood has served on the Board for a number of years now and his past good service should be a sufficient reason for his re-election.

LIBEL UNIT HAS BEEN CANCELLED

In September, 1913, Mrs. C. H. Burleigh, of Belmont, had a writ for slander issued against Mr. W. H. Dafoe, of the same township. Since that time no move has been made to prosecute the proceedings, and in consequence F. D. Kerr, for the defendant, recently made a motion at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, to dismiss the action for want of prosecution. No one appeared in contra and an order was made dismissing the action with costs.

YOUTH OF GERMANY FOR THE NEW ARMY

On the Belgian Frontier.—A large number of young recruits for Germany's new army, which is organizing for the spring campaign, are arriving at the various stations in Eastern Belgium for training under elderly drill sergeants. Six thousand are at Beverloo near Liege, and similar detachments are being prepared in other towns in order not to interfere with the billeting of the ordinary field troops passing through on service.

Youths of eighteen to twenty, some of whom have not finished their school studies, seem to comprise the bulk of this army.

NO DANGER OF ATTACK ON WARSAW

Russians Now Occupy Left Bank of the Bzura—Austrian Defeat Becomes Rout—Inhabitants in a Panic.

HINDENBURG'S PLANS

PETROGRAD, Jan. 3.—The Russian Army under Gen. Radko Dimietriff, has captured 22,750 Austrians and 45 machine-guns during the last fortnight, according to an official announcement given out here.

"The Bourse Gazette's Moscow correspondent asserts that the Austrians are evacuating Bukowina, and that more than 30,000 panic-stricken inhabitants of Bukowina and Transylvania have fled into Roumania".

LONDON, Jan. 3.—A Petrograd despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. says:

"It is officially estimated that 27 German army corps are operating against Russia. Four hundred thousand Germans and Austrians have already been taken prisoners, and their killed and wounded are three or four times heavier.

"The Germans," the despatch adds "have not only not crossed the Bzura, but the Russians are even on the left bank of that river. Warsaw is in no danger."

In the east the Germans have captured the important Russian position at Borjimow, but elsewhere they have been unable to make headway against the Russians, who, as defenders of well-fortified positions, are aided by the wet weather and muddy roads, which hinder the German movements

The Austrians claim to have checked the Russian advance near Gorlice, on the South Galician Railway, west of Jaslo, but apparently the battle here has not yet been concluded.

The Russians, on the other hand, have taken the Austrian positions near Uzsok Pass, which should open another entrance for them through the Carpathians into Hungary, while the Austrian retreat in Bukowina is described by the Russians as a rout.

Draining Austria Of Every Reserve

Terrible Losses of the Dual Monarchy in Campaign Against Servia.

LONDON, Jan. 4—The Nish correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: The terrible losses suffered by the Austro-Hungarian army operating against the Servians are shown by authentic figures I have obtained here.

Taking into acount the number of army corps employed against Servia, together with the repeated reinforcements received, it is evident that Austria-Hungary is leaving no reserves, but is draining all her resources.

She has employed against Servia at least 600,000 men and in straining her troops to the last limit of human endurance she sustained appalling losses.

It has leaked out from Budapest that until the middle of October, according to official reports, Austria-Hungary had lost in the Servian war theatre 148,000 men. The number has been even greater during the latter operations, in which she undoubtedly has lost more than half of her forces.

Her losses since November 1 have certainly reached 180,000 in killed, wounded and prisoners. This makes a total loss of nearly 330,000 men. Of this number 90,000 are prisoners. In addition to these prisoners, Servia has captured four flags, 193 guns, 491 carloads of ammunition, 86 machine guns, 90,000 rifles, 4,000 horses and much other war materials. Thus the Servains have captured men and material enough for two complete army corps.

Regiments Annihilated.

The 37th Landwehr Regiment, which received reinforcements four times and once numbered 6,000 men, had dwindled to less than 500 at the close of November, when Oushitze was taken.

Roads So Deep In Mud That Transports Fail To Bring Up Sufficient Supplies of Amunintion---Trenches Become Ditches and Many Men Have Pneumonia

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PARIS, Jan. 4.—Torrential rains which have resulted in uncontrollable floods, and which continue to sweep over all of Northern France and Belgium, have placed hostilities almost at a standstill, with the exception of the right wing. Even artillery duels have slackened, owing to the inability of the transports to bring up additional ammunition. In consequence the gunners are husbanding their supply everywhere. The trenches are water filled ditches. In the north at many points the rivers and creeks have overewed their banks and filled them with water, driving the troops out. The rain is accompanied by high wintery winds, which causes terrible suffering to the soldiers who, in many instances, are unable to make fires to dry their clothing.

MANY MEN HAVE BEEN INVALIDED.

The percentage of sickness is increasing daily. Hundreds of men are being invalided to the rear. Most of them are suffering from pneumonia. Until the weather changes there can be no general resumption of fighting. Both sides are utilizing the lull to bring up reinforcements to threatened positions, but this is a very hard task. The men are forced to wade through mud up to their knees, and it is impossible for any of the transports, excepting more powerful motor vehicles to move. The latter are frequently stalled, thus effectively blocking the roads. In the Vosges and in upper Alsace the fighting continues, with the French making slow but steady gains.

London Stock Exchange Opens

Special Morning Cable:

LONDON, Jan. 4.—The London Stock Exchange re-opened to-day after having been closed five months because of the war situation. The opening was marked with an enormous attendance. Before the formal opening proclamation was made the members gathered in front of the desks and cheered, then united in singing "God Save the King."

FRENCH AVIATORS NEAR BRUSSELS

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

AMSTERDAM, Jan. .—French aviators have succeeded in bombarding Etterbeek, the German aviation station, just outside of Brussels. They destroyed a dirigible shed in the course of construction there and killed several German soldiers.

They have been requested by the British War Office, and will be drawn from battalions now being recruited for the second contingent. Half of them will come from the middle west, one-quarter from British Columbia and a quarter from Quebec. The Militia Department has no information as to whether the regiment has been in action yet or not.

Sorry To Lose Rev. J. A. McKenzie

Eulogistic Reference to Peterboro's Latest Ministerial Acquisition.

The Ottawa Valley Watchman has the folowing to say of Rev. J. A. McKenzie, who has accepted the call to Knox Presbyterian church of this city.

"Sorry indeed is the community to lose the Rev. J. A. McKenzie, whose resignation was made known on Sunday last owing to his having accepted a call to Knox church, Peterborough, the people of whom are most fortunate in their choice, for Mr. McKenzie will leave Lachute carrying with him the good will of a large circle of friends, to whom he has endeared himself by an exemplary life in which a true Christian has been fully maintained. It will certainly take a good man to fill his place in this community and we wish him every sucess in his new field of labour."

Wounded 'Tommiess Joined In Song With Miss Terris'

LONDON, Jan. 1.— Miss Ellaline Terriss has returned to London from Boulogne, where she has been singing in the hospitals and markets to wounded soldiers and those who are fit. Asked for her chief impression she replied: "I am full of gratitude. I've a lump in my throat. It is all too wonderful. Over here we don't half feel this war, but when one sees the suffering there is and the 'Tommies' lying in bed as bright as bright can be, all with smiles on their faces deapite their wounds, then one begins to realize it a little. They all joined in the song, "Thank You For All You Are Doing," which has a bit of "Tipperary" in it, and sang "Tipperary" so softly and quietly that it brought tears to every one's eyes."

METRIC SYSTEM FOR BRITISH DRUG TRADE

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The metric system of weights and measures will become the standard for drug stores, the drug trade and physicians in all parts of the British Empire with the new year, when the British Pharmacopoeia goes into effect. The new Pharmacopoeia discards the old system of weights and measures.

FRENCH BOMBARD ALTKIRCH

After an Advance in Alsace—Gen. Paul Pau's Army Has Been Progressing in the East—Guns Destroy Station and Part of Railway Line—Strong Offensive East Wing.

PARIS, Jan. 2.—The French troops operating in Alsace have outflanked the Germans and are now bombarding Altkirch. At other points on the 600-mile battlefront they have ripped through the German lines, making gains of a third of a mile at one point and a fifth of a mile at another, hurling the Germans back upon their rearmost reaches.

The strategical victory won before Altkirch is the greatest recorded on the western battle-front since the fighting reached a deadlock with the assumption by the Germans of their rigid defensive along the Yser.

For the past fortnight the French have been hammering heavily at the German strongholds which constitute the advance posts protecting Muelhausen. Thann has been gained, Asbach captured, Cernay bombarded and Steinbach invested—all are within a small area about eight miles from Muelhausen, and from the vigour of the French attack, both with artillery and infantry, the Germans were led into believing this was the objective upon which the French were centering their forces, to the exclusion of any other part of the line Indeed, so terrific was the demonstration made on this frontiers that the Germans were forced to call for reinforcements to stem the tide of the French advance.

FLANK MOVE SUCCEEDS.

Just when the French were fighting for Steinbach as if their national existence depended upon the taking of thia town, when house-to-house fighting was the rule and ground was gained only foot by foot, a considerable flanking force was diverted to the southward assailing the line of railway from Belfort, through Carsbach and Diersbach, to Altkirch.

After destroying the German line of communication by tearing up the railway between Carsbach and Diersbach, to the southwest of Altkirch, the French advanced along the line of the railway until they brought Altkirk itself within range. Here they bombarded a German train in which tropps were being loaded. The train was standing in the railway station of Altkirch, and considerable damage was done, besides throwing the German troops into panic, the attack coming as a complete surprise. This brings the French back on the line which they have occupied in August, and is a most important gain.

Meanwhile the French offensive before Mulhausen was maintained with great vigour, all the previous gains in the region of Than being maintained.

MUDHOLES EVERYWHERE.

Weather conditions on almost the entire front are officially reported as very bad. The incessant rains soaked the ground turning the battlefields into mudholes. "Operations everywhere are almost impossible" is the report to the French War Office.

The statement adds:

"To this should be attributed the abatement which can be noted in our active offensive."

French military critics are inclined to impute to the War Office a certain sense of humour because of this observation, which is peculiarly facetious when taken in the light of the day's development. It is worthy of note that the official reports to-day speak of advances of 300 and 500 metres with no more show of elation than was evidenced when a matter of two months or even a month ago they had gains of no more than 50 metres to record.

FRENCH INFANTRY TRIUMPHS.

For example, before La Boisselle, after a furious artillery engagement, which raged all through the region of Albert and Roye, the French infantry smashed their way through the Kaiser's defences, driving the Germans back a distance of some 500 metres to their rear-guard trenches, occupying the German works as they advanced and strengthening them as defensive positions for further operations.

Near Beausejour, farther east along the Aisne and in the general vicinity of Perthes-les-Hurlus, the French infantry again plunged forward, lunging through the mud, stumbling, scrambling and fighting all the way until they had pressed the Germans back a distance of more than 300 yards. Serious losses were inflicted on the Germans, who were utterly demoralized by the ferocity of the French attack.

War Cloud In Balkans Menacing

Greece Regards Bulgarian Attitude As Threat to Macedonia.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The persevering steps which have been taken to bring about an understanding between the Christian Balkan States, and with the idea of securing the neutrality of Bulgaria, apparently have not met with complete success, according to despatches received in London from the Near Eastern capitals, and Greece, Servia and Roumania are preparing for eventualities.

During a discussion of the budget in the Greek Chamber of Deputies M. Theokotis is reported to have declared that the speech recently delivered by the Bulgarian Premier regarding Macedonia, which Bulgaria considered should have been ceded to her after the last Balkan War, constituted a menace; while the Greek Minister of Finance said that Greece was making urgent military preparations to maintain her liberated territory.

Another despatch from Athens says that the Greek Government has forbidden the exportation of cereals, flour, cattle, forage and arms.

Should Bulgaria, contrary to expectations, attack Servia with the object of recovering Macedonia, Greece, by her treaty obligations, would, it is thought in political circles here, come to the assistance of Servia, and the Balkan peninsula would be in the throes of a third war

Turkey apparently expects trouble, as the Ottoman Government has expelled the subjects of all neutral countries from the Dardenelles.

In Albania the revolution is said to be spreading, and the Italians, who occupied the seaport of Avlona, have sent a battleship to Durazzo to protect Italian interests at that Albanian port.

"THE BATTLE CRY"

Charles Neville Buck

She stood there a long while and finally she saw where for a little space the road ran near the brick house, unshielded by the woods, a straggling little cortege. At its front rode a stoop-shouldered man in whom even at that far distance she thought she recognised the missionary. Behind him came a few horsemen riding in two squads and between the squads crawled a "jolt-wagon" drawn by mules. She knew that the Haveys were bringing back to the frontier the enemy's dead, and she shuddered at the cold reality. It may have been three hours later that Good Anse Talbott rode up to the Widow Everson's. When the girl, who had returned long ago from the crest, came out to meet him at the door she found him talking there with Milt McBrier who also had ridden up, but from the other direction.

"Anse Havey 'lows," the preacher was saying, "thet he hes done fotched home ther body of Little Nash McKay, an' thet ther boy was shot ter death a-layin' in ther la'rel a hundred paces from the winder whar Cal Douglas was a-standin'."

"I've done already acknowledged thet," declared Milt, in a voice into which crept a trace of truculent sullenness.

The missionary nodded. "I hain't quite through yit, Milt," he went on evenly, and the girl who stood leaning against the door frame caught for an instant a sparkle of zealous earnestness in his weary eyes.

"Anse is willin' ter take yore hand on this truce. He's willin' ter stand pledge thet ther Haveys keeps faith. But I'm a preacher of the gawspel of God, Milt, and I don't 'low ter be no go-between without both of you men does keep faith."

Milt McBriar stiffened resentfully and his brows contracted blackly under his hat brim.

"Does ye doubt thet I'll do what I says?" he inquired in a voice too soft for sincerity. The missionary did not drop his steady and compelling eyes from the gaze direct. It was as if he were reading through the pupils of his protagonist, and searching the dark heart.

"I aims ter see thet ye both starts out fair, Milt," he declared still quietly. "An' ter thet end I aims ter admonish ye both on ther terms of this hyar meetin' atween ye."

For an instant Milt McBriar's semblance of calm reflectiveness slipped from him, and his voice rose raspingly. "Did Anse Havey larn ye thet speech?"

Good Anse Talbott shook his head patiently. "No. I told Anse ther same thing I'm a-tellin' you. Neither Anse ner ther four men that fotches ther body will hev any sort of weepon about 'em when they comes acrost thet stile. Ye've got ter give me yore hand, thet none of yore men hain't a-goin' ter be armed. I'm a servant of ther Most High God." For an instant fire blazed in the preacher's eyes and his voice mounted with fervour. "Fer years I've done sought ter teach His grace an' His hatred of murder ter ther people of these hyar hills. . . . When you two men shakes hands on this hyar truce I aims ter be standin' by with a rifle-gun in my hands an' ef I sees anything crooked, I'm goin' ter use hit."

The dark giant stood for a time silent, then he gravely nodded his head. "Them terms suit me," he said briefly.

The two men walked down to the fence and separated there, going in opposite directions.

A few minutes later Juanita, still standing fascinatedly in the doorway was looking out across the shoulder of the missionary. He presided at the threshold with grave eyes, and, even after these peaceful years with something of familiar caress in the way his brown hand lay on his rifle lock. Then the girl saw a strange and primitive ratification of treaty.

On either side of the little porch was gathered a group of solemn men, mostly bearded, mostly coatless and all unarmed. In front of these, at the right, stood Anse Havey, his eyes still the dominant feature of the picture.

Over across from him was the taller and older chieftain of the other clan. They held the picture gravely, with a courtesy that cloaked their hatred. Out in the road was the "jolt-wagon" and in its deep bed the girl could see the canvas that covered its burden. As Bad Anse took his place at the front of his escort, his gaze met that of Juanita. He did not speak, but for an instant she saw his face harden and his eyes narrow and his lips set themselves. It was the glance of one who has been lashed across the face and who cannot strike back, but who will not soon forget.

This time the girl's eyes did not drop and certainly they held no hint of relenting or plea for forgiveness.

The head of the Haveys turned from her and began speaking. "I got your message, Milt," he said casually, "an' I reckon you got my answer. I've brought back little Nash."

"I'm obleeged ter ye." The McBriar paused, then volunteered: "Ef ther boy had took counsel of me this thing wouldn't never hev happened."

For some moments Bad Anse Havey looked deep into his enemy's eyes, then he nodded.

"Milt," he carelessly announced, while the ghost of an ironical smile played in his eyes though it left his lips grave, "I've got several hosses an' mules down thar in my barn that we found hitched out in ther timber when Nash an' his friends took to the la'rel." Again he paused and studied the faces of the McBriar men before he went on. "One of 'em is your own roan mare, Milt. One of 'em b'longs ter Sam thar and one of 'em is Bob's thar." He pointed out each man as he spoke. "Ye can get 'em any time ye send down thar for 'em."

The girl caught her breath, and despite her dislike acknowledged the cool insolence with which Anse had parried Milt's disclaimer of any foreknowledge of a plot. The McBriar replied only with a scowl; so Anse contemplatively continued, as though to himself,

"It's right smart of a pity for a feller thet goes out shootin' in the night-time to take a kinsman's horse—without askin' for counsel. It might lead to some misunderstandin'."

A baleful glare flashed deep in the eyes of the taller man, and from the henchmen at his back came an uneasy shuffle of brogans.

But the voice of Good Anse Talbott interrupted and relieved the tension. "Stiddy thar, men," he quietly admonished, "you-all didn't hardly meet hyar ter talk 'bout hosses nohow. I'll lead them nags back myself, Milt."

Anse Havey stepped forward and extended his hand.

"I gives ye my hand, Milt McBriar," he said, "thet there truce goes on."

"An' I gives ye mine," rejoined the other.

After a perfunctory shake the two turned together and went down the steps. The girl saw both squads lifting the covered burden from the wagon and carrying it around the turn of the road where a second wagon waited. She believed that the feud was ended, but it is doubtful if either of the principals whose hands had joined, parted with great trust in the integrity of the other's intentions. It is certain that one of them at least was already making plans for the future, not at all in accordance with that compact of peace.

CHAPTER XI.

As days grew into weeks Bad Anse Havey heard nothing of the establishing of a school at the head of Tribulation, though all the gossip of the countryside which might interest a dictator filtered through the valleys and gorges to his house.

He smiled a little over the copy of Plutarch's "Lives," which was the companion of his leisure moments, and held his counsel. While he thought of Juanita herself with a resentment which sprang from hurt pride, he felt for her, as a menace to his power, only contempt. But Juanita's resolve had in no wise weakened. She had seen that her original ideas had all been chaotic and born of ignorance, and she was, like a good and patient general, pulling all the pins out of her little war map and drafting a completely new plan of campaign.

There was no weakening of resolve. Each day she went up to the tall poplar that commanded the valleys, east and west, and each morning with the glint of battle in her violet eyes she repeated to herself in anathema on both houses "Carthago delenda est."

She meant to spend as much time as was necessary in simply learning to know these people and making them feel her sympathy. With Good Anse Talbott, she rode up dwindling water courses to the hovels of the "branch-water folks" and accompanied him wheresoever the cry of sickness or distress sent up its call, and since his introduction was an open sesame, she found welcomes where she went.

Dust-covered in the station at Peril, were trunks which she had not been able to bring across the creek-beds and quicksands, and she smiled as she thought of a still more insane piece of foolishness of which she had been guilty in her dense initial ignorance. Besides the trunks there stood there in the little baggage-room a crated piano! Whenever she saw a patient teamster struggling and manoeuvring for ten minutes over one twisting series of broken ledges or "man-powering" out of the way fallen wreckage of last night's storm she thought of that piano and laughed.

But even the small wardrobe of her saddle-bags was beyond her needs now. To be too obviously a "furriner" meant to appear, in native eyes, "struck-up" and to lose influence. So she adopted plain calicos and sunbonnets like those worn by the women about her, though even native severity of line and material could not take from her figure its trim distinction of grace and beauty. Just as she amended her dress so she also amended her speech to simplified and homely words.

It was all a very sincere effort to adapt herself, a passionate determination. . . .

"In patience to abide,
To veil the threat of terror
And check the show of pride;
By open speech and simple,
An hundred times made plain,
To seek another's profit,
And work another's gain."

And soon the slight figure, that walked with an almost lyric grace, yet with a boyish strength and lithesness, became familiar along the roads and trails.

Instead of asking, "Who mout thet be?" mountaineers nodded and said, "Thet's her;" and some women added, "God bless thet child."

She had been into many gloomy cabins that repelled the brightness of the summer sun, and she had been more like sunlight than anything that had ever come through their narrow doors before. The children loved her and she loved them. And she marvelled at their numbers. It was June and it seemed to her that in almost every family a new baby was struggling through its first months of unsanitary gloom and squalor. She looked at their mothers, prematurely old by the pain of their frequent coming, then at their gaunt, sullen fathers and she prayerfully resolved that these newcomers should know the wholesomeness of life; should be liberated from their heritage of drudgery and hate.

One wild afternoon Good Anse stopped by the gate and called to her. Clouds were piling and tumbling along the ridges in angry ramparts of raw and leaden heaviness. Now and then a cannonading of thunder rumbled with its echoes through the mountains. Already great drops were falling and the missionary's slicker shone like black armour.

"Thar's a-goin' ter be a hornin' at ther Calloway house, I reckon," he said simply. "Thar hain't no doctor nigher than Peril an' ther woman's mighty puny. I reckon ye durstn't hardly ride over thar, would ye?" Then he added. "Hit's ten mile by crow-flight an' hit's a-comin' on ter storm."

Millions of men and women to-day know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapepsin occasionally keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favourite foods without fear.

WORLD'S AUTOCRACY IS COMING AND NEAR

Will Be Exclusive, Aristocratic Monarchy.

Pastor Russell Describes the Fifth Universal Empire of Earth—The Reign of Sin and Death Shall Be Overthrown—Humanity Will Be Uplifted From Ignorance and Superstition—Calling the Elect the Work of the Gospel Age—The Future Royal Family—Instructed and Polished For Their Exaltation—Messiah's Kingdom a Theocracy.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its insertion.]

PASTOR RUSSELL

New York City, Jan. 3.—Pastor Russell addressed a large audience to-night at the New York City Temple, W. 63rd St. and Broadway. His text was, "For He must reign, till He hath put all enemies under His feet." (1 Corinthians 15: 25. He said in part:

Many of us have learned to appreciate a republican form of government as the very highest type of civil administration. I trust that I am not one whit behind the most patriotic of you in my appreciation of the great Government of these United States, which many of us believe to be the noblest that has yet risen amongst men. Nevertheless, the Bible teaches that Messiah's Reign will be that of a monarchy; and not only so, but that it will be a very exclusive and aristocratic monarchy. Additionally, it will be most autocratic—theocratic; for the will of its subjects will not be consulted in the slightest particular.

At first, in alarm, we are ready to say, Would not that be a most dangerous condition of things? Could any royal family, however noble and generous, be entrusted with such autocratic power without fear of its being misused for the enslavement of the people, for the aggrandizement of the rulers? Have we not learned this in the history of the past six thousand years? Do we not see the necessity for curtailing and controlling the powers of kings and governors? Are we not more and more brought to realize the necessity that the people shall rule, whether in Congress or in Parliament, in Doumas or in Chambers of Deputies?

Yes, yes, my dear friends, I heartily accede to all this; but when I shall describe to you the nature of the Kingdom that is to be established, and its personnel, all your fears will assuredly flee, and you will rejoice exceedingly that the Divine arrangement is what it is in respect to the theocratic Kingdom shortly to be established and take over the government of the world.

Scripturally it is described as the Fifth Universal Empire of earth. I remind you of the Divinely inspired dream of King Nebuchadnezzar, as interpreted by the Prophet Daniel. It was of an image majestic, grand. The head of the image was Nebuchadnezzar's own kingdom at Babylon, the first to rule over the earth. Next, represented in the breast and the arms of silver, came Medo-Persia, the second Universal Empire of earth, the conqueror of Babylon. Next, represented in the belly and thighs of the image, came Grecia, the third Universal Empire of earth, which conquered Medo-Persia. Next, represented in the legs of iron, came Rome, the fourth Universal Empire, conqueror of Greece.

There are to be no more until Messiah's Kingdom; it will be the fifth. Meantime, we have had two attempts at a fifth monarchy, both unsuccessful. One of these attempts was by the Papacy; the other was that of Napoleon I. During this time the present divisions, which resulted from the breaking up of the Roman Empire, are represented by the feet of the image, with their ten toes.

The prophecy declares (Daniel 2:44) that in the days of these kings, represented by the toes of the image, the God of Heaven will set up a Kingdom, which shall subdue all kingdoms and which shall never be overthrown. It shall "be given to the people, saints, of the Most High God, and they shall take the Kingdom and possess it forever, even forever and ever." (Daniel 7:18, 27.) In the picture God's Kingdom is symbolically represented as a great stone, hewn from the mountain without hands—supernaturally. It shall smite the image in its feet; and forthwith "the iron, the brass, the silver and the gold shall become like the chaff of a threshing floor, and the wind shall carry it away"; but the Mountain shall increase until "it shall fill the whole earth."

Thus in a figure, or symbol, God pictures things now shortly to come to pass. This crushing of the feet of the image was to come in the end of the Age, and would be the preparatory step to the establishment of Messiah's Kingdom. So long as these governments would be here, they and Messiah's Kingdom could not co-operate. The former powers are based on selfishness and coercion; Christ's Kingdom will be based on justice, love, mercy, under the Prince of Peace.

The present terrible war is not the great Time of Trouble in the fullest sense of the word, but merely its forerunner. The great Time of Trouble of the Scriptures will be brought on by anarchy—the general uprising of the people: "Every man's hand against his neighbor, no peace to him that goeth out or to him that cometh in." (Zechariah 8:10; 14:13.) Our thought is that this great war will weaken the nations, cripple the world financially, discredit the rulers, and thus open the way for anarchy.

Rome and Constantinople stand for, represent, the two legs of the image which King Nebuchadnezzar saw; for be it remembered that each in turn was the Roman Capital and representative of the image. We are certainly justified in watching with considerable interest the present war and what it may be leading to in the way of involving all the ten kingdoms represented in this prophecy.

But that is not the special point of interest in my subject; rather, I am discussing the character of Messiah's Kingdom, which is to rule the world, overthrow Sin and Death, and uplift humanity from ignorance, superstition, sin, weakness and death. The declaration is that Messiah shall reign until He shall have put down all insubordination, and that the last enemy to be destroyed will be death. —1 Corinthians 15:25, 26.

This is the Kingdom for which the Master Himself taught His followers to pray. Nothing slight or insignificant will be the outcome of that glorious Messianic Reign of a thousand years. At its very beginning Satan will be bound, with all that this signifies—the repression of evil and darkness. For a thousand years the Sun of Righteousness shall pour forth the light of truth and grace upon our poor, fallen race until the the knowledge of God's glory shall fill the whole earth as the waters cover the great deep.

Eventually all wilful opponents of that Kingdom will die the Second Death, from which there will be no redemption, no recovery. But meantime, all the willing and obedient will be rising, not only from the tomb, but also out of all the weaknesses and frailties of the present time, up, up, up, to the fulness of perfection of life, although they will not live again in this perfect sense until the thousand years shall be finished. With the close of the Reign of Righteousness, after it shall have accomplished its work of delivering the groaning creation from the bondage of corruption, sin and death, Messiah will abdicate the Throne; as it is written, "He will deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father, that He may be all in all."—1 Corinthians 15:24.

What a glorious triumph that will be when every creature in Heaven and earth, and under the earth, shall be heard saying, Praise, glory, honor, dominion and might be unto Him that sitteth upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb, forever! (Revelation 5:13.) What a glorious condition will then obtain when there shall be no more crying, no more sighing, no more dying; for all the former things shall have passed away! Ah, He that sitteth upon the Throne said, "Behold, I make all things new!" Glad we are that our great Messiah is about to overthrow sin and evil, about to establish righteousness on a permanent and everlasting foundation, which will ensure that to all eternity God's will shall be done as perfectly on earth as done in Heaven.

I ask you to consider candidly—you need not reply—is there a kingdom in the world to-day that is your judgment fitly represents a Divine government amongst men? Is there a perfect government, is there a single spot in all the earth where God's will is done as it is done in Heaven? You are conversant with history. You know the bloody record which marks its pages. You know that so-called Christian Europe has been drenched with blood more than any other part of the world. You know that the cause of wrong has triumphed as often or oftener than the cause of right. You know that to-day these kingdoms of Europe, styled kingdoms of God, are destroying one another. You know that great guns, great battleships and monster torpedoes, etc., such as the world has never known before, have been prepared by these various nations for use, either aggressively or defensively, against one another, while all claim to be Christ's kingdoms. Is this logical? Is this rational? Most assuredly not!

We must go to the Bible for true information on this subject. It tells us that these kingdoms are not the kingdoms of God, but "kingdoms of this world." It tells us that Satan is the Prince of this world (John 14:30; Ephesians 2:2); that he is "the god of this world," "that now worketh in the hearts of the children of disobedience"—so much more numerous than the children of obedience that he through them holds the world's control.

But with equal clearness the Bible declares the Divine Power and mastery over Satan—that he and his reign of Sin and Death are permitted of God for a limited time and for a special purpose. The testimony tells us that when the due time shall come Messiah shall take His great power and reign, and then Satan shall be bound and all the forces of sin and darkness be restrained. Then the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in its beams to flood the earth with the light of the knowledge of the glory of God.

Come with me and take a cursory view of God's great work thus far accomplished. For more than two thousand years God gave no clear intimation of what He intended to do for the fallen race. Then He made a statement to Abraham, so clear, so explicit, that St. Paul declares that it was a statement of the Gospel in advance. God said to Abraham, I purpose to bless the world. This could only mean, I purpose to relieve them of the curse of death which came upon them through Adam's sin. God added to Abraham, This blessing which I will bring to all the families of the earth will come through your posterity—"In thee and in thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

God's due time for bringing this blessing was still future; the blessing could not come until Messiah should come; but meantime God gave to the natural seed of Abraham, through Moses, the Law Covenant, which offered them eternal life and an inheritance in the Kingdom if they could keep the Law. Of course, they could not keep the Law; for it was the measure of a perfect man's ability, and alas! like the remainder of the world the Israelites were imperfect—sinners. Nevertheless the offer and their attempt to keep the Law brought them great uplift of heart, so that when Jesus came to them a considerable number were ready to receive Him, did receive Him; and He received them. They became sons of God, through the begetting of the Holy Spirit, at Pentecost and afterward. These were the Spiritual Seed of Abraham, begotten of the Holy Spirit, Jesus Himself being the Head.

Israel had been hoping for a share in Messiah's Kingdom; and St. Paul explains, "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, but the Election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." The blinded Israelites are still cast aside, but not forever. The Divine blessing shall come to Natural Israel just as soon as Spiritual Israel shall be completed.—Romans 11:25-24.

What did the Election obtain? Of what did the faithful "Israelites indeed" become heirs by accepting Jesus and by the Pentecostal blessing? We answer that they became identified with Messiah's Kingdom and heirs, or inheritors, of the glorious Promise made to Abraham, that in this Kingdom all the families of the earth should be blessed. But now note that there were not a sufficient number of Jews found worthy to complete the Kingdom class. The Kingdom therefore could not be inaugurated then. God had foreseen this and through the Prophet had promised that some would be gathered from the Gentiles to complete this Kingdom class. The entire work of the Gospel Age has been the calling of this "elect" class for the Kingdom. If we have rightly viewed the matter, the foreordained number will soon have been found, the election will be at an end, the accepted will be glorified as the Kingdom, and Messiah's Reign of Righteousness will begin.

But notice now the course of all belonging to the Kingdom class, throughout this Age. They are not reigning with Christ, but suffering with Christ. Jesus explained this; they are indeed of the Royal Family, because begotten of the Holy Spirit; they are indeed the Kingdom class, because they are affiliated with the great King; but they have not yet entered into their glory. They will do so only by the power of the First Resurrection. Thus it is written, "We must all be changed," because "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God."

Our Lord Himself was the Pattern, the Forerunner of all these. After His consecration and His begetting of the Holy Spirit, He was tested unto death, even the death of the cross, before He experienced His glorious resurrection change and ascended and sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on High. Similarly all of His followers, after consecration, must be tested, their loyalty must be proven, before they can share with Him in "His Resurrection."

Partly for the testing of these, their development takes place in a time when Satan is the Prince of this world, and when his power is permitted to be exercised against them as it was exercised against their Lord. The message to these is, "The Kingdom suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." As our Lord suffered violence from the Prince of this world, so will His followers; for "the disciple is not above his Lord." His promise to His followers is, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Revelation 2:10.

So then we perceive that God's Kingdom class, the followers of Jesus, have been suffering violence, just as did their Leader, for righteousness' sake. That the persecutors had not known and done their evil work intentionally, St. Peter intimates when he says to the Jews, "I wot that in ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers; for if they had known, they would not have crucified the Prince of Life." Hence, in due time their blindness shall be turned away, and they will look upon Him whom they pierced and mourn (Zechariah 12: 10); and God will pour upon them the spirit of prayer and supplication, and forgive them and make the opportunity profitable to as many as shall prove willing.

Meantime, for eighteen centuries, the scribes and Pharisees, the worldly wise and prudent, the rich and the great, have been stumbled at the Stone, and have been broken to pieces thereby, as the Scriptures declare, "the world knoweth us not, even as it knew Him not." God's saintly ones have not been generally the great, the influential, either in church or state, just as Jesus and the Apostles were not in their day. Nevertheless, the Lord knoweth them that are His. Scattered here and there, during the past eighteen centuries, He has been dealing with them, preparing them, polishing them, fitting them as jewels. And He tells us that at our Lord's Second Coming He will make up His jewels—they will constitute the Kingdom class; for "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him."

I am sure you will agree with me that those whom the Lord has been so carefully selecting, instructing and polishing in the School of Christ, who have been so effectively polished with the trials and discipline of evil, will be the very class above all others to whom the glorious dominion of earth may well be entrusted without fear. Only those thoroughly loyal to God and to principle will be in that class.

PEACE IN 1915.

Poincare Tells Diplomats That War Will End This Year.

PARIS, Jan. 2.—The belief that the year now beginning will see the ending of the war was expressed by President Poincare in an address yesterday to members of the diplomatic corps who went to the palace of the Elysee to present New Year's congratulations to the President.

"I do not doubt that next year at this traditional reception we shall celebrate together the establishment of a beneficent peace which solidly based on rectitude and respect of international treaties, will give necessary security to the nations," said the President.

The British Ambassador, Sir Francis Bertie, as dean of the diplomatic corps, presented the congratulations of his colleagues and himself.

Germany's Latest Prisoner List.

BERLIN, Jan. 2.—(By wireless to London.)—The total number of prisoners of war held in Germany at the end of the year amounts to 8,188 officers and 577,275 men.

This is shown in a summary issued from headquarters yesterday, which points out that the list does not include civilians interned in Germany, nor the prisoners taken during the pursuit in Russian Poland, or those in transport.

Of the above total the French contribute 2,459 officers, including seven generals, and 215,905 men; the Russians 3,575 officers, of whom 18 are generals and 306,290 men; the Belgians, 613 officers, including three generals and 86,852 men, and the British, 492 officers and 18,252 men.

Pulp Mill Burned Out.

NEWCASTLE, N.B., Jan. 2.—Three-fourths of the New Brunswick pulp mill at Lower Derby, six miles from here, built six years ago and doing a large business, was burned yesterday, leaving only the chemical and boiler plants. The damage was about $100,000 and is about covered by insurance in some 30 companies. The mill, which generally employed 100 people, had been shut down since the middle of last May.

A City of Changes.

Cattaro, the Austrian sea gate of Montenegro, was held by Montenegro once for a little time. Montenegro acquired it in 1813 with the aid of a British squadron. Any inhabitant of Cattaro who was contemporary with the rise and fall of Napoleon must often have had to pause and think what country he belonged to, for, having been Venetian for centuries, Cattaro became Austrian by the treaty of Campo Formio and Italian in 1805 by the peace of Pressburg. It was absorbed in the French empire in 1810 and wrested from it in 1813, and finally in 1814 Russia compelled Montenegro to give it up to Austria.

A Dictionary Pillow.

I once knew a woman who wrote books, a woman who was very learned in the matter of French and Latin and German and Greek. Often when her nights were dark and dreadful and sleepless, she would lie awake and think of words—what language they were derived from and what their original meanings had been. She told me that it was a great source of pleasure to her and kept her from growing nervous when she felt wide awake. Often through the chill gray dawn I, too, lie awake and think about words to keep myself from the unpleasant imaginings that sometimes haunt me in the nighttime.—Christian Herald.

Had a Frock.

"I want some cloth to make my dolly a dress," said a little girl of seven as she entered a store the other day.

"How much is it?" she asked when the merchant handed her the package.

"Just one kiss," was the reply.

"All right," she said. "Grandma said she would pay you when she came in to-morrow."

The Right Foot Foremost.

Putting the right foot foremost was an old Roman ordination originally regulating the entry of persons into a house or other building and based upon the supposition that the left was unlucky. A boy was kept at the door to see that no one entered the house "left foot first." The phrase quoted is thus seen to be very ancient.

A Soldiers' Paper.

British soldier at the front are not without news of the military operations. A nice, bright little paper is issued at frequent intervals and circulated throughout the British forces. The paper is printed by the Royal Engineers.

Had 60 Wounds.

A wounded soldier who was operated upon in Paris was found to have suffered from no fewer than sixty-eight separate wounds. Most of them were from bullets and pieces of shell. A remarkable fact is that the man will probably recover.

Fight With a Bear.

A fight to the death between a man and a bear is reported from Taluk Jaguthia, in the district of Manbhum, India. Rajkishore Singha, a well-known for his prowess as a big game hunter, was returning home from a hunt in the jungle on the southwestern bank of the river Damodar when he saw a full-grown bear rapidly approaching him. He was about to load his gun when, to his dismay, he found he had fired his last cartridge. The bear made a rush at Singha, who defended himself with the butt end of his gun. Singha, who succeeded in killing the bear, was afterwards found unconscious, and was conveyed to the bungalow of the civil surgeon at Purulia. His body was badly lacerated, but his recovery is expected.

Helping the Preacher.

A preacher, raising his eyes from his desk in the midst of his sermon, was paralyzed with amazement to see his rude boy in the gallery pelting the hearers in the pews below with horse chestnuts. But while the good man was preparing his frown of reproof the young hopeful cried out:

"You tend to your preachin', daddy; I'll keep 'em awake."—Exchange.

MIX-UP AT POLA.

Austrian Fort's Guns Fired on Their Own Battleships.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The Daily News publishes the following despatch from Rome:—

It is now known that the Austrian battleship Radetzky has been docked at Pola, badly damaged. The heavy guns of the Austrian forts during the confusion of the attack by the French submarine Curie opened fire against their warships anchored in the harbor. The commander of the fort committed suicide.

A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Co. from Belgrade says:—

"Four Austrian monitors bombarded Belgrade Thursday. Their fire did slight damage.

"Reports received from Sofia, Bulgaria, of a serious clash between Servians and Bulgarian frontier guards are officially denied here. The truth is,' says the official statement, 'that Servian guards arrested a number of inhabitants of Bagaruevaus, who were trying to leave the country to avoid military service. There were no casualties and there was no conflict with Bulgarian guards."

Seven Young Buccaneers.

Seven boys from the National Nautical School at Portishead, Somerset, Eng., have been engaged in a remarkable exploit.

The boys had been on a cruise in their training vessel Polly, and on returning to headquarters took French leave and rowed up the Severn several miles in one of the ship's boats. Another boat set out in pursuit, and the fugitives thereupon decided to take to the land. They drove their boat on to the shore at a placed called Holesmouth, and then plunged into the mud, which is particularly soft. They presented a remarkable sight when they reached the bank. Their experience knocked the buccaneering spirit out of them, and they submitted to capture by their pursuers, who arrived on the scene a quarter of an hour later.

GERMANY TO PAY $10,000,000,000

English Economist Believes Teutons Should Be Made to Assume Huge War Debt.

The following article was written by L. G. Chiozza Money, M.P., the well known English economist and financial expert, who is the author of "British Trade and the Zollverein Issue," "Riches and Poverty," and other similar works. He is one of the most prominent champions of free trade in England and is an author, business man, and journalist.

The British government, speaking through the mouthpiece of the chancellor of the exchequer, could not and did not in presenting its war budget to the house on Nov. 17, say anything of the question of a war indemnity. The present task of the government is to provide men and money, which means men and materials, for the war, and to carry it to a triumphant conclusion. Even for the private individual it is better to help to organize victory than to talk of its results.

Nevertheless, there is no harm in taking a present glance at the very serious question: Who is to pay for this war when it is over?

I profoundly believe it to be untrue that British workmen will suffer as the result of this war; nay, I believe that it will prove in many ways to work good for our people as a whole.

Enemy Can be Made to Pay.

I believe also that the enemy nations, Germany and Austria-Hungary—I leave the remnant of the Ottoman empire entirely out of account in this connection— ought to be and can in practice be made to pay for this war.

I believe that they ought not only to rebuild the parts of Belgium and France which they have devastated, but to indemnify the allies for the cost of their military and naval operations.

In 1871 the ceding by France of Alsace-Lorraine, which meant a loss of revenue to the French government, did not prevent Germany from obtaining from her defeated foe a war indemnity of five milliards of francs, or, roundly, £200,000,000. In 1915, or, it may be in 1916, the re-cession of Alsace-Lorraine, the formation of an autonomous Poland, etc., will not prevent the allies from demanding and obtaining a proportionate indemnity.

Let us think what this means.

In 1871 France, which so easily paid £200,000,000, and completed the installments before they were due, contained 36,000,000 people. To-day the two enemy empires contain over 118,000,000 people. If, therefore, the Germans, Austrians, and Hungarians of to-day were no richer than the French of 1871 they could easily find a war indemnity of $650,000,000.

Nations Wealthier To-day.

But the Germany and Austria-Hungary of to-day are much wealthier than the France of 1871. It is not too much to say that a payment three times as great could as easily be found. It follows, therefore, that Germany and Austria-Hungary, at the conclusion of the present war, would find it not more difficult to pay a war indemnity of £2,000,000,000 than France found it to pay £200,000,000 forty years ago.

I have heard it said that there is not gold enough in the world to pay a huge war indemnity. The fallacy of thinking in terms of gold, or of 'cash,' was never better exemplified than by this utterance. France did not pay her £200,000,000 in gold, and no nation requires such an amount of gold, to say nothing of £2,000,000,000 worth.

What is wanted in the payment of an indemnity is not gold but wealth—i.e., commodities valued in terms of gold—which is quite another matter.

The allies will not require £2,000,000,000 worth of gold, and would not know what to do with it if they got it. They will demand from Germany and Austria-Hungary so much wealth, and they will have the power to demand that that payment shall be made with convenience to themselves, by installments over a period of years.

Another fallacy is that the receipt of wealth from another country ruins the receivers.

It is said that the receipt by Germany of the war indemnity paid in 1871 and 1872 caused trouble and distress in Germany and that its payment was an actual gain to France.

Indemnity Paid German Debts.

The real truth is that Germany, with her war indemnity, relieved herself of debt, established a gold currency, and aided her traders with capital.

It is abundantly possible for the governments of Britain, France, Russia and Belgium so to manipulate the war indemnity as to make it exceedingly profitable to their peoples.

As to Britain, it would be possible for the British government to repay to investors the war loans raised to pay for the war, and those investors would be in a position to make reinvestments, either in the United Kingdom, or in the British empire, or elsewhere. The British taxpayer would be relieved of taxes which he would otherwise have to bear to furnish interest on the loans.

Do not let us be misled in this connection by talk of big figures. How many writers have expressed astonishment at the ease with which France in 1871-72 found the "enormous" sum of £200,000,000. All that otherwise have to bear to furnish

And when 118,000,000 Germans, Austrians, and Hungarians are, in due course, presented with a bill for, say £2,000,000,000, they will be asked for £17 each. And if they are given five years in which to do it they will be mulcted for five years in a little more than £3 each per annum.

GERMAN "MOVIES" ALSO BULLETIN THE WAR NEWS

Audience Moved Alternately to Enthusiasm and Laughter, With Occasional Songs

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 25.—A man who recently saw a moving picture show in Germany describes the performance as follows:

A picture of the Kaiser standing with field glasses in the trenches. Delirious enthusiasm. The picture had to be shown over and over again On the screen a hand writes the latest war news: "An English battleship, believed to be the Warrior, was this morning off Dover torpedoed by a German submarine and sunk. The catastrophe lasted only some few minutes and all efforts to save lives were hopeless."

The next picture: Prince Henry of Prussia, the Kaiser's brother, standing in the uniform of an Admiral on the bridge. The audience sings the "Wacht am Rhein." The hand appears again on the screen and writes the following telegram: "At the battle at Soissons our soldiers have taken 27,000 English prisoners. They threw down their guns and cried for bread."

Next picture: The Crown Prince on horseback. A rather subdued applause followed. On the screen the hand thereupon writes: "A German squadron has this morning reached Ireland; sailors have made a landing in the town (name not permitted by censor)." The audience gets up and sings "Deutschland, Deutschland, Ueber Alles!"

Next telegram: "King George of England has been out shooting partridges and contracted a cold. The King has been laid up, but it is understood that the King, in the course of some few days, will be able again to take part in the deer hunting about Windsor". Wild laughter, and the portrait of the King is shown in hunting costume.

Next picture: The Czar in evening dress. On the screen the hand writes: "The Czar of Russia made a false step at the dance last night at the Winter Palace in St. Petersburg. Following the advice of specialists, the Czar will spend the winter at a mild climate to recuperate."

The next picture: King Albert in military uniform. Deep silence; one could almost hear a pin drop on the floor.

Then my playgoer had enough and left the show.

CRAIG KENNEDY TO DECIDE COLOUR OF MRS. LITTLE

Detroit Woman, Sued for Divorce as Negro, Appeals to Arthur B. Reeve to Prove Fiction

Arthur B. Reeve, creator of "Craig Kennedy," the detective who solves the most baffling mysteries through advanced scientific agencies, declared his belief recently that it is perfectly feasible to determine whether one is Caucasian, Mongolian or African through a single drop of blood.

A letter is on its way to Mr. Reeve from Mrs. Alma Little, of Detroit, who has been sued for divorce on the ground that she is of negro blood, appealing to him to assist her in proving that she is of white. Mrs. Little's appeal is based on "The Toxin of Death," a story which Mr. Reeve wrote some time ago, in which he incidentally touched upon the theory that racial tendencies are revealed through the blood. Mrs. Little, therefore, is asking Mr. Reeve to turn fiction into fact.

"It can be done—in this case," said Mr. Reeve. "I have not heard from Mrs. Little yet, but if she does make her appeal to Craig Kennedy, that expert will simply take a drop of her blood, allow it to crystallize, and then put it under the microscope after the method of Dr. Edward Tyson Reichart, of the University of Pennsylvania. His test, I feel, will decide as to what race she belongs."

The Kennedy Theory.

Mr. Reeve took down the volume, "The Dream Doctor," which is a collection of the Craig Kennedy stories recently published by the Hearst International Literature Company. Turning to the star, "The Toxin of Death," he said:

"Here is the quotation to which Mrs. Little probably has reference." Dr. Kennedy was explaining a case to his friend, and he said:

"There is a blood test so delicate that one might almost say that he could identify a criminal by his very blood crystals—the finger prints, so to speak, of his blood. It was by means of these 'hemoglobins,' if I may call them so, that I was able to get on the right trail. For the fact is that a man's blood is not like that of any other living creature. Blood of different men, of men and women, differs. I believe that in time we shall be able to refine this test to tell the exact individual, too.

"What is the principle? It is that the hemo-globin, or red colouring matter of the blood forms crystals. That has long been known, but working on this fact, Dr. Reichert and of Pennsylvania, have made some wonderful discoveries.

Can Tell White and Black.

"We could distinguish human from animal blood before, it is true. But the discoveries of these two scientists take us much further. By means of blood crystals we can distinguish the blood of man from that of animals, and in addition that of white men from that of negroes and of the other races. It is often the only way of differentiating between various kinds of blood.

"The variations in crystals in the blood are in part of form and in part of molecular structure, the latter being discovered only by means of the polarizing microscope. A blood crystal is only one two thousand two hundred and fiftieth of an inch in length and one-nine-thousandth of an inch in breadth, and yet, minute as these crystals are, the discovery of immense medicolegal importance. Crime may now be traced by blood crystals."

All this was fiction, in which Mr. Reeve at the time he wrote his story was anticipating the experiments which Dr. Reichert was then conducting.

"It is a fact now," said Mr. Reeve yesterday, "and I recommend that Mrs. Little turn to Dr. Reichert. I understand he has completed a series of experiments which eventually will enable him not only to distinguish between individuals by his blood tests, but also to determine from a drop of blood the parents of any given child."

CARS SHOULD BE USED ALL WNITER

E. W. Headington Gives Reasons Why Automobiles Should Not Be Laid Up in Cold Weather.

"It is far better to keep the automobile in service throughout the winter than it is to put it in storage. The cars now built are constructed so as to be equally as serviceable during cold weather as during the warm summer months," states E. W. Headington, of the Haynes Automobile Company, distributer in this territory for the Haynes automobile.

"When a storage battery is allowed to stand for any length of time it gradually becomes discharged, even when no current is being used. It is absolutely necessary to charge the battery every two or three weeks during the period of its non-use if the battery is to come through the storage undamaged, and some arrangement must be provided for charging the battery. Either the engine in the car may be allowed to remain idle, or the battery may be taken to a charging station. As long as the car is kept in actual use there should be no need of this extra attention if the least care is given the battery.

"When an automobile is stored through the winter the oil and grease have a tendency to gum up and become solid, especially at points where it is spread out in thin films. Corrosion takes place at many points and there is a general deterioration. It is not safe to put any car into service again in the spring after it has been stored unless it is given a complete overhauling, and this is an expensive proposition. The same conditions prevail in an automobile as in any finely adjusted machine.

"The leading designers take into account the fact that an automobile should properly be an all year car by providing suitable protection for winter use. The electric cranking motor will start a cold engine that would refuse to start if cranked by hand. The engine is turned over more rapidly by the starting motor. A cold engine has lost the terror it once had for the man who formerly had to crank by hand. Also, from the economical side, it is better to keep the machine in service where it is producing results than to lose its service by allowing it to stand idle for several months."

WHO BEAT THE PRUSSIAN GUARDS?

Sir John French's army order thanking the First Army Corps and its assistants from the Second Army Corps for their "splendid resistance to the German attack," including that of the fifteen fresh battalions of the German Guards Corps, would throw further light on the composition of the force that defeated the German Guards if it were possible to publish the regiments of these divisions.

That, however, is not yet possible, but from various sources one can name several regiments that played a part in that all-important victory.

Lord Lincolnshire, speaking at Slough, said that the thin khaki line that stopped and smashed the Prussian Guard was made up of "a certain portion of the Brigade of Guards, the Black Watch, and the Oxford and Bucks Light Infantry." From letters now received from soldiers at the front the Guardsmen can be identified as the Irish Guards.

Interviews show that the King's Liverpool Rifles (which contains many Welshmen) also had a valiant share, together with the Northamptonshires and the Inniskillen Fusiliers are said to have heavily punished the Germans as they retreated.

It is thus clear that the German corps d'elite were up against a comprehensive representation of these islands—an Irish regiment, largely Roman Catholic, an Irish Orange Protestant regiment, Scottish Highlanders, a Home Counties, a midland and a northern English regiment. The honours are thus divided through the United Kingdom.

Panic in Constantinople.

ATHENS, Jan. 2.—(Via London.)—According to Constantinople advices which have reached here, the Austrian and German embassies in the Turkish capital are transferring their archives to Asia Minor, fearing that action is imminent by the British and French fleets against the Dardanelles and the capital. Foreigners, it is stated, are also preparing to quit the capital for the interior.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

UNCLE FRANK

When Mr. and Mrs. Luther Elwood agreed to separate they left everything pertaining to their separation to Frank Elwood, the husband's brother, who was a lawyer. This meant not only that he was to procure the divorcement, but to arrange for the care of the children, and he was given carte blanche to take any measure in the premises he might see fit.

Frank placed all the blame for the trouble on his brother, who had been somewhat gay during his bachelorhood and was not inclined to give up his attentions to other women after his marriage. His wife was very rigid as to the actions of her husband and made him feel that he was too circumscribed. Frank endeavoured to convince his brother that the home was of far more importance than the pleasure to be derived from attentions to any woman who would so far demean herself as to accept them from another woman's husband, and he had better accede to his wife's wishes and confine himself to her. But Luther declared that his attentions to other women were harmless and he did not propose to be dictated to by a jealous woman.

Whereupon the lawyer laid down the following plan for the couple's guidance: Both should leave the home and reside elsewhere. The children were to be left where they were under the care of a woman to be provided for the purpose. The father and mother would be permitted to visit their offspring once a month, the father on the 1st, the mother on the 15th. The lawyer agreed to procure the divorce as soon as possible.

This plan was objected to by both parties, whereupon Frank Elwood declared that he would have nothing to do with the matter. But it was essential that the care of the children be provided for while the divorce proceedings were pending, and, since the couple could find no one else on whom they could agree to manage the affair, they finally gave in and left it in Frank's hands.
